This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. Publishers' Announcement

The single aim of the publishers has been to make this a complete and accurate Michigan Digest of Michigan case law for Michigan lawyers. Every state has some features in its law that require special treatment in order to avoid submergence of important local law in the topical arrangement.

Arrangement.

The topical arrangement on the whole is based upon that of the Jacobs and Chaney Digest, which was prepared by Michigan lawyers and intended to meet the problems presented by the law in Michigan. Two generations of Michigan lawyers are familiar with it, and it has long been recognized as the best digest the state ever had. Some changes have of course been necessary, new subjects, such as the Workmen's Compensation Law, have come into being, while on the other hand other topics, such as Covenant, Debt and Trover, have become obsolete.

As most legal questions present the application of principles rather than the nature or existence of the principle, treatment in specific rather than general topics has been sought.

Reports Covered.

The volumes digested comprise all Michigan reports to the end of 202 Michigan and every case therein, except those which disclosed no point. In addition many decisions of the United States courts, not only the Supreme Court but also the District, Circuit and Circuit Courts of Appeals, have been digested; either because they passed on the statutes of Michigan or matters of Michigan law or because they were decided on writ of error to judgments of the Michigan courts.

Statute Index.

A feature new to digesting will be found in the references to related statutes under specific sections of the digest. These references direct the user to the particular sections of the Compiled Laws bearing upon the subject. They serve not only as a reminder linking case law to the statute law, but also as a direct citation to the statute. The impracticability of combining in a digest a complete general index to the statutes must be apparent. Indeed in many topics, such as Municipal Corporations and Corporations, the variety of the statutes and the number of the subjects treated forbid any effort to cite the statutes in this manner.

Topical Index.

The Topical Index is commended to the special attention of the user of this digest. Immediately following this preface is the Topical Index, which is a complete table of contents as well as a cross-index in condensed form to the entire digest and all of the supplements which will follow it. Every topic heading used in any digest of Michigan reports or in any general compendium of law is contained in it with a reference to the topic or topics in the New Michigan Digest where the subject-matter will be treated. So far as known no state digest has ever contained such a finding device and it is offered as a valuable aid, which the user should regularly consult, since it frees him from the necessity of memorizing any particular system of classification by embodying all known systems in one alphabetical sequence.

General Index.

The Topical Index described above must be distinguished from the general index to the work which will appear in the last volume of the set. This index will be far more comprehensive and by way of analogy will bear the same relation to the Topical Index that an index in a textbook bears to the table of contents.

Cross-References.

The cross-references will be found very complete and exhaustive. Wherever possible they refer specifically to the section or paragraph to which reference is directed. In this connection care must be taken to distinguish references to sections from paragraph references. The former carry the section mark, thus, "See § 472, ante"; while the paragraph mark is used in connection with the latter, thus, "See ¶ 224, post."

To save space and reduce the bulk of the work as far as possible many cross-references have been grouped under comprehensive cross-reference heads. Thus under the head "Abatement to Absence" will be found a complete index to subjects which could be included under an alphabetical arrangement within the first and last word of the cross-reference head.

Where the title of a topic contains more than one word, as a rule only the first word is referred to in making a cross-reference. Thus the topic Payment, Tender and Deposit is usually referred to simply as Payment.

Forms and Maxims.

Forms and Maxims are two of the headings used in this digest. Under Forms are collected numerous citations to cases which contain forms which passed judicial scrutiny and received approval. Nearly all of them have been taken from cases decided within the last two or three decades. A large proportion of them are instructions to juries. The paragraph merely describes the subject-matter of the form without attempting to set it out in the digest verbatim. Maxims is made up of paragraphs consisting of the maxim and the citation of the case where it is found and is applied.

Table of Cases.

A full Table of Cases Digested will be found in the last volume of the digest with references to the places in the digest where the case appears. The memorandum cases will also be included in such table, denoted by the abbreviation "mem."

Supplements.

The classification and internal topical arrangement have been adopted with a view to supplements or cumulative digests which are to follow this digest. The same topical arrangement and section numbering will be followed in subsequent digests.

CALLAGHAN & COMPANY.

TOPICAL INDEX.

All of the words or names in general use as names of topics by digesters and writers of encyclopedias, in so far as they have applicability to Michigan case law, are collected below.

Topic headings used in this digest are in BOLD FACE TYPE. Those used in other books, but not in this, are in capitals and small letters followed by references to topic headings in this digest where the matter is treated.

In a very few instances there may be topic headings in this digest under which there will not yet be any decisions, but as the classification plan is designed to be permanent and to be followed hereafter in the supplemental Quarterly and Biennial Digests, they have been provided as reasonably necessary to a complete and systematic classification.

The searcher who is familiar with any system of classification can find the desired topic easily and quickly by means of this index, especially since the topic headings have been chosen with a view to preserving terms familiar to Michigan lawyers and descriptive of the incidents and features of Michigan practice.

A DIGEST

OF

ALL THE REPORTED DECISIONS OF THE COURTS OF MICHIGAN

VOLUME I

ABANDONMENT.

TREATS of the intentional relinquishment to the public at large of a property or personal right, excluding loss of property or right by surrender or nonclaim towards a particular person.

Abandonment of rights or claims usually is in the nature of a relinquishment or waiver, where the possession of tangible property is not involved, and accordingly specific topics treating of the particular right should be consulted, e. g., abandonment of easements, see Easements, IV.

Abandonment of actions or proceedings therein, see specific topics like Appeal; Discontinuance; Election and Waiver; Motions.

Abandonment and nonsupport of wife or child, see Divorce; Parent and Child; Crimes, II.

Lost property not intentionally abandoned, see Property; Conversion.

Relinquishment of right by waiver, see Election and Waiver.

¶ 1. An intention to abandon logs placed upon a rollway on a river was not established by the mere failure to exercise the right of removal, as both the intention to abandon and actual relinquishment must be shown.—Log Owners Booming Co. v. Hubbell, 135 Mich. 65.

¶ 2. In replevin of lumber cut from logs taken from a rollway on a river, the main issue of abandonment was properly left to the jury, where the defendant gave testimony tending to show that the logs had been in such rollway from 20 to 30 years, that they had become imbedded in the sand and earth, and that grass and bushes had grown over many of them, and plaintiff claimed that they were placed upon the rollway with the intention of conveying them to places of manufacture and sale, and that there was no intent to abandon.—Log Owners Booming Co. v. Hubbell, 135 Mich. 65.

¶ 3. In replevin to recover lumber made from logs placed upon a rollway on a river, where abandonment was the main issue, testimony by a witness for defendants that he had consulted an attorney about his right to the logs, and that he told defendants that the attorney advised him that he had a right to them, was clearly incompetent.—Log Owners Booming Co. v. Hubbell, 135 Mich. 65.

ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

TREATS of "the suspension of a suit by any matter arising after its commencement," the survivability of the cause of action, and the continuation of abated actions by proceedings to revive them.

Analysis.

¶ 1. The mere abatement of a suit in equity is a state of suspension with capacity for revival.—Zoellner v. Zoellner, 46 Mich. 511.

What causes survive, see post §§ 16, 17.
Mode of pleading or suggesting fact of death, see post § 18.
Proper person to be substituted, see post §§ 19, 20.
Effect of death of sole party or of all coparties, see Comp L. 1915, §§ 12385, 12387.

¶ 2. While at common law the death of a party to a suit terminated the suit, in equity the suit was simply suspended and might be revived. The equity rule through the adoption of statutes prescribing the practice to be followed in the event of the death of a party has become the rule in the law courts.—Brown v. Fletcher's Estate, 146 Mich. 401; affirmed in 210 U. S. 82, L. ed. 964, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 702.

¶ 3. Where an assignee in bankruptcy or a sole administrator is made a defendant in the foreclosure of a mortgage upon lands on which the estate which he represents has a prior mortgage, his death before decree abates the suit as to such estate unless proceedings are renewed against his successor.—Avery v. Ryerson, 34 Mich. 362.

¶ 4. The death of a debtor seems to extinguish, or at least suspend, the right of the creditor to prosecute a creditor's bill, when no lien exists.—Beith v. Porter, 119 Mich. 365.

Death of tortfeasor as abating action for wrongful death, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 1022-1040.

Effect of death of one coparty, see Comp. L. 1915, § 12384.

¶ 5. Upon the death of one defendant the cause of action, originally joint, survives against his codefendant alone, and his administrator cannot be joined; and upon the death of the codefendant the cause of action survives only against the latter's executors.—Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 Mich. 263.

¶ 6. On the death of a defendant in ejectment the action may be carried on against surviving defendants, and the personal representatives or heirs of the deceased defendant cannot be brought in.—People ex rel. Hoffman v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 40 Mich. 351; Hoffman v. Harrington, 41 Mich. 223.

¶ 7. Where decree was rendered after the death of one of the defendants, whose interest in the premises involved in the suit was held by such defendant and his wife, also a party to the suit, by the entireties, upon default of the defendants after personal service, held that it would be unnecessary to suggest on the record the death of the decedent and such decree would not be void because of his death priod thereto.—Cook v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 197 Mich. 19.

¶ 8. A suit for divorce and injunction against alienation of the husband's property in fraud of the wife, to which is joined as defendant the husband's alleged fraudulent transferree, does not, in so far as it is an injunction bill, abate by the husband's death.—Smith v. Waalkes, 109 Mich. 16.

Mode of pleading or objection, see Pleading, III.

Want of parties due to extinction of interest, see also post ¶ 23.

¶ 9. A misjoinder of defendants in an action ex contractu will not, in view of How. St., § 6409, and Cir. Ct. Rule 27, adopted pursuant thereto to prevent such a result, operate to abate the suit, though all were joined in a single count.—Durgin v. Smith, 115 Mich. 239.

¶ 10. Where a widow and her minor children sued as cobeneficiaries upon an insurance policy, the failure to designate her as next friend was held no ground for abatement.—Sick v. Michigan Aid Ass'n, 49 Mich. 50.

¶ 11. The resignation of an administrator party and appointment of his successor abates the suit.—Barnett v. Powers, 40 Mich. 317.

¶ 12. Mandamus against members of the Railroad Crossing Board as officers, to compel official action, did not abate because of the expiration of the terms of office of several of the members, but an order for the writ was directed to run to the existing members.—Wisconsin, M. & N. R. Co. v. State Railroad Crossing Board, 119 Mich. 505.

§ 6. Transfer or extinction of party's interest.

In equitable suits, see post § 7.

Necessity of calling to attention of court, see post § 18.

Death of party in divorce suit, see post § 17, ante ¶ 8.

¶ 13. Where, pending action upon a demand resting upon an implied assumpsit or an express contract, such demand is assigned, the suit may go on in the assignor's name.—Peters v. Gallagher, 37 Mich. 407; Moon v. Harder, 38 Mich. 566.

¶ 14. An action of ejectment is not abated by plaintiff's conveying the premises, but it may still be prosecuted by plaintiff or his representative, and a judgment against defendant will inure to the grantee's benefit.—McKenzie v. A. P. Cook Co., 113 Mich. 452.

¶ 15. The expiration of plaintiff's title pending suit in ejectment and before trial operates in partial abatement of the action.—Hurd v. Raymond, 50 Mich. 369.

¶ 16. The sale of negotiable paper pending suit thereon does not abate the suit or affect the issue.—Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 Mich. 263; Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 55 Mich. 456.

¶ 17. Where, pending suit on an implied assumpsit, plaintiff assigns all his interest in the claim to a third party, defendant cannot object to the suit's going on in the assignor's name.—Peters v. Gallagher, 37 Mich. 407.

¶ 19. A pending suit is not abated by a release obtained from plaintiff in her attorney's absence, by duress and fraud, of her claim for damages; where, for example, she was induced by threats, to release, for a consideration, such claim, in order to save her son from a criminal prosecution.—Welser v. Welch, 112 Mich. 134.

¶ 20. Though an assignee would ordinarily be entitled to prosecute the garnishment proceedings begun by his assignor on the claim, it abates where the garnishee thereupon pays the claim to the assignee.—Burnham v. Home Ins. Co., 119 Mich. 588.

At law, see ante § 6.

¶ 21. When a defendant in chancery is once lawfully impleaded he cannot, by disposing of his interests, step out of the position of defendant, but he continues, usually, for the purposes of the suit, to represent his original interests.—Mickle v. Maxfield, 42 Mich. 304.

¶ 22. Dismissal of a bill in equity does not necessarily follow the expiration pending suit of a right alleged therein, if it also seeks to enforce some other right which has not expired.—Holcomb v. Mosher, 50 Mich. 252.

¶ 23. A court of equity must have the real parties before it. As soon as a complainant assigns his right the suit ceases as to him, and becomes as defective for want of a complainant as if it had abated by his death. It can be restored to activity only by bringing the rights of the assignee before the court.—Wallace v. Dunning, W. 416; Webster v. Hitchcock, 11 Mich. 56; Brewer v. Dodge, 28 Mich. 359.

¶ 24. When one defendant assigns to complainant, this is equivalent to a dismissal of the bill as to that defendant, and if the principal relief was sought as to that defendant—all other matters being subsidiary—the suit goes down entirely.—Widner v. Olmstead, 14 Mich. 124.

¶ 25. One of several defendants to a bill in equity to enforce a vendor's lien assigned his interest in the property in controversy to the complainant, and, with such defendant's consent, an order was entered taking the bill as confessed against him. Held, that this arrangement was equivalent tot a dismissal of the bill as to him; and as the purchase-money was only alleged to be due from him, and not from the other defendants, no lien could be enforced as to any of them.—Widner v. Olmstead, 14 Mich. 124.

¶ 26. Complainant in a bill to remove cloud from title conveyed the premises by warranty deed to a third person after the commencement of suit and before the hearing, who retained, however, part of the consideration to be paid when the title should be cleared; no question of complainant's right to prosecute the suit after such conveyance was raised until the hearing. Held, that she had not parted with her whole interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and that she should have relief.—Begole v. Hershey, 86 Mich. 130.

The effect of the dissolution, insolvency or expiration of a corporation, including its effect on pending actions and causes of action, involves the questions of succession to the properties of such corporations and the rights of creditors to such a degree that all such matters are treated in Corporations, XXIII.

Ouster by commencement of other superior proceedings, see post § 14.
Pleading abatement for service procured by fraud, see Pleading, III.
Second suit where first is lacking in jurisdiction, see also post ¶ 50.

¶ 28. There is an abatement of replevin by justice's removal from his township without a legal transfer of his docket.—Kidder v. Merryhew, 32 Mich. 470.

Necessity that two actions be identical, see post §§ 11-13.

Pendency of plea of former action pending as preventing hearing of motion to dismiss second suit, see Discontinuance, Dismissal and Nonsuit.

¶ 29. While a suit is pending, no new suit can be commenced for the same cause of action.—Gray v. Jones, 80 Mich. 504.

¶ 30. Pendency of a prior suit in which there could be no recovery because it was prematurely brought cannot be pleaded in abatement.—Blackwood v. Brown, 34 Mich. 4.

¶ 31. There can be no presumption of the identity of causes of action in different suits between the same parties where the later suit is for a cause that did not legally accrue in time for the earlier.—Hart v. Lindley, 50 Mich. 20.

¶ 32. Pendency of another suit involving the same subject-matter is not a bar; if relied on at all, it must be pleaded in abatement.—Near v. Mitchell, 23 Mich. 382; Sullings v. Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co., 36 Mich. 313.

¶ 33. A plaintiff who, after entering rule for discontinuance, should refuse to pay the taxed costs when demanded, would lose the benefit of his rule, and a second suit begun for the same cause of action would be abated —the costs being still unpaid—by the first.—Slocomb v. Thatcher, 20 Mich. 52.

¶ 34. The entry of a rule in the common rule book to discontinue a suit, together with notice of the rule to the defendant, accompanied by an offer to pay costs when taxed —it not appearing that the costs had been taxed—is sufficient to justify a verdict for the plaintiff in a suit brought upon the same cause of action, and in which the issue was joined upon the plea of another action pending.—Slocomb v. Thatcher, 20 Mich. 52.

¶ 35. Parties to a suit to foreclose a mortgage stipulated that "the same is hereby discontinued without cost to either party and without prejudice." No order of discontinuance was entered. After the filing of said stipulation complainant started a new suit. Defendant filed a plea of abatement on the ground of suit already pending. Held, the plea was properly overruled since by the stipulation the suit was discontinued, no order being necessary.—Chronowski v. Zielinski, 168 Mich. 590.

§ 11. ——Different parties or issues.

Difference between scope of legal and equitable suits, see post § 12.

¶ 36. It is necessary for the parties seeking the abatement of a present action by reason of the pendency of one already commenced to plead and prove the connection of the former action with the same subject-matter; the relations of the parties must be the same in both actions and the relief sought practically identical.—Reis v. Applebaum, 170 Mich. 506.

¶ 37. A party cannot demand abatement of a present action by reason of the pendency of one already commenced, where the second cause of action decides much more than can be decided by the first.—Reis v. Applebaum, 170 Mich. 506.

¶ 38. A vendor's action for the price of goods sold is not abated by the pendency of an action by the vendee to recover for defects in the goods, where the vendor has not asserted his claim by way of set-off in the vendee's suit.—Jennison Hardware Co. v. Godkin, 112 Mich. 57.

¶ 40. The fact that other suits are pending against a corporation involving the same questions is no reason for quashing quo warranto proceedings brought to test the right of the corporation to exercise its franchise as a corporation, where none of the other suits were brought for that specific purpose. —People ex rel. Attorney General v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 149 Mich. 122.

¶ 41. Plaintiff was an agent of defendant having charge of defendant's retail departments and receiving, as compensation, a commission on the sales made. The contract between defendant and the owner of the store in which one of said departments was located was canceled, defendant receiving a bonus for releasing its rights under the contract, and agreeing, according to plaintiff's claim, to give plaintiff his commission upon said bonus. In a suit to recover the commission upon the bonus thus agreed upon, held, that the pendency of a prior action by plaintiff upon his first contract with defendant is not a bar to this suit, the causes of action being distinct.—Muir v. Kalamazoo Corset Co., 155 Mich. 624.

§ 12. ——Different courts; law and equity.

Power of equity to assume jurisdiction when another action is pending at law on the subject-matter, see Equity, III, A.

Action on debt pending suit to foreclose mortgage, see Foreclosure, VI.

¶ 42. Where a civil and criminal action both lie, the law regards the injury as double, and one action cannot be plended in abatement or bar of the other.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

¶ 43. An action at law is not, as a general rule, abated or barred by the pendency of a suit in equity.—Joslin v. Millspaugh, 27 Mich. 517; Goodrich v. White, 39 Mich. 489; Kinney v. Robison, 52 Mich. 389; Drain Commissioner v. Baxter, 57 Mich. 127; Wheeler v. Hatheway, 58 Mich. 77.

¶ 44. A plea in abatement to a declaration on the ground of pendency of another action for the same cause on the equity side of the court is not good, since plaintiff may choose the form of action which will best promote the ends of justice.—Monier v. Mizner, How. N. P. 61.

¶ 45. Pendency of a chancery suit by a partnership for an accounting and to restrain a sale of a portion of the partnership property under a levy upon the half of one partner in such property, and offering to consent to a sale and to the holding of the property subject to the levy if found valid, is consistent with and not ground for abating a subsequent replevin suit to recover the property taken under the levy.—Ernest v. Woodworth, 124 Mich. 1.

¶ 47. The pendency of a state suit may be pleaded in abatement of one in the federal courts, and vice versa.—People ex rel. Granger v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 27 Mich. 406, dictum approving Earl v. Raymond, 4 McLean 233.

¶ 48. Proceedings in one court should not be stayed on account of a suit pending in another, unless the two suits are identical; therefore a suit in rem in admiralty does not suspend a common-law action on the same subject in a state court.—People ex rel. Granger v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 27 Mich. 406.

¶ 49. A plea in abatement to a suit in a state court because of the pendency of a prior action in the federal court should be sustained where the bill in the first case was by two heirs of a testator against one heir individually and in his administrative capacity to secure a portion of the real estate of decedent on the ground that they were unintentionally left out of the will by testator and knew nothing of their rights thereunder until long after probate of the will, and the bill in the case in the state court was by such defendant in the former case individually, and as executor of testator's estate, against another heir who was not party to the first suit, for an accounting and partition of the real estate, and alleged therein that complainant and defendant were entitled to all of such real estate. —Pinel v. Campsell, 190 Mich. 347.

¶ 50. The dismissal of a bill in equity for the cancellation of an order of the Michigan Railroad Commission was affirmed on appeal, and a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States denied both by the state Supreme Court and a judge of the United States Supreme Court; thereafter, a new bill seeking the same relief was filed in the federal court and dismissed on the ground that the complainant having selected the state court as his forum must abide the result, from which decision an appeal is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. Held, that as the federal court was without jurisdiction, the proceedings therein would not prevent the issuance of a writ of mandamus by the state court to put such order of the Railroad Commission into immediate effect.—Michigan Railroad Commission v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 182 Mich. 234.

¶ 51. Where, on the same day that a receiver was appointed in Indiana for a mutual benefit association organized in that state but having local branches here, a member of a local branch brought suit in this state upon his certificate, taking out also an ancillary writ of garnishment, the pendency of the proceedings in which the appointment of the receiver was made did not in the absence of proof that such appointment preceded the commencement of the action here, deprive plaintiff of the remedy he was seeking to enforce at law.—Cohen v. Supreme Sitting of Order of Iron Hall, 105 Mich. 283.

Various proceedings like corporate insolvency, bankruptcy, and the like, have the effect of transferring the title or custody of the property or management of the estate of the party affected, and in that way may work an abatement. Such matters are treated in specific topics, e. g., Assignments for Creditors, § 37; Corporations, XXIII; Estates of Decedents, V, XI; Receivers. See also ante this topic §§ 6, 7.

¶ 52. An action to recover damages for an illegal occupancy is not abated by subsequent proceedings to condemn the land for railway purposes.—Callanan v. Port Huron & N. W. R. Co., 61 Mich. 15.

¶ 53. An attachment suit was held not abated ab initio by the pendency of a suit commenced on the same day against the same defendant for the same cause of action, but would be made good by a discontinuance of the other suit before plea in abatement.—Wales v. Jones, 1 Mich. 254.

¶ 54. Payment before decree in foreclosure for a single instalment abates the suit, and payment after would have the same effect but for Comp. L. 1871, § 5157, How. St., § 6712.—Brown v. Thompson, 29 Mich. 72.

Distinction between statutory right of action for instantaneous death caused by wrongful act and that for injuries resulting in death, which by statute survives, see Death by Wrongful Act.

Actions which survive, see Comp. L. 1915, § 12383.

¶ 55. The Survival Act (Comp. L. 1897, § 10117) applies to rights or causes of action as well as to actions.—Love v. Detroit, J. & C. R. Co., 170 Mich. 1.

¶ 56. Under the rules of the common law a cause of action does not survive where the person alone is affected by the injury, and no property interests are affected.—People v. Kemppainen, 163 Mich. 186.

¶ 58. The death of a defendant in ejectment abates the action; the defendant's right descends to his heir, against whom a new cause of action arises.—People ex rel. Hoffman v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 40 Mich. 351, and see Hoffman v. Harrington, 41 Mich. 223.

¶ 59. Where a defendant in an ejectment suit dies, the suit as to him abates and a new suit must be instituted under Comp. L. 1897, § 9723, against his heirs.—Conley v. Sinclair, 163 Mich. 306.

¶ 60. The death of the defendant in ejectment abates the action; but plaintiff may bring a new action for the same cause at any time within one year thereafter (How. St., § 8707).—McKenzie v. A. P. Cook Co., 113 Mich. 452.

¶ 62. The right of action for treble damages for cutting timber, given under Comp. L. 1897, § 11204, would pass to the personal representative of the deceased owner, and is assignable, since the injury, if any, is to the estate and not to the person of the owner.—Holmes v. Loud, 149 Mich. 410.

¶ 63. A right of action based wholly upon the destruction by a widow of unrecorded deeds of lands to her husband, the title to which she afterwards secures in her own name in fraud of the rights of his heirs, sounds in fraud, and does not survive at common law or under How. St., § 7397, providing that actions "for damages done to real or personal estate" shall survive.—Stebbins v. Dean, 82 Mich. 385.

¶ 64. Since a right of action for an injury to the business of a person as the result of an unlawful combination of business rivals is not one for "fraudulent representations or conduct" injurious to "the person, property or rights of another, for which an action on the case for fraud or deceit" will lie, it does not survive under Section 2 of Act No. 195, Pub. Acts 1897, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 13955 (affirmed by equally divided court).—Frohlich v. Deacon, 181 Mich, 255.

¶ 65. The right to rescind the transfer of a promissory note because of fraud in procuring such transfer survives to the personal representatives of him who transferred the note.—Coon v. Dennis, 111 Mich. 450.

¶ 66. Where a mortgagee had been induced by the mortgagor's fraudulent representations to apply in part payment upon his mortgage a note and mortgage owned by the mortgagor, and where, upon the mortgagee's discovering the fraud the mortgagor, in settlement, had promised to pay to the mortgagee the amount of the note and mortgage if he failed to collect it by suit which he agreed to bring upon said note, and which was brought without making collection, the cause of action thus arising against the mortgagor was not based upon the fraud practiced by him, and therefore survived against his estate upon his death.—Bryant v. Rich's Estate, 104 Mich. 124.

¶ 68. In case of the death of a person who has been injured by a defective highway, his right of action survives to his administrator, How. St., § 1446g (Laws 1887, Act No. 264), did not prevent survival.—Roberts v. City of Detroit, 102 Mich. 64; Racho v. City of Detroit, 90 Mich. 92.

Survival of bill for divorce and injunction on death of one defendant, see also ante ¶ 8.

¶ 72. Death of defendant husband pending suit for divorce, does not abate suit so as to preclude awarding permanent alimony.—Selbly v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 584.

¶ 73. The death of the complainant in divorce extinguishes the suit and the whole ground of action, and, though the action itself survives, a defendant who has taken no appeal from a decree granted therein cannot obtain by petition a standing in court for the purpose of attacking such decree.—Zoellner v. Zoellner, 46 Mich. 511.

¶ 74. The death of a wife who is complainant in a suit to protect a homestead right makes no difference if children survive.—Shoemaker v. Collins, 49 Mich. 595.

¶ 75. The death of the judgment debtor puts an end to a creditor's bill where no lien has attached.—Jones v. Smith, W. 115; German-American Seminary v. Saenger, 66 Mich. 249.

¶ 76. A creditor's bill, which sought the setting aside of a conveyance to the debtor's wife of land bought and paid for by the debtor, must be dismissed where the death of the debtor is pleaded in abatement, no levy having been made and the proceedings in the case having in no way placed the property in the custody of the court (German-American Seminary v. Saenger, 66 Mich. 249; Jones v. Smith, Walk. Ch. 115, followed).—Beith v. Porter, 119 Mich. 365.

¶ 77. Where on a creditor's bill the debtor is enjoined from interfering with or making any disposition of any of his property, and a receiver is appointed for all such property, clothed with the usual powers and authorized to take immediate possession, the assets of the debtor are so impounded and held by the court as to create a lien which survives the death of the debtor and prevents an abatement of the suit against him upon such death.—Saginaw County Sav. Bank v. Duffield, 157 Mich. 522.

¶ 78. Where a person brings a petition under section 69 of the General Tax Law (1 Comp. L. 1897, § 3892), to set aside a tax sale on the ground of her mental incompetency, and the petition is filed, proofs taken, and the case submitted in her lifetime, the right to a decree in her favor does not perish with her death, but will be entered thereafter at the instance of her representatives.—Young v. Blanchard, 165 Mich. 340.

¶ 79. The suggestion of plaintiff's death is not issuable; and whether defendant should have notice is a question that cannot be raised, save on motion to set aside the proceeding for irregularity.—Larned v. Wilcox, 4 Mich. 333.

¶ 80. Notice of the suggestion of plaintiff's death need not be given to defendant; the latter cannot intervene.—Vickery v. Beir, 16 Mich. 50.

¶ 81. An assignment by complainant cannot affect the proceedings if not appearing of record or brought to the court's knowledge.—Bigelow v. Booth, 39 Mich. 622.

¶ 82. The failure of defendant in error to suggest the death of his coplaintiff was, as to the survivor so affected, an irregularity, which he could waive.—Seymour v. Bruske, 140 Mich. 244.

¶ 83. Suggestion of the death of one of the coparties to a suit may on error be made after judgment as of the time of such death.—Seymour v. Bruske, 140 Mich. 244.

¶ 85. The proceedings to revive a suit after plaintiff's death are matter of statutory regulation. Revivor should not be ordered until proof is on file of the death and of the appointment of an administrator.—Vickery v. Beir, 16 Mich. 50.

¶ 86. The suggestion of a party's death upon the record is enough, if undisputed, to have all the proceedings construed with it without amending the declaration. But the latter proceedings must be properly entitled.—People ex rel. Stimpson v. Seventh Circuit Judge, 41 Mich. 3.

¶ 87. On the death of plaintiff after a referee's finding in his favor but before judgment the cause should be revived before judgment.—Botsford v. Sweet, 49 Mich. 120.

¶ 88. The omission of plaintiff's administrators to revive a suit before taking out an execution after his death is only an irregularity, and may be cured by an order nunc pro tunc.—Jenness v. Lapeer Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 469.

¶ 89. On nonresident defendant's death after entry of judgment, suit may be revived in name of executor appointed on probate here of foreign will, though it does not appear that testator had property here.—Hubbell v. Blandy, 87 Mich. 209.

¶ 90. Upon the death of one partner a cause of action belonging to the firm survives in favor of the other.—Teller v. Wetherell, 9 Mich. 464.

¶ 91. A suit against two partners is on the death of one of them properly revived against the survivor, the administrator of the deceased not being a necessary party.—Van Kleeck v. McCabe, 87 Mich. 599.

¶ 92. A debt due to two or more persons jointly must, after the death of one of them, be sued by the survivor or survivors.—Cote v. Dequindre, W. 64; Teller v. Wetherell, 9 Mich. 464.

¶ 93. When an action is brought against two or more defendants, and one dies, the suit cannot be revived against the administrator of such deceased defendant, and the case must proceed, if at all, against the surviving defendant, the proceedings to revive being statutory and not authorized in such cases.—Baudrig v. Powers, How. N. P. 10.

¶ 94. Ejectment cannot be revived against the legal representatives of a deceased defendant.—People ex rel. Hoffman v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 40 Mich. 351.

¶ 95. Where a defendant in ejectment dies, the action may be carried on against surviving defendants.—People ex rel. Hoffman v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 40 Mich. 351.

¶ 96. A writ of error in ejectment was dismissed because one of the defendants had died before the writ issued, and his heirs, instead of his executors, were brought in to represent him.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 41 Mich. 223.

¶ 97. Where a cause of action survives, the fact of the death of any of the plaintiffs cannot enter into the merits of the trial nor interfere with its progress, and the exclusion of evidence of such fact is not error.—Mason v. Finch, 28 Mich. 282.

¶ 98. After the death of one defendant, indorsers on a note, a joint cause of action survives against the other; and upon his death it survives only against his representatives; and accordingly demands due to him alone may be set off.—Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 Mich. 263.

¶ 99. Under sections 10113 and 10114, Comp. L. 1897, there is the same power of amendment in actions revived by or against an administrator as in ordinary cases.—Jones v. Pendleton, 151 Mich. 442.

Chancery practice on bill or petition to revive or substitute, see Equity, XI.

¶ 100. While the statutory suggestion of the death of a party answers the purpose of a bill of revivor, the rules controlling the action of the court in a particular case are not different in the cases where revival of a suit is by suggestion and where it is by bill of revivor; in neither way can parties be brought into the suit who do not claim by operation of law as a consequence of the death of the original party, for in such case an original bill is necessary.—Haines v. Kent Circuit Judge, 155 Mich. 417.

¶ 101. Comp. L. 1871, § 5102, How. St., § 6656, allowing a suit to be revived against the representatives of a deceased party, is not meant to allow any independent right to be asserted without proper allegations.—Barnett v. Powers, 40 Mich. 317.

¶ 102. A petition to permit the revival of a cause of action in which an injunction was granted against the interference with a perpetual easement in an office building by substituting for the former parties their successors in interest to the end that the injunction in such former suit may be dissolved will not be granted where petitioners acquired their rights, not only with full knowledge of the deed conveying the easement, but also with full knowledge of the construction given to the deed by the supreme court in the prior case.—Ives v. Edison, 191 Mich. 461.

¶ 104. Parties who have purchased an interest in mortgaged premises and whose rights have accrued pending the abatement of the foreclosure suit by the death of the mortgagee, although they took their titles with notice of the pendency of the suit, should be brought upon the record in such manner that they may under proper pleadings have their rights adjudicated, where a long period of time has elapsed between the abatement of the suit and the attempt to revive it.—Haines v. Kent Circuit Judge, 155 Mich. 417.

¶ 105. Upon an application to revive a suit made by one who has no standing for that purpose, the court should not decide the merits of the controversy.—Haines v. Kent Circuit Judge, 155 Mich. 417.

¶ 2. A property right in a mare with foal will include and hold the colt, which, if unweaned, may be sold with the mare.—Kellogg v. Lovely, 46 Mich. 131.

¶ 3. A wilful trespasser who expends money or labor upon another's property acquires no title therein, and the owner may reclaim it.—Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311; Isle Royale Min. Co. v. Hertin, 37 Mich. 332.

§ 2. ——Making into another kind of property.

¶ 4. Where by expending labor in good faith, though by mistake, upon another's property, one destroys its identity or converts it into something substantially different and of greatly enhanced value, he acquires title, and the original owner may recover the value as before the conversion.—Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311; Isle Royale Min. Co. v. Hertin, 37 Mich. 332.

¶ 5. The conversion of trees into logs by a trespasser does not change the title to the property or destroy the identity thereof.—Gates v. Rifle Boom Co., 70 Mich. 309.

¶ 7. Where trees taken from another's land by an innocent trespasser were cut into cord-wood, which was hauled to a lake and piled, and was then seized by the owner of the land, it was held that title had not passed to the innocent trespasser, nor could he recover for his labor; the value of the converted property not having been very greatly increased nor its identity substantially changed.—Isle Royale Min. Co. v. Hertin, 37 Mich. 332.

¶ 8. One who by unintentional trespass had taken from another's land young trees of the value of $25, and converted them into hoops worth $700, was held, because of the great disparity in value, to have made the property in its changed form his own, though the identity of trees and hoops could be traced.—Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311.

¶ 9. Whether there was confusion of goods in a stock of general merchandise is a question of fact for the jury.—Cadwell v. Pray, 41 Mich. 307.

¶ 10. In an action of replevin, where the defendant admits that he authorized plaintiff to remove his property, and only claims he took away a few dollars worth of defendant's material, the court did not err in refusing an instruction on the theory of confusion of goods.—Patterson v. Spooner, 143 Mich. 698.

¶ 11. In cases of accidental intermixture of personal property, the general quality and character of the property being the same, neither loses his own.—Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311; Gates v. Rifle Boom Co., 70 Mich. 309.

¶ 12. Where logs bearing the same mark are commingled not unlawfully, one who owns a portion only cannot claim all.—Hance v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 70 Mich. 227.

¶ 13. The owner of logs which have been sold by road commissioners under mistake as to their right thereto, and have been manufactured into lumber by the purchaser and commingled with lumber cut from other logs, does not obtain title to the whole of the lumber under the theory of confusion of property, but can recover only the proportionate share.—Keweenaw Association v. O'Niel, 120 Mich. 270.

¶ 14. Where logs cut in good faith by A. from trees on B.'s land are by A. commingled not maliciously with his own logs, A. must lose the labor spent in converting the trees into logs; but B. cannot take more logs than belong to him, nor can he keep A.'s logs from him longer than the time reasonably required for selection and separation, or charge A. with storage and expense thereafter.—Busch v. Fisher, 89 Mich. 192.

¶ 15. That logs, for the value of which plaintiff sues, had been mingled by him with defendant's logs, would not prevent a recovery if there was no fraudulent admixture, which is a question for the jury, and the court cannot charge, as matter of law, that plaintiff shall not recover for any logs.—Johnson v. Ballou, 25 Mich. 460.

¶ 16. If goods, though put in among a defendant's stock without effort to keep them separate, are capable of identification, there is no such intermixture as places him in the attitude of a wrongdoer so as to shift from plaintiff to him the burden of proving which such goods are.—Bethel v. Linn, 63 Mich. 464.

¶ 18. Identification being impossible, he whose property has been confused with another's by the latter's mistake, may take so much of the common mass as he owns therein. So held where logs from trees which A. had cut on B.'s land, supposing it to be his, were mixed by A. with his logs; B. could select a quantity equal to that taken from his land and of an average quality with his own.—Gates v. Rifle Boom Co., 70 Mich. 309.

¶ 19. If a mortgagor mingles other goods with those mortgaged, so as to be indistinguishable by the mortgagee, and refuses to separate them, the mortgagee may take the whole.—People v. Bristol, 35 Mich. 28.

¶ 20. In the case of a confusion of goods, the right of possession is somewhat different from that in other cases, and steps taken by a defendant in replevin to enable the officer to distinguish the property may be shown.—Sleight v. Henning, 12 Mich. 371.

¶ 21. If one makes improvements on the lands of another who is not in fault about it, the former, as a general rule, loses both his property and his labor.—Morrison v. Berry, 42 Mich. 389; Holmes v. Bronson, 43 Mich. 562.

¶ 22. One who goes upon and improves land which he knows another owns, cannot, upon the failure of his title, recover the value of the improvements he has made.—Lemerand v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 117 Mich. 309.

¶ 23. A rightful owner who has repossessed himself of his property without resorting to legal remedies is not liable in an action at law for the value of improvements made by another.—Lemerand v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 117 Mich. 309.

¶ 24. A claim for improvements made by the occupant of land is based upon equitable grounds, and the character of the improvements must be such as to make the land more valuable in the future for the ordinary purposes for which such property is owned and used.—Robinson v. Batzer, 195 Mich. 235.

¶ 25. Equity may allow the value of improvements made on land by one who made them as a purchaser without knowledge of complainant's judgment, where a decree in aid of complainant's execution is awarded, although the purchaser took under a quitclaim deed; and a lien superior to that of the execution may be decreed to work out his rights.—Cleland v. Clark, 123 Mich. 179.

¶ 26. An occupant of land cannot recover for improvements as against the title holder, except in a case of ejectment when the owner brings suit, and not as a personal judgment, but as a condition to obtaining a writ of possession.—Robinson v. Batzer, 195 Mich. 235.

¶ 27. Where a person who by fraudulent dealing had obtained colorable title built a cellar in and fences on another's lands, he was considered as having immovably annexed them in his own wrong, and as not entitled to indemnity.—McCredie v. Buxton, 31 Mich. 383.

¶ 28. Ownership of buildings erected by grantor after conveyance vests in grantee in absence of agreement.—Kruger v. Le Blanc, 75 Mich. 424.

¶ 29. Crops planted in and growing on the land of another belong to the owner, where the planter was a mere intruder without right.—Heilwig v. Nybeck, 179 Mich. 292.

Evidence of accord, see post §§ 16, 17.

¶ 1. Settlements of disputed matters and compromises of unsettled claims are favored by the law.—Booth Fisheries Co. v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 170 Mich. 611.

¶ 2. A partial payment or tender of payment is inconsistent with a creditor's rights, and can only be operative when he consents to receive it.—Coots v. McConnell, 39 Mich. 742.

Sufficiency of evidence, questions of fact, and instructions, see post §§ 17, 18.
Effect of knowledge that more was due, see also post ¶ 18.
Mental reservation of dispute, see post ¶ 20. See also post ¶¶ 41, 111.

¶ 3. It is the intention of the parties to an account that has not been paid in full which determines whether an alleged settlement was meant to dispose of the entire account. Words "in settlement of account" printed on check held to mean no more than "applied on account."—Widner v. Western Union Tel. Co., 51 Mich. 291.

¶ 4. To be a valid accord and satisfaction what is given or agreed to be performed, must be offered as a satisfaction and extinction of the original demand, and the creditor must have accepted it with the intention that it should operate as a satisfaction.—Henderson v. McRae, 148 Mich. 324.

¶ 5. There can be no settlement, in the legal sense, where one of the parties surrenders a right that he claims, under protest, and with the understanding that he reserves his defense to any claim upon it.—Jennison v. Stone, 33 Mich. 99.

¶ 7. A railroad employee injured by a collision continued to accept payment at the usual rate while disabled from pursuing his regular employment. Held, that this did not of itself amount to an accord and satisfaction so as to estop him from suing the company for damages.—Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 Mich. 61.

¶ 8. The payment to the president of a corporation of an amount due him for services rendered to the corporation, and the assignment of his stock to a person in trust for the corporation, and his withdrawal from all connection therewith, upon discovery of the fraud practiced by such president in selling property to the corporation, do not amount to a settlement of the tort, where none of the parties regards it as such.—Stoney Creek Woolen Co. v. Smalley, 111 Mich. 321.

¶ 9. In an action to recover a balance of wages due, on the theory that the defendant agreed to pay $25 per week, if the plaintiff satisfactorily performed certain work and that the plaintiff did perform and received only $20 per week, with the additional $5 in continual controversy, a waiver is not made out by the acceptance of a check for $20 for the last week in full settlement to date, where the plaintiff immediately refused to accept it as such and the defendant promised to investigate the matter and let him know.—Stevens v. Michigan Soap Works, 134 Mich. 350.

¶ 10. Where plaintiff and defendant had entered into a contract whereby the former was to be paid a stipulated salary, and such contract had never been rescinded nor abrogated, the receipt by him of a check for a certain sum accompanied by the statement of the treasurer of the defendant that it pays the balance due on the account, does not constitute an accord and satisfaction where the books of the defendant were kept with the idea that the original contract had been rescinded, and there was nothing to show that he knew how the books were kept, and he shortly thereafter took the matter up with the superintendent of the defendant.—Detlaff v. Ideal Mfg. Co., 144 Mich. 342.

¶ 11. The payment of costs by a prisoner, to avoid being sent back to jail, does not operate as a compromise and settlement of a claim for the previous malicious prosecution.—Cascarella v. National Grocer Co., 151 Mich. 15.

§ 3. ——Assumption or payment by third person.

As consideration for accord, see post § 9.
Sufficiency of dispute, see also post ¶ 22.
Compromise with other person where claims are distinct, see post ¶ 50.

¶ 12. A settlement by substitution of debtors need not be in writing.—Glover v. First Universalist Parish of Dowagiac, 48 Mich. 595.

¶ 14. A debtor is not discharged by the fact that his creditor knows that a third person has engaged to pay the debt, unless the creditor has accepted such third person as debtor in his place.—Blanchard v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 40 Mich. 566.

¶ 15. Plaintiff sued to recover money invested in a corporation upon the fraudulent representations of the defendants, its officers. The defendants caused the corporation to be dissolved and sent plaintiff a check for his share. Held, the acceptance of this check by plaintiff did not destroy his right of action for the fraud.—Massey v. Luce, 158 Mich. 128.

¶ 16. A compromise agreement was entered into by the owner of premises, a contractor and a lienor, primarily to adjust the claims of the lienor, who had instituted foreclosure proceedings. A recital therein stated that the owner owed the contractor a certain sum, but they both admitted some of the items included were incorrect. Held, that it did not operate as a compromise between the owner and the contractor.—Fisher v. Burroughs Adding Machine Co., 157 Mich. 126.

¶ 17. An agreement between two lien claimants and the owner of property, contemplating the purchase and settlement of outstanding liens, dismissal of the lien suits, and the protection generally of the parties thereto, and containing various stipulations looking to that end, was not a conclusive settlement and adjustment between one of the claimants and the owner, such as to preclude the former from recovering a balance due him under his contract after the carrying out of the agreement.—Fisher v. Burroughs Adding Machine Co., 157 Mich. 126.

§ 4. Original claims subject to accord or settlement.

Consideration to support settlement for lesser sum, see post § 8.

Liquidated claim in litigation, see also post ¶ 21.

Claim for money applied to fictitious transaction, see post ¶ 27.

¶ 18. A settlement of an unliquidated claim is not rendered void because, when the agreement for settlement was made, it was also agreed that the amount of the demand exceeded the amount to be paid in settlement.—Wheeler v. Baker, 132 Mich. 507.

§ 5. ——Uncertain or disputable character.

See also post ¶ 80.

Unliquidated sums, see ante § 4.

Necessity of honest dispute, see also post § 6.

Avoidance of dispute or litigation as consideration, see post § 6 et seq.

Evidence and instructions, see post §§ 16-18.

¶ 19. A claim, part of which is in dispute, cannot be said to be liquidated so as to require a consideration to make part payment effective as a discharge in full.—Tanner v. Merrill, 108 Mich. 58.

¶ 20. Where there is an honest difference of opinion in reference to the terms of the contract, or where the buyer, in good faith, objects to the quality of goods purchased as not being up to the standard of the contract of purchase, and there is then an adjustment of differences and settlement, the seller cannot reserve an intention of instituting a suit upon a claim of being defrauded in the settlement so made, and recover from the purchaser damages for an alleged fraud in the settlement.—Johnson v. Fisher & Wilson Co., 80 Mich. 431.

¶ 21. Pendency of a new trial motion made after judgment, with circumstances favoring it, and the existence of other disputed claims covered by the settlement, will take a settlement out of the rule that a liquidated obligation cannot be compromised by payment of less than its face.—Line v. McCall, 126 Mich. 497, per Grant, J., others dissenting on different grounds.

¶ 22. Where a creditor filed with the debtor's surety for settlement a claim for a certain amount as due the creditor from the debtor, including a certain note for a part of the debt taken by the creditor from the debtor, the amount of which note the surety deducted from the claim as not within the surety's liability and paid the balance of the claim, which the creditor accepted and receipted for as in full satisfaction held that such claim as filed by the creditor with the surety was not at the time it was paid by the surety past due, liquidated and undisputed so as to entitle the creditor to recover the amount so deducted therefrom.—People v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 195 Mich. 738.

Existence of dispute or uncertainty, see ante §§ 4, 5.

Prepayment as consideration for payment by less sum, see post § 8.

Evidence and instructions, see post §§ 16-18.

General law as to consideration, see Contracts, V.

¶ 23. An agreement to settle an existing suit is sustainable without reference to the merits of the controversy, unless under very peculiar circumstances; and it has the same rule of consideration that applies to other contracts.—Sanford v. Huxford, 32 Mich. 313.

¶ 24. An unliquidated debt may be discharged by a part payment when based on a new consideration, such as payment before maturity, the giving of a new security, a composition with creditors, or a payment made by a stranger.—Cunningham v. Irwin, 182 Mich. 629.

¶ 25. A receipt obtained by improper means and assuming to discharge any indebtedness not honestly in dispute between the parties, and known by the debtor to be owing, is to that extent without consideration and ineffectual.—Hackley v. Headley, 45 Mich. 569.

¶ 26. If an insurer waives his right to delay payment of loss for sixty days after proof of loss is furnished as agreed in the policy, prepayment of part of the insurance cannot be regarded as a consideration to support an alleged compromise for the amount due.—Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. ed. 860, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84.

¶ 27. A promise to pay money to a bank in discharge of a cashier's liability asserted by it and admitted by him, growing out of the carrying of a supposed note for a loan which had no existence, is as valid as if the liability had been disputed.—Lansing National Bank v. Coleman, 117 Mich. 177, per Grant and Moore, JJ., others dissenting.

¶ 28. An agreement by a creditor with his debtor to discharge his demand at a future day cannot be treated as an absolute discharge as against third persons whose rights intervene, where it appears that there was such a failure in the consideration for the agreement as would entitle the creditor to treat it as void.—Stone v. Welling, 14 Mich. 514.

¶ 29. If there is a bona fide dispute as to the amount due from one person to another, or if the debt is unliquidated and uncertain in amount, a compromise and payment of an agreed sum as a satisfaction of the whole is valid.—Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. ed. 860, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84.

See also ante ¶ 18.

Intent to accept in satisfaction, see ante § 2.

Dispute as to part only of claim, see ante § 5.

Receipt in full as evidence, see post § 17.

¶ 30. A new and valuable consideration is required to support an agreement of a creditor to accept from his debtor as payment in full a sum less than that admitted to be owing.—Goldsmith v. Lichtenberg, 139 Mich. 163.

¶ 31. The doctrine that the receipt of part payment, to be effective in discharge of the entire debt, must rest upon a valid consideration, is limited to cases where the debt is liquidated, by agreement or otherwise.—Tanner v. Merrill, 108 Mich. 58.

¶ 32. An unliquidated claim can be settled by the payment of an amount smaller than the actual value.—Wheeler v. Baker, 132 Mich. 507.

¶ 33. Part payment when the debtor is bound to pay the whole debt furnishes no consideration for the creditor's promise to discharge him, and is treated in law as payment pro tanto only.—Leeson v. Anderson, 99 Mich. 247; Cunningham v. Irwin, 182 Mich. 629; People v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 195 Mich. 738.

¶ 34. Where a certain sum is due from one person to another, a release of the entire sum upon payment of a part is without consideration, and the creditor may still sue and recover the residue.—Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. ed. 860, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84.

¶ 35. Prepayment of part of a claim may be a good consideration for the release of the residue if the parties so agree.—Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. ed. 860, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84.

¶ 36. Payment of an insurance policy in advance of the time when it would become due, without discount for interest, is a sufficient consideration, if it was understood as such, for a waiver by the insured of further claim on the policy.—Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. ed. 860, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84.

¶ 37. Retaining and cashing a check which was accompanied by a letter, stating that it was payment in full, does not preclude an action to recover the balance claimed to be due.—Goldsmith v. Lichtenberg, 139 Mich. 163.

¶ 38. The acceptance and use by an employee of a check intended to cover his salary up to the date of his discharge, only, about which there was no dispute, does not operate as a full satisfaction of the claim of such employee, in an action for damages for his discharge in violation of contract; even though the letter containing the check states that it is for "settlement in full up to the time you left our employ."—Proctor v. Hobart M. Cable Co., 145 Mich. 503.

§ 9. ——Different thing or obligation.

Amount paid in settlement of claim as element of damages by dealer against wholesaler for furnishing defective goods, see Damages, II, B.

Necessity and sufficiency of intent to settle, see ante § 2.

Payments not intended or accepted as satisfaction, see ante §§ 2, 3.

Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence as to what covered, see post §§ 16, 17.

Fact questions and instructions, see post §§ 17, 18.

Construction as to being executory or executed, see also post ¶ 54.

Effect as against rights of others where consideration is lacking, see also ante ¶ 28.

¶ 41. A settlement between parties by "jumping accounts," and receipting accordingly, does not, of itself, and without evidence that such was the intent, include items for money afterwards paid by one on account of claims against them jointly, notwithstanding such claims originally accrued before the settlement.—Whipple v. Parker, 29 Mich. 369.

¶ 42. Where a settlement of an alleged case of fraud is admitted, the controversy being whether it was a full accord and satisfaction, or confined to so much of the property as plaintiff paid for with his own money, and there being no evidence that it was expressly agreed to leave some portion of the controversy outside the settlement, there is no error in charging that if there was a full accord and satisfaction of plaintiff individual claim, and he released any claim or demand he had in his individual name, there could be no recovery.—Allison v. Connor, 36 Mich. 288.

¶ 43. A settlement evidenced by the execution of mutual receipts of "one dollar, in full for all debts, dues and demands to this date," except as to certain specified items, is conclusive, in the absence of fraud or mistake, as to all prior dealings between the parties not covered by the excepted items.—Pratt v. Castle, 91 Mich. 484.

¶ 44. Where a testator's heirs at law threatened to attack, on the ground of incompetency and undue influence, a codicil to his will bequeathing certain moneys to his wife, and a deed conveying to her certain lands, and thereafter came to a settlement with her with respect to the bequest, nothing being said about the land, they were not precluded by the settlement from suing in chancery to set aside the deed.—Markillie v. Markillie, 115 Mich. 658.

¶ 45. Any item presumably covered by a settlement, though not specifically mentioned, is properly disallowed by a referee on accounting.—Mason v. Peter, 58 Mich. 554.

¶ 46. One may lawfully settle for that for which he might lawfully recover without sanctioning the original wrongdoing.—Kreiter v. Nichols, 28 Mich. 496.

¶ 48. A general settlement is conclusive as to a particular claim which was presented and considered, even though disallowed entirely when deductions and concessions were made by the other party in arriving at the settlement.—City of Detroit v. Detroit Ry., 134 Mich. 11.

¶ 49. A compromise in a suit for misrepresentation in the sale of lands made with a corporation, after affirmance of the judgment by a Canadian court, is a bar to a subsequent suit against the officers of the corporation in this state for the same alleged misrepresentations.—Krolik v. Curry, 148 Mich. 214.

¶ 50. Where a purchaser of standing timber, under a conditional contract of sale, sold the same to the plaintiff for manufacture at mills, both in Michigan and in Wisconsin, but the buyer had failed to pay for the stumpage, and the owner had seized the manufactured lumber in Michigan and presented a claim against the buyer's assignee in Wisconsin, which was later compromised, this compromise did not settle a replevin suit brought in Michigan for lumber seized by the owner, nor did it operate to transfer title to the Michigan lumber to the plaintiff. —Van Buren v. Stubbings, 149 Mich. 206.

¶ 51. A settlement between a corporation and the representatives of the estate of a deceased officer whereby the corporation acknowledges payment in full and releases and discharges all claims of the corporation against the estate covers outstanding "kited" paper which was illegally issued by deceased but which an audit of the books had disclosed, and it is immaterial that the successor of deceased renewed or kept alive such obligation.—Holland Furniture Co. v. Knoolhuizen, 195 Mich. 241.

¶ 52. In settling a claim under a fire insurance policy, a reservation of a right to recover any balance due is ineffectual, where one takes payment from an agent whom he knows to be instructed to deliver the draft only upon condition of the plaintiff's signing and delivering a receipt in full.—Kern Brewing Co. v. Royal Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 39.

¶ 52a. Four large stockholders in four newspaper corporations made an agreement to act together and control the corporations for their own personal profit. One of the parties, one Sweeney, was, by the agreement, to hold certain offices at lucrative salaries in the corporations, and was to have the right to buy twenty shares of treasury stock in one of the corporations at a figure far below their real value. Sweeney quarrelled with the other parties, and was discharged. He started suit to compel the sale to him of the twenty shares. He later made a contract with them by which he agreed to sell out all his stock and interest in the aforesaid corporations, and to drop his suit. Held, that by implication this agreement terminated all his rights under the original agreement.—Scripps v. Sweeney, 160 Mich. 148.

Sufficiency of execution and performance, see post § 12.

Burden of proving satisfaction, see post § 16.

¶ 53. A mere agreement to accept a composition, or part of a debt in discharge of the whole, will not operate as a release of the debt if the composition is not duly paid.—Harrison v. Gamble, 69 Mich. 96.

¶ 54. An agreement reciting that "the parties hereto, being desirous of settling all matters of difference between them, of whatever name or nature, have agreed as follows," etc., "and it is further mutually agreed that the parties hereto shall meet . . . on Thursday to execute necessary papers to carry out and fulfil the terms of this agreement," is complete in itself and needs no explanation; and where it has been executed and performed, neither party can be heard to contend that it was only a partial settlement and did not include a matter in suit.—Freeman v. Freeman, 68 Mich. 28.

Payment or tender generally, see Payment, Tender, Deposit.

Necessity of intentional acceptance, see ante § 2.

Ratification of agreement by acceptance of part due thereunder, see post ¶ 69.

¶ 56. There was no binding settlement of all matters between a son who had rendered services and his mother, where the son gave a receipt to the mother for all demands, and the mother made out a like receipt in favor of the son but did not execute it, and there was at the time no going over of the accounts, or a determination of balances, or a payment of any money by either to the other.—In re Teller's Estate, 200 Mich. 181.

¶ 57. Where creditors received a note from his debtor, with collateral security, agreeing that, if paid when due, the original debt consisting of four notes otherwise secured, should be discharged, otherwise of force; and, after the compromise became overdue, sold and transferred it, with the collaterals and the original debt but not the security for it, it was held that they thereby affirmed the compromise, and in effect took payment of it, and that the purchaser could not claim the amount of the original debt on the ground of forfeiture of the compromise agreement before he purchased.—Hale v. Holmes, 8 Mich. 37.

¶ 58. An agreement to pay a disputed balance due on a contract for the sale of logs if a certain number of butt logs sorted out from the mass did not go 70 per cent culls, was not binding where the intended average of the logs was not accomplished by plaintiff's method of selecting the best logs only.—Boyce v. Barker, 119 Mich. 157.

In agreements among three or more parties, see also ante ¶¶ 16, 17.

¶ 59. A contract whereby one of the parties agrees to accept a specified amount "in full satisfaction of all claims of every nature" against the other is conclusive as to any existing claim, where there is no evidence of fraud or mutual mistake.—Lauzon v. Belleheumer, 108 Mich. 444.

¶ 60. A complainant on a bill for an accounting, having intelligently accepted a fair payment as a full settlement of all claims, ought not to be permitted to repudiate the settlement.—Eccard v. Brush, 48 Mich. 3.

¶ 61. A fair settlement of conflicting claims is binding upon the parties, even though they may have yielded legal rights. —Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109.

¶ 62. The courts will not go back of the deliberate compromise of an apparently bona fide claim outstanding against a debt to inquire into the reasonableness of the compromise or the merits of the disputed claim, when action is brought on the debt by the assignee of the creditor.—Hull v. Swarthout, 29 Mich. 249.

¶ 63. In the absence of fraud, duress or oppression, a client's settlement with an attorney for moneys collected and in the latter's hands subject to a lien for services is binding.—Dowling v. Eggemann, 47 Mich. 171.

¶ 64. Where the vendor of machinery, sold under a warranty that it would do a specified amount of work, which the purchaser claimed was not fulfilled, convinced the latter that the operative, and not the machine, was at fault, and thereafter, without any fraud or concealment, effected a settlement upon terms suggested by the purchaser, making certain concessions as to freight charges and terms of credit, such settlement was held conclusive in an action on a note given by the purchaser pursuant thereto.—Davis & Egan Mach. Tool Co. v. Souvenir Wheel Co., 114 Mich. 615.

¶ 66. Where a suit has been discontinued by a stipulation and a settlement made, and the rights of third persons, strangers to the litigation, have intervened, the settlement in the absence of fraud will not be disturbed.—Booth Fisheries Co. v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 170 Mich. 611.

¶ 68. Parties who have entered into a settlement which necessarily includes a particular claim cannot revive such claim by having the notes that represent it transferred to their wives.—Wilson v. Wright, 116 Mich. 476.

¶ 69. The acceptance of a portion of the consideration for an agreement for the compromise of mutual differences, is a ratification of the contract.—Barras v. Youngs, 185 Mich. 496.

¶ 70. Evidence being sufficient to show the delivery of notes to a defendant mortgagor by an agent of the complainant, they being surrendered with an understanding that a settlement of a mortgage debt was fully consumated, the complainant mortgagee was bound to deliver a discharge of the mortgage, as agreed, and could not repudiate the settlement and foreclosure.—Lindley v. Lupton, 118 Mich. 466.

¶ 71. The act of one who had entered into an agreement for a compromise and settlement in taking a third party into a deal after refusal to execute the compromise cannot affect the rights of the claimant to bring an action on the original contract after he rescinded the compromise.—Henderson v. McRae, 148 Mich. 324.

¶ 72. One who, having the means at hand to determine accurately the condition of accounts between himself and another, instead of availing himself of those means, chose to execute a contract of settlement in ignorance of the facts, after a full discussion, is concluded thereby, and cannot impeach the settlement for mistake after it has been in operation for several years.—Brevoort v. Partridge, 156 Mich. 359.

§ 14. ——Grounds to avoid, revoke or rescind.

What constitutes fraud, mistake or duress, see Fraud; Mistake; Duress.

Rescission as fraud on other creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances, I, A.

Affirmance or acceptance of performance variant from agreement, see ante § 12.

¶ 73. Where parties have agreed to a settlement of an existing lawsuit, and put it in writing and signed it, such arrangement must stand until set aside for such frauds as should vitiate it, upon a rescission attempted as soon as practicable after the fraud is known, and with no lack of diligence in discovering it.—Lewless v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 65 Mich. 292.

¶ 74. Courts cannot disturb a compromise between parties unless on satisfactory evidence of mistake, fraud or unconscionable advantage.—Prichard v. Sharp, 51 Mich. 432; Hart v. Gould, 62 Mich. 262; Nash v. Manistee Lumber Co., 75 Mich. 346; Loud v. Federal Ins. Co., 195 Mich. 60.

¶ 75. The law approves of settlements and compromises of disputed claims, and, when deliberately made, the parties are bound by them; and the law will not sanction any interference with them, without the consent of the parties, except upon the ground of fraud, mistake or duress.—Averill v. Wood, 78 Mich. 342; Dailey v. King, 79 Mich. 568; Pratt v. Castle, 91 Mich. 484.

¶ 76. It will be presumed that parties consult their own interests in making settlements of disputed matters and compromises of unsettled claims; usually they will not be interfered with in the absence of fraud or mutual mistake, and then only when the party who seeks to rescind returns to the other party what he has received by virtue of the settlement.—Booth Fisheries Co. v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 170 Mich. 611.

¶ 77. The law will not look too closely into such arrangements as the parties themselves choose to consider satisfactory, but in the absence of fraud or mistake will encourage parties to settle their own contracts. —Moore v. Detroit Locomotive Works, 14 Mich. 266.

¶ 78. The rule that courts look with favor upon a compromise and settlement made by the parties to a suit, to prevent the vexation and expense of further litigation, only applies where all of the rights and interests of all the parties concerned, both legal and equitable, have been respected, and in good faith observed.—Weeks v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 73 Mich. 256.

¶ 79. A person who knows that another is asserting an invalid claim against him and yet compromises rather than go to law, and does so understandingly, and on equal terms with the other as to capacity to litigate, there being no deception in obtaining the settlement, and the contract of settlement being performed or nearly performed by him with deliberation and not of necessity, cannot have the courts go behind such settlement to ascertain who was right in the original controversy.—Dailey v. King, 79 Mich. 568.

¶ 80. Defendant charged complainant with intentionally burning his own mill, and claimed payment for wheat belonging to defendant which was destroyed with the mill, and complainant gave his note and mortgage for the value of the wheat. On bill filed by complainant to set aside these securities as obtained through threats, fear and duress, it is not necessary for the court either to find that complainant burned his mill or to grant the relief asked; for the settlement must stand if there was no fraud or undue advantage taken to bring it about, and defendant had reason to believe the charge, and did not manufacture it to frighten complainant into a settlement.—Gates v. Shutts, 7 Mich. 127.

¶ 81. An alleged compromise may be contested by showing that the party relying on it had acted unfairly or oppressively, and asserted claims which he knew to be wrongful, for the purpose of getting the terms which have been nominally assented to.—Headley v. Hackley, 50 Mich. 43.

¶ 82. A receipt in full, signed by a party for his share of a claim, upon the faith of a statement made to him that certain outstanding matters had been settled, does not estop him when he discovers that such a statement is untrue in fact.—Hart v. Gould, 62 Mich. 262.

¶ 83. It is against public policy to permit a party to a written settlement to contest his liabilities thereunder on the ground that he had fraudulently contrived it for the purpose, merely, of screening his property from justice.—Bassett v. Shepardson, 52 Mich. 3.

¶ 84. A settlement will not be set aside in a court of equity because one of the parties did not understand it or its legal effect.—Booth Fisheries Co. v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 170 Mich. 611.

¶ 85. An employee who is paid semimonthly in checks, each of which recites that the payment is "in full for services to date," and who, upon the termination of his employment, accepts a check similarly worded for the balance of his salary, giving therefor his receipt in full, cannot avoid the effect of the settlement, and recover for alleged extra services, by showing that he signed such receipt without reading it, on being told that if he did not sign it he would get nothing at all.—Golden v. Bartlett Illuminating Co., 114 Mich. 625.

¶ 86. Existing differences between an agent and his principal that are settled at the time of making a new contract cannot subsequently be the subject of damages.—Stone v. Fox Machine Co., 145 Mich. 689.

¶ 87. Where, pending an accounting, the parties enter into a stipulation providing that whenever complainant shall be relieved from a secondary liability upon certain outstanding obligations, he will receipt to defendant for a given amount, to be applied upon any sum that may be found due from defendant upon such accounting, and, pursuant to such stipulation, the release is secured, the receipt given, and the application made, complainant cannot, upon a second accounting in the same suit, compel defendant to account for any part of the amount so receipted for and credited, merely because the latter obtained such release for less than the face value of the obligations.—Petrie v. Torrent, 107 Mich. 648.

¶ 88. Where a person made settlement of a claim against an estate asserting that he could establish certain facts, the persons who claim under him cannot have the settlement set aside on the ground that they have obtained the evidence of such facts, and that the prior assertion of ability to establish them was false and so known to all the parties to the settlement.—Macomber v. Cottrell, 171 Mich. 371.

Nature of judgment where original debt is sued on but proof showed waiver of delay in performance, see post ¶¶ 129, 130.

¶ 90. A creditor who has received part of a debt as payment of the whole, to which he was entitled, need not, before suing for the part unpaid, tender back the amount received and thus repudiate the attempted settlement.—Leeson v. Anderson, 99 Mich. 247.

¶ 91. A court of equity has jurisdiction, upon proper averments, to open and correct a compromise and settlement.—Booth Fisheries Co. v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 170 Mich. 611.

¶ 92. One who, when sued for his attorney's stipulated compensation, pleads settlement, has the burden of establishing it.—Hitchcock v. Davis, 87 Mich. 629.

¶ 93. A defendant whose case involves proving an accord must follow it with evidence of satisfaction, or of some legal excuse for its absence.—Browning v. Crouse, 43 Mich. 489.

¶ 94. When a plaintiff in making out a case is compelled to establish an accord which has to be disposed of, he must show at least prima facie that there has been no satisfaction.—Browning v. Crouse, 43 Mich. 489; Harrison v. Gamble, 69 Mich. 96.

¶ 95. Plaintiff, suing on the original agreement, cannot succeed by proving an accord without also proving that it remains unsatisfied. The burden of proving the satisfaction in such a situation is not on the defendant.—Browning v. Crouse, 43 Mich. 489.

¶ 96. In an action for the purchase price of a stock of goods, the burden of proof is on the defendant to show that a subsequent transaction covered the prior sale and settled all matters between the parties.—Grabowsky v. Baumgart, 128 Mich. 267.

¶ 97. Where a defendant sued for forcibly evicting his lessees claims a prior settlement and agreement to surrender possession, the burden is upon him to show such settlement.—Baumier v. Antiau, 79 Mich. 509.

¶ 98. A settlement of previous accounts is not to be conclusively presumed from the giving of a note by one party to another. Whether it furnishes a prima facie presumption or is only a question for the jury, quere.—Cotherman v. Cotherman's Estate, 58 Mich. 465.

¶ 99. A settlement of accounts between parties is prima facie a settlement of all accounts; but where there is evidence tending to show that a certain item was excluded in the settlement, it is a proper question for a jury to determine what was settled.—Bourke v. James, 4 Mich. 336.

¶ 100. It is always competent to show, by any relevant testimony, what items enter into a settlement when an item sued for is claimed to be barred by the settlement.—Hicks v. Leaton, 67 Mich. 371.

¶ 102. Where a note of third persons was given on a compromise of pending litigation, the extent of which compromise was afterwards in issue in a suit upon another item claimed not to have been covered by such compromise, evidence of what was done with the note, and of its present whereabouts, is irrelevant to such issue.—Hicks v. Leaton, 67 Mich. 371.

¶ 103. In an action for the purchase price of a stock of goods in which the defendant claims to have paid for it by a subsequent sale of another stock which the plaintiff claims did not in any way include the debt of the original stock, it is not error to permit the plaintiff to testify as to the condition and value of the stock in order to enable the jury by comparison to determine which of the parties were entitled to belief as to the agreement of the second sale.—Grabowsky v. Baumgart, 128 Mich. 267.

¶ 107. A debtor inclosed a check in a letter of transmittal which was merely a printed form with the blanks filled out in writing and containing the printed words "in settlement of account." The letter also inclosed a receipt in similar form and with the same printed words. The creditor refused to sign this receipt but gave an ordinary receipt in place of it without objection from the debtor. Further payments were made before the completion of the contract, and the creditor frequently demanded full payment after the check was received, and at such times the debtor made no claim of a settlement. Held, that the words "in settlement of account" meant no more than "applied on the account."—Widner v. Western Union Tel. Co., 51 Mich. 291.

¶ 108. A man agreed with his daughter-in-law that certain property should be sold and that she should have what was left of the proceeds after certain deductions were made. When the property was sold he directed what should be done with the proceeds, and she received what he gave her. She afterwards brought a claim against his estate based on the agreement. Held, that it was not to be inferred from her receipt of the money paid her that she had agreed to take so much in satisfaction of her claim, or that she supposed she was accounting with her father-in-law as strangers would account with each other.—Fraser v. Fraser's Estate, 42 Mich. 275.

¶ 109. In a controversy involving an agreement signed by a widow and her deceased father-in-law, whereby, in order to reimburse him for outlays for taxes, etc., on property previously given by him to her she had consented to a sale, the fact that, before the sale, he had sent her a statement of an account between themselves, containing items not covered by the agreement, would not bind her to the deduction of so much from the amount due her under it, in the absence of evidence that she had examined the account or consented to such deduction.—Fraser v. Fraser's Estate, 42 Mich. 275.

¶ 110. There was sufficient evidence to support a finding that a suit had been dropped or settled by the plaintiff therein, present defendant's intestate, although he had not consulted with the present complainant who was affected by a contract depending on the result of the original suit nor informed him of the settlement, where outside persons testified that the decedent had stated variously that he had "settled" the case, that he had "compromised" it, and that he had "settled it satisfactorily" and would pay the money called for by the contract, but did not care to have the creditors "insult him any more in his office about this thing."—Davis v. Hammond, 75 Mich. 1.

¶ 111. Defendant was charged by the administrator of his mother's estate with a loan of $500 or $600. In a conference at the probate office, defendant admitted having received only $350, and produced notes for the amount, signed by himself, which he claimed had been returned to him by the deceased upon her receiving payment. There was no positive evidence that the $350 was the same debt as the $500 claim. The probate judge pronounced the notes forgeries, and a new note for $350 was finally given by defendant and accepted by the administrator. Held, evidence of compromise of disputed claims sufficient to go to the jury.—Schulz v. Schulz, 113 Mich. 502.

¶ 112. It is not error to refuse a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence, the verdict being for plaintiff, executrix, in an action on a book account, the defense being settlement, where the only evidence of settlement was that of a daughter of defendant who testified to a "kind of settlement," and a check introduced with a statement that it was in settlement in full written thereon, with conflicting evidence of experts as to whether or not the writing was on the check before it was stamped as paid by the bank.—Blodgett v. Vogel, 130 Mich. 479.

¶ 113. In an action for breach of contract for the purchase of coal where the evidence showed that defendant had received part of the coal and refused to receive the balance, plaintiffs wrote demanding payment for all the coal then shipped, inclosing an itemized account of said shipments, and defendant replied that the coal received did not correspond with the contract, but offered to pay for the coal received if plaintiffs would accept the same in full satisfaction of their claim, to which plaintiffs replied with an attached statement including the shipments rejected, and stating that the amount due was a named amount for the coal accepted to date, and thereupon the defendant sent a check for the amount named, but struck from the statement the rejected shipments, this did not warrant a finding of an accord and satisfaction, although the plaintiffs at once and without protest accepted and used the check, the plaintiffs having a right to understand that defendant by drawing lines through the items for shipments not received, intended to withdraw them from the account which the check was intended to pay. Ginn v. W. C. Clark Coal Co., 143 Mich. 84.

¶ 114. A valid agreement to compromise and settle mutual differences held established by the evidence.—Barras v. Youngs, 185 Mich. 496.

¶ 115. Evidence held to sustain a finding that the parties to a contract for the sale of fruit settled on a certain sum which would put an end to their contract relation.—Grand Traverse Fruit & Produce Exchange v. Thomas Canning Co., 200 Mich. 95.

For general law, see Trial; Instructions; Judgments.

Sufficiency of evidence for the jury, see also ante § 17.

Instruction as to items covered, see also ante ¶ 42.

¶ 116. If it is doubtful if an accord—an agreement—has been established, the question is for the jury.—Hoey v. Ross, 189 Mich. 198.

¶ 117. Where a claim is unliquidated and a check in settlement offered to the creditor and cashed an accord and satisfaction is established as a matter of law.—Hoey v. Ross, 189 Mich. 198.

¶ 118. A question for the jury is raised in an action of assumpsit, where defendant's testimony tends to show a release or payment of the debt which the plaintiff denies, claiming that the alleged arrangement constituting the release was not concluded and the release never delivered.—Cleveland v. Rothschild, 132 Mich. 625.

¶ 119. Where there is a clear dispute as to the circumstances and reasons for giving a receipt acknowledging full payment, the question whether or not it was given under a promise by the payee that it should have no effect and that he would pay well for the services rendered, is for the jury.—Chapel v. Clark, 117 Mich. 638.

¶ 120. W. having agreed to ship a quantity of pig iron for M., L. & M., together with some of his own, sent it all in his own name to a Cleveland firm and gave M., L. & M. a paper certifying that 884 tons were iron on which they had a first lien, and that all it brought over and above the amount due them, and the charges, was to go to pay his own lien. Nothing being received from the consignees, W. gave M., L. & M., at their request, an order on the firm for the iron, and notified the firm to settle with M., L. & M. without recourse to him. M., L. & M. then gave up the former certificate to W. They afterwards sued him in assumpsit for damages sustained from his failure to perform the agreement under which he had forwarded the iron for them, and the evidence was conflicting as to the nature of the arrangement under which the iron was received and shipped, and as to whether there was an absolute agreement for advances to be paid M., L. & M., and whether such advances as W. had received were on the whole mass of iron or in answer to drafts on specified lots of his own. Held, that a ruling that the reception by M., L. & M. of the order on the firm was a final settlement as between the parties, and left M., L. & M. to their remedy against the firm, could not be sustained, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the evidence submitted to the jury under proper instructions.—Maas v. White, 37 Mich. 126.

¶ 121. The acceptance of a check by plaintiff in a suit for breach of contract of employment, sent by defendants in a letter discharging plaintiff and stating that such check was in full settlement for his services from January 25, 1888, to June 12, 1888, did not as a matter of law, bar plaintiff from further recovery, where such contract, although dated January 25, 1888, employed plaintiff at a certain salary for the year 1888, and where plaintiff testified that he commenced work January 3, 1888, and was out of employment from June 12 to July 20, and the whole case was for the jury.—Mortlock v. Williams, 76 Mich. 568.

¶ 123. By contract between attorney and clients the former was to render certain professional services free of charge, and they were to pay him a share of $10,000 when received from a third person contingently bound to pay such sum to them. Subsequently the attorney sued said clients for professional services, his declaration not referring to said contract; but in settling the suit he receipted "in full of all claims in the above-entitled cause and of all accounts." Correspondence between the parties prior to the settlement showed that the attorney expected nothing would be received from the $10,000 claim, while it also showed defendants still considered the attorney entitled to his agreed share if claim was collected. Counsel who negotiated the settlement for defendants testified the receipt was given to include all the attorney's claims against them. Held, that the receipt by itself would hardly warrant a finding that it included the claim under the contract, but that it was for the jury to determine from the receipt, and from the facts and circumstances attending its execution, what was settled by it.—Hitchcock v. Davis, 87 Mich. 629.

¶ 124. In an action to recover a balance claimed to be due to plaintiff, defendant's testimony that a cash payment, and the giving of a note, which was thereafter paid, constituted a settlement of plaintiff's account in full, entitled defendant to go to the jury, there being a conflict as to whether there was a shortage in goods sold.—Block v. Crawford, 114 Mich. 608.

¶ 125. Evidence held sufficient to go to the jury on the question of the sufficiency of evidence of a consideration for a compromise between the widow of deceased and his mother, whereby a bond was given by the widow to the mother conditioned on the payment of monthly sums to the mother for life, where it appeared that the mother claimed that there was a will in existence, entitling her to a specific sum of money out of the estate and the widow denied its existence and claimed that it had been revoked and that the deceased had requested her to make provision for the mother, and she had agreed to do so.—Chaffee v. Chaffee, 197 Mich. 133.

¶ 127. A stipulation for the discontinuance of an action upon a promissory note against an indorser recited that the suit had been compromised and settled in full. Plaintiff thereafter instituted a new action upon the note, setting up in a special count that he had stipulated to discontinue the former case upon defendant's promise to give him a new note, and that the promise had never been fulfilled. Defendant, upon the trial, claimed that the note sued upon was turned over by him in payment of plaintiff's claim, and that it was never protested, so as to hold him as an indorser; that the agreement to discontinue the former suit was unconditional, except as shown by the stipulation itself. Plaintiff's testimony tended to show that the note was taken merely as collateral security, and that the conditions of the discontinuance of the former suit were as set up in his declaration. The jury were instructed that plaintiff could not recover if the note was taken in payment, or if the controversy had been settled by stipulation; but that if a fraud was practiced upon plaintiff in the settlement, and the note was taken as collateral security merely, he should recover. Held, that the case was fairly submitted under the pleadings and the evidence. —Levy v. O'Leary, 113 Mich. 423.

¶ 128. Where in an action for personal injuries the master pleaded accord and satisfaction, and it appeared from the evidence that two releases and receipts had been executed and the release pleaded was not produced in evidence, the fact that the court had instructed the jury concerning the release, and left the question as to its procurement by fraud to the jury and that there had been a sufficient tender of the consideration for the releases, was more favorable to the defendant than the record warranted and the defendant cannot complain that there should have been a directed verdict on that issue.—Brockmiller v. Industrial Works, 148 Mich. 642.

¶ 129. A debtor compromised with his creditors, but, as he paid the amount of the compromise irregularly, the creditors refused the last tender and sued for the whole debt. Defendant, having paid part and tendered the rest of the amount agreed on, recovered judgment. The tender, however, had not been kept good. Held, that the recovery was wrong, and that plaintiffs should have recovered the amount owing under the compromise agreement, with costs, the circumstances being such that the original debt was not reinstated.—Browning v. Crouse, 40 Mich. 389.

¶ 130. In an action on a promissory note the plaintiff had to show, in explaining certain memoranda on the note, that a compromise had been made, but he claimed that as it had been only partly fulfilled he was entitled to recover in full. Held, that as he did not show what the terms of the compromise were, or in what the default lay, he was only entitled to recover the amount remaining unpaid on the compromise sworn to.—Browning v. Crouse, 43 Mich. 489.

Requisites of plea of account stated, see post ¶ 33.

¶ 1. An account stated means a balance struck between the parties on a settlement; and, where the mutual dealings are shown to have been adjusted and a balance struck, the law implies a promise to pay such balance.—Kusterer Brewing Co. v. Friar, 99 Mich. 190; Watkins v. Ford, 69 Mich. 357.

¶ 2. The theory of an account stated is that the minds of the parties have met when it has been rendered by one and received and accepted without objection by the other.—Love v. Ramsey, 139 Mich. 47.

¶ 3. An account is stated whenever, as the result of an accounting between the parties in respect to debts or accounts, a balance has been struck.—Gooding v. Hingston, 20 Mich. 439; Watkins v. Ford, 69 Mich. 357.

¶ 4. The essential element of an account stated is a statement of the account.—Fellows v. Thrall, 85 Mich. 161.

¶ 5. An account stated need not be in writing.—Sperry v. Moore's Estate, 42 Mich. 353; Watkins v. Ford, 69 Mich. 357.

¶ 6. An award of arbitrators may be considered as an account stated.—Gooding v. Hingston, 20 Mich. 439.

¶ 7. A receipt which states its purpose to be for a complete settlement, and which covers the whole period of dealing, is equivalent to an account stated; and though it is open to explanation as to errors or omissions, it cannot be treated as if it had not been meant to cover everything.—Houghton v. Ross, 54 Mich. 335.

¶ 7a. A settlement of an unliquidated claim for damages arising either from the breach of a contract or from a tort cannot become the subject of an account stated so as to permit an action in assumpsit.—Pudas v. Mattola, 173 Mich. 189.

¶ 8. The mere rendering of an account is not an account stated; it must be assented to in some way.—White v. Campbell, 25 Mich. 463; Payne v. Walker, 26 Mich. 60.

¶ 9. There is no account stated where no acknowledgment of indebtedness or promise to pay appears.—Stevens v. Tuller, 4 Mich. 387.

¶ 10. A statement is not, in law, an account stated, if neither party agrees to it.—Raymond v. Leavitt, 46 Mich. 447.

¶ 11. It seems that any admission by one party of a balance, or an acknowledgment that a sum of money is due another, supports a count upon an account stated.—Gooding v. Hingston, 20 Mich. 439.

¶ 12. A plaintiff cannot fix the amount of a contested bill by giving credit for what he claims it should be.—McEwen v. Bigelow, 40 Mich. 215.

¶ 13. An account stated cannot be based on an appraisal where it does not appear that both parties mutually agreed on the appraisers, or recognized them as authorized to bind them by their action.—Chicago & C. S. R. Co. v. Peters, 45 Mich. 636.

¶ 14. Where parties meet to adjust their mutual accounts in a settlement that shall cover all claims, and one of them withdraws while some accounts remain unsettled and refuses to go further, the whole settlement is defeated, and an action on the common counts will not lie to recover upon such items as had been agreed to.—Tioga Mfg. Co. v. Stimson, 48 Mich. 213.

¶15. It is sufficient to constitute an account stated if the items constituting the account are settled upon so that nothing remains but a mere matter of computation.—Wood v. O'Callaghan, 140 Mich. 598.

¶ 16. A confession by a traveling salesman that his arrearages amount to a certain sum does not constitute an account stated where not accepted by his principal as true, the latter continuing to insist that it was not a true statement.—Wheeler v. Baker, 132 Mich. 507.

Limit of time for objection, see also post ¶¶ 35, 51.

¶ 17. The failure of a debtor to object within a reasonable time to monthly statements rendered to him amounts to an admission by him that the account is correctly stated.—Pabst Brewing Co. v. Lueders, 107 Mich. 41.

¶ 18. Where, in an action to recover the balance claimed to be due on an account covering several years, it is shown that defendant agreed to pay what dealers other than plaintiff charged, which price is shown, the mere rendering of an account from time to time, and entries in defendant's passbook at a greater price, will not make an account stated, or fix the price at the sum charged.—Kusterer Brewing Co. v. Friar, 99 Mich. 190.

¶ 19. An objection to payment tendered for the price of merchandise for not being as much as was due, or not what the goods cost, is enough to entitle the vendor to contest the correctness of the account rendered.—Peter v. Thickstun, 51 Mich. 589.

¶ 20. In an action to recover for goods sold, the defense being that defendant made the purchase for a corporation of which he was manager, plaintiff is not entitled to a verdict as upon an account stated because defendant made no objection to the amount of the account, where he did object that the goods should be charged to the corporation and not to him individually.—Love v. Ramsey, 139 Mich. 47.

¶ 21. Plaintiffs contracted to sell lumber to a certain cedar company. Defendant indorsed the cedar company's two notes given in payment for the lumber. At the direction of the cedar company the lumber was in large part shipped to the defendant. When the second note of $1,250 became due, the defendant paid it and sent a statement of account to plaintiffs by which it credited itself with the amount of the note. Plaintiffs responded to this with a statement by which they also credited defendant with said amount. Later, plaintiffs took three notes from the cedar company for the balance due from it. The cedar company failed. Plaintiffs sued defendant for the $1,250 item credited in said statements. Held, the statements between plaintiffs and defendant resulted in an account stated, and plaintiffs could not recover.—Harstad v. H. A. Bauman Co., 162 Mich. 162.

¶ 22. Where an account has been stated it is not necessary that the antecedent debt or demand between the parties be proved.—Armitage v. Saunders, 94 Mich. 482.

¶ 23. Where business usage requires a contractor, who was also an employee, to make full showing of his claims against his employer for the purposes of a complete settlement, his deliberate concealment of a claim estops him from relying upon it afterwards, and the arrangement and comparison of mutual demands must be regarded as a final statement of his claims which it would be a fraud to disturb.—Gingrass v. Iron Cliffs Co., 48 Mich. 413.

¶ 24. Where there has been a subsequent accounting and promise, it seems that a party is bound, though the original contract by the statute of frauds may have been void.—Stevens v. Tuller, 4 Mich. 387.

¶ 25. Matters entering into an account stated may be impeached for fraud or mistake.—Stevens v. Saginaw County Sup'rs., 62 Mich. 579.

¶ 26. A commercial traveler was sued by the firm who employed him as for money which they claimed to have overpaid him in refunding his traveling expenses, which they were in the habit of doing on reports which he presented, and which, in their declaration, they allege to have been falsely padded. Plaintiffs filed a bill of particulars of the debit items against the defendant, which the latter admitted. Held, that, as one of the plaintiffs admitted that the matter to which defendant's admission referred had gone into an account stated, the plaintiffs were bound by this admission, and, without legal evidence of fraud, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover on the strength of defendant's admission of the items set forth as falsifying the account stated.—Linn v. Gilman, 46 Mich. 628.

¶ 27. A depositor who had been in the habit of checking out all his money shortly after he deposited it was notified of a balance long after he supposed he had exhausted his account, and immediately withdrew it. He made no inquiry or objection, but sued the bank, nearly two years afterwards, for an alleged balance, including sums which had been paid out on checks signed by another in his name. The trial court charged that the bank had the burden of showing that these checks had been signed by authority. Held, that the depositor's course in withdrawing the balance on notification of it was a strong case of acquiescing in an account stated, which required him to bring himself within some rule that would allow him to impeach it, and the court should have charged that he had the burden of impeaching it.—American Nat. Bank v. Bushey, 45 Mich. 135.

Admissibility of evidence as to included items, see post ¶ 38.

See also ante ¶ 7.

¶ 28. An account stated, or a note given for the amount, need not cover all dealings or dealings on both sides.—Graham v. Chubb, 39 Mich. 417.

¶ 29. Where, in order to arrive at the true situation of the account between the parties, it is necessary to inquire outside of certain writings, which defendant claims amount to an account stated, and on doing so it is found that at the time the writings were made a controversy existed which neither party regarded as settled by the writings, they cannot be held, as a matter of law, to conclude plaintiff.—McColl v. Jackson Iron Co., 98 Mich. 482.

General law of procedure, see Evidence; Instructions; Pleading; Judgment; Trial; and the like.

Matters relating to action of assumpsit generally, see Assumpsit.

Limitations of action, see Limitations of Actions.

¶ 30. Either a special assumpsit on the promise or assumpsit on the common counts will lie, as upon an account stated, upon an instrument reciting a settlement between the parties, and an understanding that plaintiff shall receive a stated sum after certain deductions.—Millikin v. Ferguson, 56 Mich. 189.

¶ 31. An action lies under the common counts for a sum agreed upon as due, if based upon lawful consideration.—Miner v. O'Harrow, 60 Mich. 91.

¶ 32. Where suit was brought against a public officer for stated balances reported against him at three several times, it was held that the action must be deemed to have accrued against him at the date of the last statement of balance and the law then in force applies.—Gorham v. Wing, 10 Mich. 486.

Rendition of account as evidence of accord and satisfaction of items therein shown, see Accord and Satisfaction, ¶ 109.
Implied assent from failure to object, see also ante § 3.
Conclusiveness of account and impeachment of it, see ante § 4 et seq.
As to proving component items, see also ante ¶ 22.
As to burden of impeachment of items, see ante ¶ 27.
Admission as to included items, see also ante ¶ 26.

¶ 33. A plea of an account stated must aver that the settlement was of all dealings between the parties; that the accounts were just, fair and due; and these averments must be supported by an answer to the same effect.—Schwarz v. Wendell, H. 395.

¶ 34. One who sues on an account stated with defendant's agent can only recover on proof of a settlement made with defendant or his authorized agent, or, if made by an unauthorized person, on proof of defendant's ratification thereof with a full knowledge of the facts.—Mink v. Morrison, 42 Mich. 567.

¶ 35. "Reasonable time" within which to object to an account rendered is a question for a jury and to be considered in connection with the circumstances of the case.—Peter v. Thickstun, 51 Mich. 589.

¶ 36. It is not necessary, in support of an account stated, to show the nature of the original transaction or indebtedness, or to give the items constituting the account. It is sufficient to prove some existing antecedent debt or demand between the parties respecting which a balance was struck.—Stevens v. Tuller, 4 Mich. 387; Albrecht v. Gies, 33 Mich. 389.

¶ 37. The admission in evidence, in an action upon an account stated, of an account between the parties tending to show dealings between them, is not error where the other evidence tends to show that such dealings had been examined and carried into the balance agreed upon.—Albrecht v. Gies, 33 Mich. 389.

¶ 38. In a suit for claims that entered into an account stated, evidence of claims that arose afterwards is irrelevant.—Hillebrands v. Nibbelink, 40 Mich. 646.

¶ 39. In an action upon an account stated for goods sold the testimony of a third person to whom they had been previously offered is admissible to identify the articles.—Sager v. Tupper, 38 Mich. 258.

¶ 40. Plaintiff had a running account with defendant for beer sold the latter. Plaintiff's agent called upon defendant and after going over accounts a written statement of the sum due plaintiff was signed by defendant. In a suit on such statement, the defendant testified that plaintiff agreed to allow against such statement a claim for damages for defective beer furnished plaintiff. Held, such evidence was admissible to show that the statement signed was not intended as a final statement of account.—Buckeye Brewing Co. v. Eymer, 162 Mich. 294.

¶ 41. A foreign judgment based on the common counts is not evidence of an account stated in an action pleaded in that form.—Gooding v. Hingston, 20 Mich. 439.

¶ 42. A promissory note, given to cover the amount of various items owing by the maker to the payee, is, under the circumstances, prima facie evidence of an account stated between the parties, the burden of rebutting the presumption being upon the payee of the note.—Maybury v. Berkery, 102 Mich. 126.

¶ 43. Where a merchant furnishes goods to workmen on orders from their employer and receives his pay from the employer on presentation of the orders, the amount being fixed by the orders and deducted from the wages of the workman, the arrangement is evidence of an account stated.—Bull v. Brockway, 48 Mich. 523.

¶ 44. Testimony that the parties met for the purpose of a settlement, that the accounts were gone over in detail, that a small balance was due the defendant and that the plaintiff made no further claim for six years, is sufficient to support a verdict of settlement.—Stevens v. Beardsley, 134 Mich. 506.

§ 9. ——Law and fact questions; instructions.

See also ante ¶¶ 27, 29.
Sufficiency of evidence to require submission of credibility to jury, see Instructions; Trial.

¶ 45. Evidence tending to show that the parties met and settled accounts, and that a balance was struck and agreed upon, is admissible to prove an account stated, and is sufficient to authorize the submission of the question as one of fact to the jury.—Albrecht v. Gies, 33 Mich. 389.

¶ 46. There was testimony that defendant asked plaintiff how much it needed to square their account, and said "if I pay you $50 more it ought to make us square," and that plaintiff replied, "if you want to pay me $50 in cash I will call it square." Defendant afterward made payments from time to time, but not to the amount of $50. Held, that it was for the jury to determine whether it was understood between the parties that the account between them was stated at $50. —Burritt v. Villenuve, 92 Mich. 282.

¶ 47. A. sent B. a check for an amount, "As per statement rendered, . . . being in full settlement of all commissions, etc., due you." B. immediately notified A. of a mistake in the amount, and in a suit against A. testified that he accepted the check under protest. Held, that it was for the jury to decide whether there was an account stated between the parties.—Rosenfield v. Fortier, 94 Mich. 29.

¶ 48. It is for the jury to say whether a presumption that a note was given in settlement of numerous items of indebtedness has been overcome, where there was evidence of subsequent payments which the payee endeavored to meet by proof of other indebtedness to which they were applied.—Maybury v. Berkery, 102 Mich. 126.

¶ 49. A firm was sued on an account and admitted its correctness. Plaintiff testified that one of the firm had admitted the correctness of the bill in conversation, but had said that he did not believe he was responsible on it. Held, that there was no evidence to go to the jury.—Harris v. Woodard, 40 Mich. 408.

¶ 50. Where statements of an account are repeatedly sent to a partnership, and are received, and no objection made, and the partners are informed by the vendor of the kinds of goods being bought by a partner's wife on the partnership account, there is evidence to go to jury of an account stated. —P. Hoffmaster Sons Co. v. Hodges, 154 Mich. 641.

¶ 51. An instruction requiring a debtor to object to an account stated within a reasonable time, and fixing thirty days as a reasonable time, is not strictly accurate, but the giving of such an instruction is not prejudicial error, where the evidence shows no distinct error in the account and it is presumptively accurate.—Raub v. Nisbett, 118 Mich. 248.

¶ 52. An instruction in assumpsit on an account stated, that in order for the plaintiff to recover it must not only appear that the contract (stated account) was made but that the defendants understood the amount they were to pay plaintiff, was not erroneous as conveying to the jury the thought that, before there could be an account stated, the parties must have agreed upon the amount thereof represented by figures; where plaintiff contended that defendants agreed to reimburse him for the difference between the sale price of his stock in a certain company and the amount he paid therefor, and the defendants denied both having made such agreement and having knowledge of what plaintiff paid for such stock.—Wood v. O'Callaghan, 140 Mich. 598.

ACCOUNTING SUITS.

TREATS of suits to ascertain the accountability between parties having diverse dealings with or for each other, to settle their mutual rights, and to enforce them as so adjusted. Accountings in particular relations, such as Partnership, Trusts and Agency, or in relation to particular rights, such as Mortgages, or of particular things or estates, such as Estates of Decedents, are treated as parts of such topics.

¶ 1. A suit to recover moneys alleged to have been wrongfully taken cannot be strictly called a suit for an accounting any more than can any action for money had and received.—Bay City Bridge Co. v. Van Etten, 36 Mich. 210.

§ 2. Grounds and occasion, and defenses.

See also post §§ 3-7.

General grounds for equitable relief, see Equity.

Conclusion of party by accord and satisfaction, see Accord and Satisfaction, §§ 13, 14.

¶ 2. A court cannot enter upon an original accounting on a bill which is so deficient in equities as to leave an existing settlement in force.—Churchill Township v. Cummings Township, 51 Mich. 446.

¶ 3. Where a bill for an accounting for personal property fails to show any uncertainty as to the identity of the property or any depreciation thereof, and simply seeks to establish an undivided one-half interest in it, the remedy at law is adequate and equity has no jurisdiction.—Moody v. Macomber, 158 Mich, 209.

¶ 4. Defendants were sureties of a state treasurer for his first term; complainant his surety for the second term. Complainant, claiming that the treasurer's default took place during the first term, filed a bill for an accounting and alleged that the treasurer at the beginning of his second term had given a receipt in full to himself as treasurer of the preceding term. The bill did not set forth the receipt, nor show for what amount it was given or should have been given, or ask for any relief on account of said receipt. Held, equity had no jurisdiction to intervene on the ground of relieving complainant from the effect of said receipt.—Title Guaranty & Surety Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 167 Mich. 535.

¶ 5. Defendant surety companies were sureties for various amounts on a state treasurer's bond for his first term. Claimant was surety for said treasurer for his second term. The treasurer defaulted, and complainant claimed that such default occurred during the first term. Held, equity had no jurisdiction to entertain complainant's bill for an accounting on the ground of multiplicity of suits.—Title Guaranty & Surety Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 167 Mich. 535.

¶ 6. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case a school district was allowed to maintain a bill against another district for an account of taxes belonging to complainant. —Oshtemo School Dist. No. 13 v. Dean, 17 Mich. 223.

¶ 7. Complainant brought a bill against defendant asking for an accounting for money furnished to the defendant to be used in running the business of a corporation.

on the ground that the money was furnished on the fraudulent representations of the defendant. Held, that since, in fact, the alleged representations were made after the money was furnished, the bill would not lie on the ground of fraud.—Monroe v. Bushnell, 158 Mich. 115.

In trusts, see Trusts, XI; Estates of Decedents, XII; Guardianship, V; Agency, IV, B; and the like.

By assignee for creditors, see Assignments for Creditors, § 29.

By receivers, see Receivers, V; Corporations, XXIII.

¶ 8. The existence of fiduciary relations between the parties is sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon a court of equity whenever the duty rests upon defendant to render an account.—Petrie v. Torrent, 88 Mich. 43.

¶ 9. The right to an accounting in equity is incident to most trust relations, and is not cut off by waiving sworn answer.—Cochrane v. Adams, 50 Mich. 16; Darrah v. Boyce, 62 Mich. 480.

¶ 10. Persons who have the money of other people in their keeping are not relieved from accounting, even in cases where public interests are concerned, on the grounds that the source from which the money came was improper, if no question of public policy is involved.—Richardson v. Welch, 47 Mich. 309.

¶ 11. The court's jurisdiction of an employer's accounting suit is not ousted by the fact that the acts complained of impute to defendant the commission of a criminal offense, and that if he were compelled to render an accounting it might trend towards evidence forming the basis of a criminal accusation.—Warren v. Holbrook, 95 Mich, 185.

¶ 12. In a bill for accounting against the husband brought by the administrator of the wife's estate, equity will not apply the statutes of limitation to defeat the claim of the complainant where it appears that fiduciary relations existed between the defendant and the deceased.—Harper v. Corcoran, 166 Mich. 474.

¶ 13. Where a husband during the lifetime of his deceased wife has obtained possession of certificates of deposit and other property belonging to her, a bill brought by her administrator will lie to compel the husband to account for all property of the deceased retained by him.—Harper v. Corcoran, 166 Mich. 474.

¶ 13a. On bill for an accounting the existence of a bare agency is not sufficient to confer equitable jurisdiction, but equity will take jurisdiction when out of such agency there arise lengthy and complicated accounts, the need of discovery, or the existence of fiduciary or trust relations.—Excelsior Wrapper Co. v. Yund, 176 Mich. 372.

¶ 13c. Where fiduciary relations exist, or where fraud is charged, equity has jurisdiction to compel an accounting, and accordingly may call a personal representative to account for fraud on an heir.—Powell v. Pennock, 181 Mich. 588.

See also post ¶ 20.

¶ 14. To sustain a bill for an accounting there must be mutual demands, a series of transactions on one side and payments on the other, and there can be no accounting where all the items are on one side and the bill shows no items of which the complainant is not fully informed.—Laubengayer v. Rohde, 167 Mich. 605.

¶ 15. Equity has jurisdiction in a bill for an accounting, even though the accounts are all on one side, where the contracts involved are intricate, and the machinery of the law court is for that reason inadequate.—Kimmerle v. Dowagiac Gas Co., 159 Mich. 34.

¶ 16. A suit in equity for an accounting is proper, though the accounts are all on one side, if there are circumstances of great complication or difficulty in the way of adequate relief at law.—Blodgett v. Foster, 114 Mich. 688.

¶ 17. Defendants were sureties of a state treasurer during his first term of office. Complainant was his surety during the second term. Said treasurer defaulted, and resigned in the first year of the second term. Complainant brought a bill for accounting, claiming that the default occurred during the first term of office and asking for an accounting as to liability between itself and defendants. Held, equity had no jurisdiction, since there were no mutual dealings between the parties and since each of the parties had a separate legal defense to any suit prosecuted by the state.—Title Guaranty & Surety Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 167 Mich. 535.

Of royalties and profits of mines or patents, see Mines; Patents.
Terminal contracts of railroads and the like, see Railroads, VII.

Between vendors and purchasers, see Vendors and Purchasers, IX, XI.

¶ 18. A claim which, in effect, is merely for damages for breach of contract, no actual fraud being charged, and it not being alleged that the defendant is irresponsible, cannot sustain a suit in equity for an accounting. —Linn v. Gunn, 56 Mich. 447.

¶ 19. Equity has jurisdiction to compel an accounting where complainant has, in good faith, paid money to defendant corporation under a contract which he supposed was valid, but which in fact was fraudulent, though complainant, after ascertaining the fraudulent character of the contract and that it was ultra vires, refused to continue payments under the contracts. (Following Edwards v. Michigan Tontine Inv. Co., 132 Mich. 1.)—Bale v. Michigan Tontine Inv. Co., 132 Mich. 479.

¶ 20. A bill for an accounting set out three lumbering contracts, together with two supplemental ones, involving many thousands of dollars, and extending over a long period of time. The lumber was divided into a great variety of grades, each grade having a separate price. The payments made under the contracts were numerous, and extended through a series of years. There was controversy as to whether certain moneys had been properly expended for insurance, and also as to whether other lumber had been shipped in place of a portion burned. Held, that complicated circumstances were shown which justified equity in taking jurisdiction. —Blodgett v. Foster, 114 Mich. 688.

¶ 21. In an action for a fraudulent breach of a contract whereby a defendant corporation agreed to purchase certain patents of the plaintiff and to employ him, paying him a salary and a portion of the profits, it being alleged that the profits were destroyed, and where a large number of books and accounts would have to be examined to determine the plaintiff's damages, it cannot be urged that the case must be tried by a court of equity, as the law court may refer the accounts to a referee (How. St., § 7378), or an auditor (secs. 7386, 7391).—Church v. Anti-Kalsomine Co., 118 Mich. 219.

¶ 22. Persons who have by contract acquired an equitable interest in a machine and the patents thereon, have a right to the protection of that interest by an accounting in equity, regardless of whether the contract is such that it would be specifically enforced or not.—Caulkins v. Lavigne, 156 Mich. 89.

General equity practice, see Equity.

¶ 23. Complainant's assignor made contracts with one Harrison, a promoter, which the defendant, a newly-organized corporation, assumed. The City Bank acted as trustee of the assets in the reorganization. Held, in a bill for an accounting on the contracts, that the defendant, the bank, and Harrison were properly made parties defendant.—Kimmerle v. Dowagiac Gas Co., 159 Mich. 34.

¶ 24. The defendant, a newly-organized corporation, adopted a contract liability entered into by its promoter, one Harrison, with one Lyle. Lyle's trustee in bankruptcy sought, by bill, for an accounting and the collection of the money due under the contract. Held, the allegation in the bill of insolvency of the defendant was an unnecessary averment.—Kimmerle v. Dowagiac Gas Co., 159 Mich. 34.

¶ 25. Where, in a bill against a defendant corporation for an accounting on a contract liability, an averment that complainant tried to secure a settlement is necessary, an allegation is sufficient for that purpose which states that one Harrison was subtantially the owner of the corporation; that he refused to meet the liability; and that complainant was denied the privilege of examining the books and records, and was informed they had been removed from the state.—Kimmerle v. Dowagiac Gas Co., 159 Mich. 34.

¶ 26. A bill in equity seeking to obtain a decree establishing the rights and interests of parties in real estate held by the complainant as trustee, under a purchase on joint account of certain real estate, which also seeks an accounting between the parties and the prevention of an action at law, need not formally allege that the complainant has not a complete and adequate remedy at law, as the facts stated confer the jurisdiction.—Lieberman v. Sloman, 118 Mich. 355.

¶ 27. In a suit by the heirs of one of two persons who had business dealings together though not as partners, resulting in mutual accounts, which were rendered on one occasion when each included interest on the items, where it appeared that their relation was practically that of debtor and tenant on the one side and creditor and landlord on the other, an agreement to pay interest is sufficiently admitted by an answer and crossbill which prays the court to state the account between the parties and compute interest thereon at the legal rate.—Gay v. Berkey, 137 Mich. 658.

¶ 27a. A bill for an accounting which is demurred to makes out a case for accounting and equitable relief where it is clearly alleged that trust relations are involved, that complainant intrusted defendant with certain money to be expended for a specific purpose for which he has neglected and refused to account, that the dealings involve an account with complicated items and a series of transactions with mutual demands, and that many items and transactions are solely within the knowledge of defendant.—Excelsior Wrapper Co. v. Yund, 176 Mich. 372.

Hearing and evidence after accounting is ordered and for purpose of proving and stating items, see post §§ 10-14.

Discovery incident to accounting, see Discovery.

Fraud and evidence thereof to warrant accounting, see Fraud.

¶ 28. A bill for an accounting does not present a case for equitable relief unless the proof shows an agreement sufficiently clear and distinct to support it.—Eccard v. Brush, 48 Mich. 8.

¶ 29. In an accounting by an employee, under a decree therefor in a suit brought by his employer, the defendant cannot be compelled to disclose anything tending to criminate himself, but this does not prevent the trial of the issue, in anticipation of the decree, under the rules of evidence in civil cases.—Warren v. Holbrook, 95 Mich. 185.

¶ 30. On a bill for an accounting for a deficit the rules applicable to proof in civil cases must be observed, and the receipt of the money by the defendant may be shown by any competent testimony fairly tending to prove it, either alone or in connection with other circumstances.—University of Michigan v. Rose, 45 Mich. 284.

¶ 31. A bill for an accounting, brought by the regents of the University of Michigan against the director of the chemical laboratory and his assistants, whose duty it was to pay over to the director the money which he received, though both were responsible to the complainant, charged them with a deficit in their accounts, and it was stipulated that each was to be held accountable for so much money as came into his own hands. The stipulation fixed, also, the amount of the entire deficit. Held, that proof that the assistant had received money would not alone establish liability against his superior, as it would not tend to show that the superior had received the money from the subordinate; and the burden of proving that he had received it was upon the complainant, and, as between the defendants, it was on the subordinate.—University of Michigan v. Rose, 45 Mich. 284.

¶ 32. Evidence consisting principally of the testimony of complainant as against that of defendant, held sufficient to show the acquisition by complainant of the right to use and administer the "Keeley cure" for the entire state of Michigan, and therefore to establish the right to an accounting for royalties from defendants.—Murray v. Fales, 142 Mich. 605.

§ 10. Reference and report.

Reference practice, see Reference.

Appointment of master or auditors, see Reference.

Denial on ground that law court can appoint auditor or referee, see ante ¶ 21.

¶ 34. It is not necessary that a reference be made to take an account as the circuit judge has a right to hear it.—Roelofs v. Wever, 119 Mich. 334.

¶ 35. Where an order of reference to take proofs necessary to determine the principles upon which the accounting in the case should proceed has been so acted upon as to furnish the basis for a final decree, just to all parties, the technical form of the order will be disregarded, and a final decree entered.—Perrin v. Lepper, 72 Mich. 454.

§ 11. Taking and stating; basis of the account.

Since each of the items of an account might, if separate, be a cause of action in itself, the right to have any given item charged or credited will depend on the law pertaining to that particular cause of action, or on the law of the relationship in which the accounting may be had. Consult the appropriate topics.

Applications of payment, see Payment, III.

Beginning of accountable period, see post § 12.

¶ 36. Where certain saw-mill premises were wrongfully detained and used for several years, their bare rental value, under a bargain entered into before possession was taken, is not a proper basis for an accounting under a decree directing that the defendant be charged "what the use of the property would have been worth to a prudent man, with proper use, after keeping it in reasonable repair."—Eldred v. Ryerson, 27 Mich. 526.

¶ 37. A party rightfully in possession of another's land cannot usually be properly charged with the consequences of accidental fires, but where he is holding wrongfully he cannot insist that he shall account for the value of the premises on the lowest admissible basis, and at the same time leave the party who is wrongfully kept out to take upon himself all risks.—Eldred v. Ryerson, 27 Mich. 526.

Items included in accord, see Accord and Satisfaction, ¶ 87.

¶ 38. An accounting for rents and profits on one side and for taxes and necessary expenses on the other cannot be so allowed as to cover one period for one party and another for the other.—Hack v. Norris, 46 Mich. 587.

¶ 39. Where the heirs of a grantor obtain a decree setting aside the deed, the accounting for rents and profits to which they may be entitled should date from the grantor's death, when the heirs would have become entitled to the property; but if the deed was obtained by unconscionable means and the defendants purchased with notice, the accounting may properly begin at the date of the deed itself, when the grantor came into possession and enjoyment of the property.—Hack v. Norris, 46 Mich. 587.

¶ 40. In a suit for an accounting defendant has the burden of proving what allowances should be made to him.—Thatcher v. Hayes, 54 Mich. 184.

¶ 41. In a civil proceeding for an accounting the silence of a defendant must be construed most strongly against him.—Warren v. Holbrook, 95 Mich. 185.

¶ 42. Where a party to an accounting claims that there is an error against him in an amount which he has himself previously reported as due to the other party, he has the burden of showing the error.—University of Michigan v. Rose, 45 Mich. 284.

¶ 43. On a bill for an accounting, defendant's account book containing entries in his handwriting, purporting on its face to be a account of receipts and disbursements on account of the property claimed by complainant is properly admitted as evidence of admissions of indebtedness. The objections that it started with a balance brought forward, and was only a continuation of an account, and that it was not shown that every item related to the property in controversy, are immaterial.—Nolan v. Garrison, 151 Mich. 138.

Decree for accounting incidental to other suit, see ante cross-references under § 7.

¶ 45. A court of equity, having acquired jurisdiction through a bill filed by a secured creditor for an accounting as to the property owned by a copartnership, may, where it appears upon the accounting that there is no property against which complainant can enforce his demand, retain jurisdiction and render a personal decree against the defendants, notwithstanding complainant has an adequate legal remedy.—McLean v. McLean, 109 Mich. 258.

¶ 46. Where the husband of the deceased wife has obtained possession, prior to her death, of money belonging to her and invested the same in real estate, a court of equity, upon a bill filed by the administrator for an accounting, will decree a lien against the real estate so purchased to secure the repayment of the money of the deceased therein invested.—Harper v. Corcoran, 166 Mich. 474.

¶ 47. Where pleadings present a case of cross claims, and whole account grows out of relations of parties and dealings with each other in view of and with reference to original contract, court is warranted, after ascertaining true balance, to proceed and close the controversy.—Lamoreaux v. Eggleston, 171 Mich. 201.

¶ 3. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 8930, providing that a wife may bar her right of dower by joining in the conveyance and acknowledging the same "as prescribed in the preceeding chapter," a wife's deed without proper acknowledgment will not operate at common law to bar her dower because th "preceding chapter" referred to has bee amended to allow acknowledgment by a mar ried woman the same as by feme sole instea of taking it separate and apart from he husband.—Maynard v. ¶ 7. A mortgagee cannot certify to the acknowledgment of the mortgage.—Laprad v. Sherwood, 79 Mich. 520.

¶ 8. An officer cannot take the acknowledgment of a deed to himself. But as under the statute parol trusts in land are void, and there is no resulting trust in favor of one who furnishes the consideration money for a conveyance, it is not a valid objection to an acknowledgment that the officer who took it was the real purchaser, but had the deed made to another person for his use.—Groesbeck v. Seely, 13 Mich. 329.

¶ 9. A deed on statutory foreclosure, executed by the under-sheriff who made the sale, pursuant to How. St., §§ 8501, 8505, which empowers either the sheriff or under-sheriff, can be acknowledged before the sheriff, if a notary, since as notary he does not act as sheriff.—Cook v. Foster, 96 Mich. 610.

¶ 11. There being no statute authorizing the acknowledgment of a conveyance through a sworn interpreter, where the officer is unacquainted with the grantor's language, it cannot be thus taken.—Dewey v. Campau, 4 Mich. 565.

¶ 12. A notary's certificate of acknowledgment is of little force when the person purporting to make the acknowledgment does not understand English and the notary has not explained the effect of the act in such person's own language and seen to it himself that it was understood.—Harrison v. Oakman, 56 Mich. 390.

¶ 13. The statute in regard to conveyances by married women must be strictly complied with.—Dewey v. Campau, 4 Mich. 565.

¶ 14. A notary has no right to certify anything that he does not know of his own knowledge by an intelligent interchange of conversation, and without relying on the aid or statements of others than the person whose acknowledgment he proposes to take. He must get what he certifies directly from the party, and, in the case of a woman, be fully assured of the freedom of her action.—Fisher v. Meister, 24 Mich. 447.

¶ 17. Under the code of 1833, to entitle a deed acknowledged or proved out of the territory to be recorded within it, it was necessary that it be executed and witnessed in the same manner that deeds acknowledged within the territory were required to be, though the proof or acknowledgment might be in accordance with the laws of the state or territory when it was taken.—Galpin v. Abbott, 6 Mich. 17.

Certification in other state that officer was competent and acknowledgment regular, see post §§ 16, 17.

¶ 18. A certificate that, "the signer and sealer of the subjoined deed" acknowledged it, is good; if the acknowledgment was somewhere on the same sheet with the deed it is immaterial where.—Munroe v. Eastman, 31 Mich. 283.

¶ 19. Under Michigan Laws 1833, p. 279, § 2, providing that an acknowledgment of a deed might be made before a justice of the peace and that the deed should be entitled to record upon the indorsement on the deed of a certificate of the acknowledgment and signing by the person before whom the same was taken, the evidence of an acknowledgment was complete when the officer before whom it was taken signed a certificate to that effect indorsed on the deed and no authentication of the official character of the officer was necessary, the statement of his official character necessarily including a statement of his official authority.—Elwood v. Flannigan, 104 U. S. 562, 26 L. ed. 842.

¶ 20. A certificate of acknowledgment, beginning "State of Michigan, County of Calhoun," and in the body describing the officer as "a Notary Public in and for Eaton County," then signed by him with "Notary Public in and for Eaton Co.," appended, is not objectionable as failing to show that the notary was such for Eaton County, Michigan, since if he had merely signed his name as notary public it would have been sufficient. —Lamb v. Lamb, 139 Mich. 166.

Calling mortgage "deed," see also post ¶ 30.

¶ 21. It is the policy of the law to uphold certificates of acknowledgment when substance is found, and not suffer conveyances or the proof of them to be defeated by technical or unsubstantial objections.—Morse v. Hewett, 28 Mich. 481.

¶ 22. Certificates of acknowledgment will be upheld wherever possible, and for that purpose a court will resort, if necessary, to the instrument to which the certificate is attached.—Nelson v. Graff, 44 Mich. 433.

¶ 23. Whenever substance is found in a certificate of acknowledgment, obvious clerical errors and all technical omissions and defects will be disregarded, and, in order to uphold it, the certificate will be read in connection with the instrument and in the light of the surrounding circumstances.—King v. Merritt, 67 Mich. 194.

¶ 24. A certificate of acknowledgment was headed "The State of New York, New York county, ss," and signed "Edwin F. Corey. Com. for the State of Michigan in New York." In the body of the certificate the acknowledging officer was described as "a commissioner for the state of Michigan within and for said county." The official seal was a red paper wafer impressed with the words "Edwin ——, Commissioner of Deeds for Michigan." The certificate did not recite that the acknowledging officer was appointed and commissioned by the governor. Held, that it was sufficient to entitle the deed to which it was attached to be admitted in evidence.—Sparrow v. Hovey, 41 Mich. 708.

Showing as to county appended to signature, see ante ¶ 20.

¶ 25. The fact that the date of a deed is later than the date of its acknowledgment is no reason for excluding it from evidence; the date is not very important, and the acknowledgment authenticates the instrument. —Munroe v. Eastman, 31 Mich. 283.

¶ 26. Where a deed is dated February 20th, and purports to have been acknowledged on that day, but is indorsed with a certificate of its having been recorded February 18th, the discrepancy is not of itself suspicious, but, in the absence of any showing, is fairly referable to clerical mistake.—Munroe v. Eastman, 31 Mich. 283.

¶ 27. A certificate of acknowledgment in these words, "signed, sealed and acknowledged in my presence the day and year aforesaid," and signed "J. J. K., Notary Public," is insufficient.—Cooper v. Smith, 75 Mich. 247.

Duty to be assured of identity, see ante §§ 6, 7.
Identification of acknowledging officer in certificate to foreign acknowledgment, see post § 17.

¶ 28. A certificate of acknowledgment containing after the grantor's name the words "to me known to be the same person described in, and who executed, the within instrument," clearly implied that the grantor was personally known to the officer who took the acknowledgment.—Brown v. McCormick, 28 Mich. 215.

¶ 29. A certificate of acknowledgment that certifies that "the signer and sealer of the subjoined deed" personally came before the acknowledging officer, and acknowledged that he executed the deed "for the purpose therein expressed," is in compliance with the statutes in force in 1837 (2 Terr. L., p. 361), which only required that it should "be acknowledged by the party or parties executing the same"; this certificate implies knowledge on the part of the officer that the party acknowledging was the same who executed the instrument. —Munroe v. Eastman, 31 Mich. 283.

¶ 30. The certificate of acknowledgment attached to a deed recited that the grantors came before the officer and acknowledged that they had executed "the foregoing mortgage." Held to be evidently a clerical error, which did not vitiate.—Ives v. Kimball, 1 Mich. 308.

¶ 31. A certificate that the grantor appeared before the officer "and acknowledged that —— —— executed the said deed" does not show an acknowledgment by such grantor, and is fatally defective.—Buell v. Irwin, 24 Mich. 145.

¶ 32. If officer taking acknowledgment is satisfied as to the parties' identity, it seems that his certificate stating that he is "satisfied" that the parties appearing before him "are the grantors," etc., is sufficient.—Culbertson v. H. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326. 32 L. ed. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1136.

¶ 33. A certificate of acknowledgment of a deed by a justice of the peace is sufficient where it contains a statement that a certain person, naming him, an Indian chief, came before him and made the necessary acknowledgment, although it contains no statement that the grantor was known to the justice.—Elwood v. Flannigan, 104 U. S. 562, 26 L. ed. 842.

Duty in making inquiry, see ante §§ 6-8.

¶ 34. A certificate in accordance with Sess. L. 1840, p. 167, except that it did not state the acknowledgment of a married woman to have been on a private examination, was held void.—Sibley v. Johnson, 1 Mich. 380.

¶ 35. Where the statute required the certificate to show that the wife "acknowledged that she had executed the deed separately and apart from her husband," it was held that a certificate that she "stated" she had executed, etc., was insufficient.—Dewey v. Campau, 4 Mich. 565.

¶ 36. The certificate is void unless it shows that the acknowledgment was taken "separately" as well as "apart" from the husband. —Dewey v. Campau, 4 Mich. 565.

¶ 37. The Act of 1840 (Sess. L., p. 167) provided that rights of dower should not be conveyed, unless by deed executed by the wife, and acknowledged by her "on a private examination, separate and apart from her husband, that she executed the deed without fear or compulsion from anyone." It was held that a certificate in accordance with the prior law, that the wife acknowledged the execution without any fear or compulsion of her husband, was insufficient to bar dower under this act.—Barstow v. Smith, W. 394.

¶ 38. A certificate of acknowledgment read as follows: "And the said A., being examined by me separate from her husband, acknowledged that she executed the same for the purpose in it specified with fear or compulsion of any person." Held, that the word "with" being clearly a clerical error for "without," the certificate was good.—King v. Merritt, 67 Mich. 194.

¶ 39. The commissioner's seal is necessary to authenticate the certificate of a commissioner appointed by the governor of Michigan to take acknowledgments of deeds in another state.—Buell v. Irwin, 24 Mich. 145.

¶ 40. Where a deed was acknowledged before a commissioner of deeds of this state, appointed for another state, and the certificate of acknowledgment has his signature and seal to it, it is sufficient, notwithstanding the certificate does not state that it was given under his hand and seal.—Harrington v. Fish, 10 Mich. 415.

¶ 42. The officer need not add the county for which he acts to his official signature when it appears in the caption to the certificate.—Wright v. Wilson, 17 Mich. 192.

¶ 43. A deed by husband and wife had appended to it two certificates, one of the acknowledgment by the husband, and the other of the acknowledgment by the wife. One was directly above the other; and the lower one alone was signed. Held, that they should be regarded as one certificate and were sufficiently signed.—Wright v. Wilson, 17 Mich. 192.

¶ 44. The omission of a notary to sign an acknowledgment to a deed until after the death of the grantor does not render it invalid.—Taft v. Simpson, 125 Mich. 206.

Certificate of the officer to the facts of acknowledgment, see ante §§ 9-15.

Under Uniform Law, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11768, 11769 (form).

¶ 45. Authenticating certificate as to notary's official character and genuineness of his signature, and as to execution and acknowledgment according to laws of other state, is prerequisite to recording.—Dohm v. Haskin, 88 Mich. 144.

¶ 46. An assignment of a Michigan mortgage, acknowledged before a commissioner of deeds for Michigan in the state of New York, as evidenced by his official certificate and seal, is entitled to record without any certificate that the instrument is executed according to the laws of the state of New York.—Gray v. Waldron, 101 Mich. 612.

¶ 47. Where a deed is executed and acknowledged in another state the certificate of the clerk to the official character and genuineness of signature of the acknowledging officer, and to the execution and acknowledgment of the instrument according to the laws of the state, must have attached thereto the seal required by statute.—Hoban v. Cable, 102 Mich. 206.

¶ 48. A deed executed and acknowledged in another state could not be recorded in Michigan under the law of 1840, unless the clerk's certificate of its due execution was under seal.—Pope v. Cutler, 34 Mich. 150.

¶ 49. A deed without witnesses, made and executed in another state in 1843, is not sufficiently authenticated by a clerk's certificate, made in 1855, which does not purport to come from a clerk of a court of record.—Donahue v. Klassner, 22 Mich. 252.

¶ 50. A certificate by a county clerk in New York of the due execution of a deed is sufficient, though his status as clerk of a court of record is not set forth; the court will take judicial cognizance, for the purpose of sustaining the certificate, of the constitutional provision in that state by which the clerk of that county is made clerk of the supreme court and the court is given the character of a court of record.—Morse v. Hewett, 28 Mich. 481; Munroe v. Eastman, 31 Mich. 283.

¶ 51. The clerk's certificate of the due execution of a deed executed in another state is no part of the deed, nor is it essential to its validity.—Harrington v. Fish, 10 Mich. 415.

Effect of curative acts, see post §§ 22, 23.
Under earlier laws, see also post ¶ 63.

¶ 53. A certificate which sets forth th the person "whose name is subscribed to t certificate of the proof or acknowledgment the annexed instrument, and thereon writte was at the time of taking such proof or a knowledgment a justice of the peace in a for said county, elected, sworn and du authorized to take the same," and certifies the genuineness of his signature, and a that "the annexed instrument is executed a cording to the laws of this state," fairly i ports that the identical acknowledgment question was a legal one in the state whe taken, and that the justice was authorized make it.—Morse v. Hewett, 28 Mich. 481.

¶ 54. A clerk's certificate attached to deed executed and acknowledged in Frankl county, Massachusetts, certifying to the of cial capacity of the justice of the peace wl took the acknowledgment, etc., describing t certifying officer as clerk of the judicial cou of the commonwealth of Massachusetts f the county of Franklin, signed by the cle and sealed with the seal of the supreme j dicial court of said commonwealth, is a suf cient compliance with Comp. L. 1857, § 272 Laws 1861, p. 17, § 3 (How. St., §§ 566 5726).—Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 41(

¶ 55. The only description of official cha acter of the person acknowledging a deed another state was "J. P." appended to h name. The certificate prescribed by statu in case of the execution of a deed in anoth state was attached in due form, and attest the official character of the acknowledgi officer as a justice of the peace. Held su cient.—Final v. Backus, 18 Mich. 218.

¶ 56. A deed was executed and acknov edged in another state conveying land in t state. The certificate of the proper clerk w made and attached several years afterwar certifying that the deed was executed and knowledged according to the "existing" l of the state. Held a sufficient certificate entitle the deed to record.—Harrington Fish, 10 Mich. 415.

¶ 57. Where a deed was executed in N York in 1839, a proper certificate of the thentication of its due execution, made a attached to it in 1875, removed any previc defects in the proof of its formal executi and makes it admissible in evidence in Mic gan.—Healey v. Worth, 35 Mich. 166.

¶ 58. A deed cannot be excluded from e dence for a supposed ambiguity in the cler certificate in authenticating its execution a acknowledgment as follows: "I further c tify that the said instrument is executed and proved or acknowledged according to the laws of this state." The word "proved" is surplusage, as there is no certificate of proof to which it can apply.—Nelson v. Graff, 44 Mich. 433.

¶ 59. Where, under the act of April 12, 1827 (Code of 1833), a deed of lands within the territory of Michigan was proved or acknowledged in the state of New York, in conformity with the laws of that state, it was not necessary to entitle the deed to record within the territory that the acknowledgment be accompanied by a county clerk's certificate proving the official character and signature of the officer taking the acknowledgment.—Ives v. Kimball, 1 Mich. 308; Lacey v. Davis, 4 Mich. 140; Galpin v. Abbott, 6 Mich. 17.

¶ 60. Where the conveyance certified is of Michigan land and is executed in another state, it is shown to be valid when there is attached thereto a certificate of the proper clerk certifying to such officer's official character and to the fact that the acknowledgment was made according to the laws of such other state.—Culbertson v. H. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326, 32 L. ed. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1136.

¶ 61. The certificate of the clerk of a county in a foreign state that the person taking an acknowledgment to an annexed deed was a master in chancery and a notary in and for the county, and that such deed was executed, and the acknowledgment taken, according to the laws of such foreign state, makes valid an acknowledgment in such foreign state by a master in chancery and notary, whose certificate recited that the parties, naming them, personally appeared before him, "who, I am satisfied are the grantors in the within deed of conveyance," under How. St. § 5660, providing that where acknowledgments are taken without the state the clerk certifying to the official character of the officer shall also state "that the deed is executed and acknowledged according to the laws of such state."—Culbertson v. H. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326, 32 L. Ed. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1136.

¶ 63. A deed of Michigan lands executed in New York in March, 1837, before two subscribing witnesses, and acknowledged before a commissioner of deeds, was entitled to record in Michigan under the laws then prevailing, although the clerk's certificate attached to the acknowledgment was not authenticated by a seal.—Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 37 Mich. 422.

¶ 64. It is only necessary that the acknowledgment conform to the law existing when it was made; hence an objection to the introduction in evidence of the record of a deed executed in another state, and certified so as to entitle it to record under the law then in force in this state, on the ground that the certificate does not show another fact made essential by a later statute, is untenable.—McCammon v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 103 Mich. 104.

Acknowledgment by interested officer, see ante § 5.
Effect of person's ignorance of English language, see ante ¶ 12.
As to attestation by two witnesses, where some witnessed particular signature, see ante ¶ 4.

¶ 65. A genuine certificate of acknowledgment is presumptive evidence of the genuineness of the document to which it is attached.—Cameron v. Culkins, 44 Mich. 531.

¶ 66. A certificate of acknowledgment in proper form raises a presumption of the execution of the paper as stated therein that cannot be overcome except by clear and satisfactory evidence.—Shelden v. Freeman, 116 Mich. 646.

¶ 68. A certificate of acknowledgment carries with it the presumption that the officer making it has certified to the truth, and the party attacking it has the burden of proof. —Dikeman v. Arnold, 78 Mich. 455.

¶ 69. The regularity of acknowledgment taken before a reputable acknowledging officer is presumed, and the burden of proof is with the party contesting the instrument to show misconduct on the part of the officer, or forgery, or other irregularity in the instrument that he ought to have discovered.—Hourtienne v. Schnoor, 33 Mich. 274.

¶ 70. Certificates of acknowledgment may be impugned by proof of fraud or duress, but not by a mere denial of the facts certified, made on oath by the party purporting to make the acknowledgment, and opposed by equally strong evidence in support of such certificate. —Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 Mich. 208.

¶ 71. A notarial certificate is prima facie but not conclusive evidence of the authority of the instrument to which it is attached, and its force may be rebutted by the testimony of the person who appears to have executed the instrument.—Camp v. Carpenter, 52 Mich. 375.

¶ 72. If officer taking acknowledgment is satisfied as to parties' identity, the court cannot inquire into evidence basing his conclusion and it seems that his certificate stating that he is "satisfied" that the parties appearing before him "are the grantors," etc., is sufficient. At any rate, where the conveyance certified is of Michigan land and is executed in another state, it is shown to be valid when there is attached thereto a certificate of the proper clerk certifying to such officer's official character and to the fact that the acknowledgment was made according to the laws of such other state.—Culbertson v. H. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326, 32 L. ed. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1136.

What amounts to invalidating defect, see ante §§ 9-15.
Effect on the certificate itself of informalities therein, see also ante § 10.
Effect of the acknowledgment, its purpose and conclusiveness, see ante §§ 18-20.

¶ 73. The validity of a deed, as between the parties, is not necessarily affected by defective acknowledgments or certificates of acknowledgment, though they may not entitle it to record, or make it admissible in evidence without proof of the signatures. But if the defects are remedied before trial the deed becomes effective and admissible in evidence.—Taylor v. Youngs, 48 Mich. 268.

¶ 74. A deed or a power of attorney may be valid as between the parties and completely bind the grantor without any acknowledgment.—People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

¶ 75. A deed good at common law is effective to transfer the property regardless of its being entitled to recordation.—Taft v. Simpson, 125 Mich. 206.

¶ 77. Where a husband conveys his own title the deed is good as against him, even though the certificate of acknowledgment does not conform to the law concerning married women.—Conrad v. Long, 33 Mich. 78.

¶ 78. An acknowledgment is not one of the constituent facts of a conveyance proper. Even if bad, the deed, if a good common-law conveyance, will prove a transfer of title as between the parties, and as against all others rightly chargeable with notice.—Brown v. McCormick, 28 Mich. 215; Price v. Haynes, 37 Mich. 487.

¶ 79. The acknowledgment of an assignment of a mortgage is no part of the instrument of assignment.—Livingston v. Jones, H. 165.

¶ 80. A mortgage on a homestead will not be set aside merely because the acknowledgment of the mortgagor's wife was taken in her husband's presence unless there is some showing that she acted under compulsion.— Norton v. Nichols, 35 Mich. 148.

¶ 81. The acknowledgment of a deed before a notary public, who is an interested party, does not impair the validity of the deed, since title would pass without any acknowledgment whatever, and hence such objection goes, at most, to the admissibility of the deed in evidence.—Schwartz v. Woodruff, 132 Mich. 513.

¶ 83. Under the Confirming Act of 1861, How. St., §§ 5724, 5727, the record of a deed defectively executed is not made evidence of a valid sale without the production of the deed itself. The law makes such a record "hereafter operate as legal notice of all the rights secured by such instrument;" but does not render it of any validity except for notice.—Brown v. Cady, 11 Mich. 535.

¶ 84. The record of a deed defectively acknowledged is not evidence of the original instrument; but where the instrument was made in good faith and for a valuable consideration, and was intended to operate as a conveyance, the record operates as a notice of the rights secured by the deed (Laws 1861, p. 16, How. St., §§ 5724, 5727).—Brown v. McCormick, 28 Mich. 215.

¶ 85. Laws 1875, p. 128 (How. St., § 4015), in making valid the conveyances of mining and manufacturing corporations made in good faith though not according to law, does not make them presumptive evidence of the rightful character of the sale. A deed in proper form and a sale in good faith for value must be clearly proved.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Atkinson, 44 Mich. 166.

¶ 86. The curative act confirming deeds irregularly executed (Laws 1861, p. 16, How. St., §§ 5724, 5727) was not repealed by Laws 1867, p. 139, How. St., § 5707, forbidding the record of deeds without due acknowledgment. The latter is simply intended to diminish the frequency of occasions for applying the former law.—Brown v. McCormick, 28 Mich. 215.

¶ 87. In order to bring a deed, executed in another state not in compliance with our laws, within the saving of the Act of 1861, How. St., § 5724, it is necessary to show that, although not valid under the laws of Michigan as a conveyance for all purposes, it was executed according to the laws of the state where the execution took place, as well as regularly acknowledged. And these facts cannot be presumed without evidence.—Brown v. Cady, 11 Mich. 535.

¶ 89. Laws 1861, p. 16, § 3, How. St., § 5726, does not cure the defect caused by the want of the commissioner's seal to the certificate of an acknowledgment taken by a Michigan commissioner of the execution of a deed made in another state; or caused by the failure of the certificate to show that the grantor acknowledged that he executed the deed.—Buell v. Irwin, 24 Mich. 145.

¶ 90. The saving provisions of the Act of 1861, How. St., § 5724, do not apply to a deed without witnesses made and acknowledged in another state in 1843, and authenticated by a clerk's certificate attached in 1855, which does not purport to be made by the clerk of a court of record.—Donahue v. Klassner, 22 Mich. 252.

¶ 91. Under Laws 1861, p. 16, a deed that was executed before a commissioner of deeds in New York in 1839, and has attached to it a clerk's certificate to the commissioner's authority and the genuineness of the signature and the regularity of execution according to New York law, is not open to the objection that it had but one witness or was not acknowledged before the proper officer as provided by the laws in force at the time of its execution.—Brooks v. Fairchild, 36 Mich. 231.

¶ 92. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 4253, How. St., § 5727, which gives validity to certain defective instruments of conveyance and makes the registry thereof constructive notice, the record of a deed executed in New York in 1839, and recorded in Michigan in 1846, became legal notice of all rights under it, though lacking any clerk's certificate of the authentication of due execution until one was attached in 1875.—Healey v. Worth, 35 Mich. 166.

¶ 93. An ante-nuptial contract whereby the prospective husband agrees that certain lands shall on his death be conveyed to the wife, in case she survives him, otherwise the contract to be void, is a "conveyance" within the meaning of How. St., §§ 5645, 5727, and its record, though it has only one witness, is notice to a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee.—Aultman v. Pettys, 59 Mich. 482.

¶ 94. How. St., § 5727, mabing the record of certain instruments, executed in good faith "and for a valuable consideration," but defective in certain formal statutory requisites, notice of all the rights secured thereby, applies to and makes good a recorded but unacknowledged instrument, conveying land to the grantor's grandchildren, subject to life estates in her husband and son, and reciting and being upon a valuable consideration.—Lariverre v. Rains, 112 Mich. 276.

Duty in taking proofs and identifying persons, see ante § 6 et seq.

¶ 96. Recovery may be had on a notary's bond for his misfeasance in knowingly certifying the acknowledgment of a grantor who has not appeared before him, or in certifying an acknowledgment without reading it.—People ex rel. Curtiss v. Colby, 39 Mich. 456.

¶ 97. A notary's liability on his bond for falsely certifying to the acknowledgment of a mortgage cannot be made to depend upon whether the mortgagee has redeemed a prior mortgage and has so reduced the damages.—People ex rel. Curtiss v. Colby, 39 Mich. 456.

¶ 98. The condition of a notary's bond to faithfully discharge the duties of his office, is broken by his act in affixing a false certificate of acknowledgment to a mortgage to which he has forged the signatures, and the breach is actionable by one who is injured by the fraud.—Doran v. Butler, 74 Mich. 648.

¶ 3. One entitled to nominal damages only may yet have a right of action.—Chapel v. Smith, 80 Mich. 100.

¶ 4. A civil action is maintainable where the person complaining is of a class entitled to take advantage of the law, is a sufferer from the disobedience, is not himself a partaker in the wrong of which he complains, or is not otherwise precluded by the principles of the common law from his proper standing in court.—Syneszewski v. Schmidt, 153 Mich. 438; Lepard v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 166 Mich. 373.

¶ 6. One cannot be damnified by being deprived of the opportunity of doing what he has no right to do; e. g., of taking timber off lands when forbidden by contract of purchase.—Jennison v. Stone, 33 Mich. 99.

¶ 8. Damage alone does not give a right of action; wrong and damage must concur.—Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 212; Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 576; National Copper Co. v. Minnesota Mining Co., 57 Mich. 83.

¶ 9. A wrong to one person, though it may incidentally injure another, gives the latter no right to redress unless it wrongs him also.—Hall Lumber Co. v. Gustin, 54 Mich. 624.

Joinder and splitting causes in equity, since it involves the doctrine that equity will do complete relief and other doctrines peculiar to equity, is treated in Equity.

¶ 11. The principle which prevents the splitting up of causes of action and forbids double vexation for the same thing is a rule of justice, and not to be classed among technicalities. It was intended to suppress serious grievances.—Dutton v. Shaw, 35 Mich. 431.

¶ 12. While the law does not favor the unnecessary splitting up of causes of action, it does not require that two or more distinct and different causes of action shall be brought into one litigation. The nearer the controversy is to being single and distinct the more likely the jury is to dispose of it with full intelligence and justice.—Morehouse v. Baker, 48 Mich. 335.

¶ 13. A single cause of action even for a tort cannot be split up so as to permit separate actions for different parts thereof.—Continental Ins. Co. v. H. M. Loud & Sons Lumber Co., 93 Mich. 139.

¶ 14. The rule that a single cause of action cannot be split and made the subject of several actions applies generally where the cause is in favor of several persons jointly or against several persons jointly.—Jensen v. Gamble, 191 Mich. 233.

¶ 15. A defendant having interposed a set-off for $150 for an unpaid balance due on an executed contract, cannot split his cause of action and withdraw that part over $100 so as to enable him to recover for it in a subsequent suit, where it embraces part of an indivisible balance.—Andreas v. Leavitt Twp. School Dist. No. 4, Fractional, 138 Mich. 54.

¶ 16. A party who proceeds in chancery to procure the annulment of a decree must set forth all the reasons he has against the validity of the deed and cannot allege one reason, have that determined against him and then bring suit for another reason.—Sayers v. Auditor General, 124 Mich. 259.

The time when right of action accrues generally arises in question on a plea of limitations or laches, which see in Limitations of Actions; Equity.

¶ 21. Pendency of another suit involving the same subject-matter is not a bar.—Near v. Mitchell, 23 Mich. 382; Sullings v. Goodyear Co., 36 Mich. 313.

¶ 22. Pendency of a prior suit in which there can be no recovery because it was prematurely brought, does not bar a new suit for the same cause of action.—Blackwood v. Brown, 34 Mich. 4.

¶ 23. Even though a decree in admiralty for a master's wages has been granted and affirmed on appeal, it not being satisfied, does not bar a common-law action for them.—People ex rel. Granger v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 27 Mich. 406; Murphy v. Granger, 32 Mich. 358.

¶ 24. The rule that title to land cannot be tried in a personal action, does not prevent the making of a defense in such an action (replevin) that the plaintiff had no title to the land from which the chattels (logs) were severed, since the judgment would not be a bar on the question of title.—Busch v. Nester, 70 Mich. 525, citing Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 Mich. 455.

The question when an action is commenced usually arises on an issue of limitations and will be treated usually in Limitations of Actions, V.

¶ 25. It seems that a suit is commenced when summons is taken out with the bona fide intention of placing it in the hands of an officer and having it served during its life.—Harvey v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 120 Mich. 601.

¶ 26. Inasmuch as the commencement of a suit requires the delivery or transmittal of a summons to an officer with the bona fide intention of having it served, such delivery or transmittal must be made within the statutory period after the injury on which the suit is based has occurred, and it is not enough that the writ may have issued within the period.—Dedenbach v. City of Detroit, 146 Mich. 710.

¶ 28. The rule that a suit in chancery begins for most purposes with the filing of the bill, applies where a defendant who has not answered dies, and the suit is revived by petition against his administrator.—Gordon v. Tyler, 53 Mich. 629.

¶ 29. The simultaneous issue of two writs of summons in the same case, tested in the names of different judges, cannot be considered as effectuating the commencement of distinct suits where the record exhibits the two as allied proceedings in one case.—Bogue v. Prentis, 47 Mich. 124.

See also ante ¶ 17.

The allegation of a cause of action pleaded as of a time certain and proof of one at another time presents a question of variance, as to which, see Pleading, X, and those portions of specific topics treating of actions and procedure, e. g., Contracts, X.

General rule as to admissibility of matters after commencement of action and of time pleaded, see Evidence, III, and also specific topics.

§ 8. Demand, notice and other prerequisites.

A demand, tender or notice may be requisite to fix the rights of the party under contract or to establish a tort by fixing a wrong. In this sense it is not so much a prerequisite of the action as a part of the cause of action, and will be treated with topics treating of the various causes of action. See Assignments; Contracts; Conversion; Negotiable Instruments; Replevin; Sales; Vendor and Purchaser; and the like.

§ 2. ——Duty to underpin or shore buildings.
§ 7. Rights as to trees, fences and party walls.

Rights of adjoinder and support of land bordering park or parkway, see Parks and Commons.

¶ 1. The owner of land has the right to excavate close to his boundary, but must take reasonable precautions to prevent the soil of the adjoining owner from falling; and he is liable, notwithstanding such precautions, for injury to his neighbor's land, if the soil falls from its own pressure and not from that of a superstructure.—Gildersleeve v. Hammond, 109 Mich. 431.

¶ 2. If one who makes an excavation takes reasonable precautions to protect the adjoining soil, he is not liable for injury either to land or superstructure by a fall caused by the pressure of the superstructure; but his failure to take such precautions renders him liable for injury both to land and superstructure if the soil falls solely by reason of such failure.—Gildersleeve v. Hammond, 109 Mich. 431.

¶ 3. The mere fact that the excavation of a lot adjoining premises of another on which a building is located with one of its walls up to the land causes the wall of such building to fall, does not establish liability of a contractor for injury to goods of a tenant of such building.—Horowitz v. Blay, 193 Mich. 498.

¶ 4. A landowner has a right to excavate to a depth of 114 feet to secure foundations for a building and no recovery can be had by adjoining owners, if reasonable precautions are taken to prevent their soil from falling, though there is a lateral movement of the soil, where no claim is made for injury to the land.—Bissell v. Ford, 176 Mich. 64.

¶ 5. Defendant who is sinking foundations for a building is not required to take extraordinary precautions to have at hand equipment to free the pits from water.—Bissell v. Ford, 176 Mich. 64.

Liability to adjoining landowner for injury to property caused by excavation, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 900-918.

Evidence, see post § 5.

¶ 6. Where the wall of a building is placed upon the line of a lot with a three-foot foundation under it, the adjacent owner or his employee is not required to support such wall by an underpinning before excavating such adjoining lot, especially where it appears that the soil is of a clay substance, and it does not appear that such wall would have given away except for the weight of the building resting upon it.—Horowitz v. Blay, 193 Mich. 498.

¶ 7. Although a contractor who is excavating a lot for the purpose of erecting a building adjoining a lot on which a building was constructed with a foundation built to the line is not required to furnish the labor and sustain the expense of constructing a support for the wall, he is bound to conduct the work of excavation with such ordinary care and skill as to avoid unnecessary injury to the building or its contents.—Horowitz v. Blay, 193 Mich. 498.

¶ 8. One who knowingly, intentionally, and wilfully removes the natural support to a building belonging to another, situated four and one-half feet from the boundary line, by excavating upon his own land, and allowing the soil, from its own pressure, to cave in and undermine the foundation of the building, is not relieved from liability for the resulting damage by the fact that the owner of the building saw the danger, and failed to shore up the property, especially where such owner was informed by the party excavating that he would protect the building.—Gildersleeve v. Hammond, 109 Mich. 431.

As dependent on looseness of soil, see also post § 4.

¶ 9. If one's land, which, but for a superstructure, would remain in its natural position with the lateral support removed, caves in because of the pressure of such superstructure, it is damnum absque injuria.—Gildersleeve v. Hammond, 109 Mich. 431.

¶ 10. The lateral support to which one's soil is entitled is such as is sufficient to support the soil in its natural condition; and if the pressure of a superstructure causes one's land to fall into an excavation made by the owner of the adjoining premises, the latter is not liable for injury to land or superstructure. —Hemsworth v. Cushing, 115 Mich. 92.

¶ 11. If a landowner in excavating to secure foundations for a building fails to take reasonable precautions to protect an adjoining owner's soil, he is liable for the injury to a building thereon if such building did not cause the movement of the soil.—Bissell v. Ford, 176 Mich. 64.

¶ 12. In an action for damages caused by the removal of the lateral support of plaintiff's land the kind of soil of which such support was comprised may be important in determining the amount of care required in removing it.—Bissell v. Ford, 176 Mich. 64.

¶ 13. If the lateral support of certain land is negligently removed and such land is injured in consequence, it is unimportant whether part of the injury was caused by "seepage" since a landowner is entitled to the lateral support of adjoining land regardless of its composition.—Bissell v. Ford, 176 Mich. 64.

¶ 14. In sinking foundations for modern sky-scrapers, which must be put down to great depths, due regard for the adjacent premises ought to make it incumbent upon the one sinking them to use reasonable diligence to ascertain in advance the character of the soil through which it is intended to go.—Bissell v. Ford, 176 Mich. 64.

¶ 16. Whether the plan used by defendant in excavating for foundations for a building was negligent is for the jury where seven caisson pits were sunk parallel with and across an alley from plaintiff's building, at about the same time, varying from 65 to 114 feet in depth, thereby removing 45 per cent of the soil in the belt in which they were constructed and where engineers testified that the method used was improper and that the pits should have been filled with cement immediately.—Bissell v. Ford, 176 Mich. 64.

¶ 18. It is a question of fact whether a reasonable effort was made to free foundation pits from water after its presence became known where action is brought by an adjoining landowner for injury to lateral support, and the question depends on the exposure of lateral support and the ease with which the water could have been removed.— Bissell v. Ford, 176 Mich. 64.

¶ 19. In an action by the tenant of a building against a contractor for damages for injuries to goods of plaintiff stored in the building due to a fall of the wall of the building adjoining the lot which was being excavated, held that the burden of proof to show negligence on the part of the contractor in failing to notify the landlord of the excavation rested on the plaintiff.—Horowitz v. Blay, 193 Mich. 493.

Necessity of electing between counts for want of snow guards and for nonrepair of same, see Pleading, II.

¶ 21. Damages may be recovered by the owner of premises upon which snow has been thrown from the defendant's premises, by the defendant's order, to the plaintiff's injury.—Barry v. Peterson, 48 Mich. 263.

¶ 22. The board of education of Detroit was liable for a personal injury sustained by plaintiff by falling on ice and snow which had been precipitated upon a stairway of his house from a sloping roof on a school building located next to the plaintiff's house, there having been no guards to interrupt the falling of the snow and ice, and the board having had notice of the situation; the erection of the building without guards having been the proximate cause of the injury.—Ferris v. Board of Education of Detroit, 122 Mich. 315.

¶ 23. Case lies for damages caused by eavesdrip and snow thrown from defendant's premises upon the space between buildings and on plaintiff's premises.—Barry v. Peterson, 48 Mich. 263.

Pollution of percolating or well waters by waste matter stored or cast on neighboring premises, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 646-651.

Liability for driving insects upon land of adjoining owner, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 659.

As to fences and party walls, see Fences; Party Walls.

Injunction against interference with fences or other objects on the line, see Injunctions, II, F.

¶ 24. Where branches of a tree extend over onto the land of an adjoining owner, the latter has no right to cut them off beyond the division line in the absence of a license.—Newberry v. Bunda, 137 Mich. 69.

¶ 25. Defendant rebuilt a line fence under agreement with plaintiff and in so doing cut off, close to the trunk, branches of a tree standing three feet from the line and a short distance from the part of the fence which he was rebuilding. He claimed that this was necessary in order to establish the line. Held that the question whether it was necessary to so cut the branches was properly for the jury.—Newberry v. Bunda, 137 Mich. 69.

ADMIRALTY.

TREATS of admiralty courts and practice.

Analysis.

Jurisdiction of crimes under federal laws committed on the Great Lakes or in international waters, see Indictment, III.

Territorial limits within which process of arrest for crime may be executed, see Arrest, Commitment and Bail, V.

Abatement of state suit pending admiralty suit vice versa, see Abatement, § 13.

¶ 1. The Great Lakes are subject to the admiralty jurisdiction.—Backus v. Coyne, 35 Mich. 5; overruling Rossiter v. Chester, 1 D. 154; The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. (53 U. S.) 443, 13 L. ed. 1058; Jackson v. The Magnolia, 20 How. (61 U. S.) 296, 15 L. ed. 909; The Eagle, 8 Wall. (75 U. S.) 15, 19 L. ed. 365.

¶ 2. The admiralty jurisdiction upon the Great Lakes and their connecting waters has only been vested in the United States district courts in certain specified classes of cases connected with external commerce; and if salvage cases concerning derelict property are properly cognizable in those courts they must have some reference to external commerce.—Cummings v. Stone, 13 Mich, 70.

¶ 3. The maritime law subsists as an entirety as the subject of federal jurisprudence, and is to be administered by the federal courts without impairment by state legislation.—Mack S. S. Co. v. Thompson, 176 Fed. 499.

Contracts and liens cognizable under the Water Craft Act, see Shipping, IV.

¶ 4. The definition of the term "torts," when used in reference to admiralty jurisdiction, is not confined to wrongs or injuries committed by direct force, but includes, also, wrongs suffered in consequence of the negligence or malfeasance of others where the remedy at common law is by an action on the case.—John Spry Lumber Co. v. Steam Barge C. H. Green, 76 Mich. 320.

¶ 5. Locality of the accident is the test for the determination of the question of admiralty jurisdiction over cases of tort, and where the active cause of the injury originates on a ship upon navigable waters, but the tort is consummated upon a dock or wharf extending from land, admiralty has no jurisdiction.—Gordon v. Drake, 193 Mich. 64.

¶ 6. A boom that extends no further into the water than a landowner, with due regard for navigation, might extend it, is a structure pertaining to the adjacent land as much as any wharf or building erected thereon, and a wrongful injury to it would not be a marine injury, and the tort cannot, therefore, be redressed in admiralty.—The City of Erie v. Canfield, 27 Mich. 479.

¶ 7. Injury caused by a vessel's collison with a boom in which logs were stored and which was fastened to piles on a mill-dock is not a marine tort cognizable in admiralty, since the locality of the thing injured, and not of the offending instrument, determines the locality of the tort.—John Spry Lumber Co. v. Steam Barge C. H. Green, 76 Mich. 320.

Application of workmen's compensation acts to cases within admiralty jurisdiction, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 597–601.

Conflict between admiralty law and workmen's compensation acts, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 688-699, 13 N. C. C. A. 782-799.

¶ 8. Admiralty, in a proceeding to enforce a lien against a vessel, can obtain jurisdiction in rem only by its actual seizure by the marshal, notice thereof, and notice by publication of the time when process shall be returned and the cause heard; and two weeks before such return such notice shall have been given at least twice. A recital of due publication in a return by a marshal does not cure the want of it where the facts are set forth in the return and show that the publication was insufficient.—Gould v. Jacobson, 58 Mich. 288.

Name of adopted child, see Names.

¶ 1. A child, not his own, was placed by petitioner with a Catholic institution. Later, the custody of the child was given back to petitioner with the understanding that the institution did not permanently surrender its rights to the child until it should become satisfied that the child's parents would not wish to resume their parental rights. About two years later petitioner adopted the child with the consent of the institution. Held, the institution had retained sufficient custody of the child up to the time of the adoption to be legally qualified under 3 Comp. L. 1897, § 8777, subd. d to give consent to said adoption.—In re Courtright, 167 Mich. 689.

¶ 5. Where, on his father's death, a child was adopted by his uncle, who stood in loco parentis to him, and to whom he sustained the relation of an adopted child till he came of age, it is presumed twenty years from his majority, if nothing appears to the contrary, that his mother assented to his arrangement with his uncle, whatever it was, and to his emancipation from any parental control or rights that she could have asserted at the time.—Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247.

¶ 6. An executory agreement to adopt and take the necessary legal steps to secure such adoption cannot be made the basis for legal inheritance of real estate or operate as an agreement to convey land.—Bowins v. English, 138 Mich. 178.

¶ 7. In an action against an estate to enforce specific performance of a contract by the deceased to adopt the complainant and to establish the claim of the complainant to heirship, statements by the deceased as to friendly relations, etc., are inadmissible to modify or amplify the written promise to adopt.—Bowins v. English, 138 Mich. 178.

¶ 8. Where the law under which adoption proceedings were had, was subsequently held unconstitutional, and there was no other evidence of a contract to make the adopted child an heir, such adopted child would not be entitled to share in the estate of the adopting parent.—Albring v. Ward, 137 Mich. 352.

¶ 9. A., who had been bound out when two years old to B., was, when nine years old, adopted by B. and B.'s wife, under the invalid adoption law of 1861, and continued to live with them upon their farm until B.'s death, which happened when A. was more than twenty-two years old, faithfully performing during all the time his duty towards his foster parents, and giving them his entire time without compensation, in the belief, which they encouraged, that he was in fact their son, and as such would ultimately own their property. Upon a bill filed by persons who had been adjudicated to be B.'s heirs at law to restrain A. from committing waste upon said farm, A. set up title to the premises, which was sustained, two justices holding that specific performance should be granted of the partly performed implied contract, and a third justice holding that equity could give validity to the obvious intention of the parties that A. should have the property.—Wright v. Wright, 99 Mich. 170.

¶ 10. Plaintiffs, the children of one Rose May Smithlin, alleged in their bill for specific performance of a contract of adoption, that one Lull and his wife had adopted Rose when a little girl, and agreed to make her their heir if she would live with them and render to them her personal services. Plaintiffs alleged there was a written contract to this effect, which Lull and his wife had kept in their possession but which plaintiffs could not produce. Rose was the child of foreigners just recently arrived in this country. Held, the evidence set forth was not sufficient to support the claim asserted in view of the social prominence of the Lulls, and their ignorance of the antecedents of the child.—Smith v. Lull, 152 Mich. 126.

Right of adopting parent to recover for death of adopted child, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 743-748; 13 N. C. C. A. 447.

Adoption sufficient to make insurable interest, see Insurance, IV.

¶ 11. The duties of one adopting a child are fixed by Comp. L. 1897, § 8780, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 11640, providing that the person or persons adopting shall stand in the place of a parent or parents and be liable to all the duties and entitled to all the rights of parents, the same as if in fact the child was the child of such person or persons.—Greenman v. Gillerman's Estate, 188 Mich. 74.

¶ 12. A minor who has been adopted into a family, and performed labor for his adopted father as a child would for a parent, cannot recover for his services without an understanding or agreement that he shall.—Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247.

¶ 13. A girl who had been practically though not formally adopted into a family in pursuance of an understanding that she shall be in all things as a daughter may use the family name as her own in bringing suit.—Watson v. Watson, 49 Mich. 540.

¶ 14. Where an infant is taken into a family the presumption is that neither its support nor its service is to be recompensed except as the one compensates the other.—Thorp v. Bateman, 37 Mich. 68.

Effect of contract to adopt, see also ante ¶ 6.

¶ 18. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 8780, governing the adoption of children and providing that "such child shall thereupon become and be an heir at law" of the persons adopting it, an adopted child does not become an heir of the kindred of the persons adopting it, nor does it inherit from them by right of representation of the adopting parents.—Van Derlyn v. Mack, 137 Mich. 146.

¶ 19. Statements of adopting parents calling an adopted child their daughter, and similar statements by the child calling them father and mother, are not evidence of any contract to make the child an heir or to convey to her any property.—Albring v. Ward, 137 Mich. 352.

ADULTERATION.

TREATS of the debasement of commodities by addition of foreign or deleterious matter or by abstraction of some essential quality. See generally Comp. L. 1915, chaps. 121, 124, 254, as to statutes bearing on this subject, and see topic Food for matters relating to sale of food substances improperly labeled or below standard or intrinsically unwholesome.

Failure to add to a food commodity a customary but useless and nonessential ingredient does not amount to adulteration in the sense of abstracting a necessary constituent or ingredient as defined in Pub. Acts 1895, No. 193.—People v. Jennings, 132 Mich. 662.

I. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO IT.

§ 1. Nature of property or estate in general.

The estate claimed must be a corporeal hereditament, capable of exclusive, hostile possession in order to be within the doctrines of seisin and disseisin. See generally post this topic.

The doctrine of prescription which applies to easements and other incorporeal hereditaments of similar nature is treated in Easements; Highways, II, A; Nuisance; Waters.

See generally Jud. Act, Chap. IX, § 1, ¶ 8, Comp. L. 1915, § 12311, ¶ 8.

¶ 1. Title may be acquired by adverse possession of property within the limits of streets.—Flynn v. City of Detroit, 93 Mich. 590; Village of Essexville v. Emery, 90 Mich. 183; City of Big Rapids v. Comstock, 65 Mich. 78.

¶ 2. In the absence of a statute expressly authorizing it, title to a highway by adverse possession may be obtained by an abutting owner, but the propriety of permitting title to be obtained in this way is of doubtful expediency.—Mendel v. Poland, 200 Mich. 571.

¶ 3. Title by adverse possession may be acquired to land laid out for a public alley.—Vier v. City of Detroit, 111 Mich. 646.

¶ 5. The provision in the charter of the City of Ann Arbor, Local Acts 1889, No. 331, § 129, that the title of the city in its public streets should not be divested by encroachments, is valid; and an instruction in an action of quare clausum fregit against a street commissioner to the effect that the plaintiff can establish title by adverse possession, is erroneous.—Crawford v. Ross, 126 Mich. 634.

¶ 6. Prior to the passage of Act No. 46, Pub. Acts 1907, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 14133, title to property within the limits of a public street or highway might be acquired as against a municipality by adverse possession.—Pastorino v. City of Detroit, 182 Mich. 5.

¶ 10. Where, upon the purchase by the city of Detroit of land sold for special assessments, no deed is issued, the city has at least an equitable title, and such title may be destroyed by adverse possession.—Klatt v. City of Detroit, 162 Mich. 186.

Use of municipal land for church purposes, see also post ¶ 115.

¶ 11. Upon land dedicated as a court house square the county erected a court house in 1838, which was removed in 1850 or 1851, when the city took possession, continuing from that time to use and improve the land for a public park or square. Held, that the city's adverse possession for more than thirty years barred action by the heirs of the dedicator.—Sheldon v. City of Grand Rapids, 71 Mich. 508; Pantlind v. City of Grand Rapids, 71 Mich. 514.

¶ 14. Under How. St., § 5744, providing that a widow entitled to dower in the lands of which her husband died seised may continue to occupy the same with the children or other heirs, so long as the heirs or others interested do not object, without having the dower assigned, the peaceable occupancy of the homestead by the widow and minor children, after the renunciation of a life estate granted to her under the will, not followed by an assignment of her dower, is not adverse to the remainderman.—Lumley v. Haggerty, 110 Mich. 552.

¶ 17. The possession of land by one of the heirs of an intestate is not adverse to the rights of another heir during the lifetime of the intestate's widow, where the former was living on the premises at the death of the intestate, and it was agreed by all the heirs that the place should be left just as it was until the death of the widow, who was also residing thereon.—Beck v. Schick, 110 Mich. 665.

¶ 18. One who goes into possession of land under a lease from the owner, and continues to occupy the position of a lessee, cannot set up an adverse holding against a purchaser from the owner.—Smalley v. Mitchell, 110 Mich. 650.

III. ELEMENTS AND INCIDENTS OF DISSEISIN AND POSSESSION.

A IN GENERAL; OPENNESS AND HOSTILITY.

Sufficiency of constructive notice, see post § 12.
Necessity of entry under tax sale, see also post ¶ 111.
Instructions defining elements, see post § 55.

¶ 20. Adverse possession requires exclusive occupancy known to and against the will and consent of those who are interested and have a right to contest the possession.—Whitford v. Crooks, 54 Mich. 261.

¶ 21. Possession of land in order to ripen into title must be actual, continuous, visible, notorious, distinct and hostile to that of the real owner.—Crosby v. City of Greenville, 183 Mich. 452.

¶ 22. A claim of adverse possession cannot rest upon the acts of the defendant when the disseisor asserts it as a source of title in ejectment, but the acts relied upon must be those of the person, or of the representatives of the person, claiming title by virtue thereof; and such possession must have been actual, continued, visible, notorious, distinct and hostile.—Beecher v. Ferris, 110 Mich. 537.

Permissive holding, see post § 13.
Swamp lands not yet perfected in the state, see post § 113.

¶ 27. Under Pub. Acts 1885, No. 153, §§ 115, 116, providing for the acquisition of title by adverse possession, the time does not begin to run as between cotenants until the termination of a precedent life estate gives the right of entry.—Sleight v. Roe, 125 Mich. 588.

¶ 28. The statute of limitations does not begin to run against a remainderman until after the death of the life tenant.—Porter v. Osmun, 135 Mich. 361.

¶ 29. Where the owner of a life estate and of an undivided interest in the fee of land permits an adverse claimant to remain in undisturbed possession until such possession ripens into a valid title, neither he nor his grantees can separate his interests in the land, under the plea that, as to some of

¶ 30. A sale of land by an executrix who has purchased the property from a person acting for her in purchasing a homestead, and who sells to a third person cannot be said to be made good by the statute of limitations, as such executrix was given a life estate in the property, and an action of ejectment could not be brought by the heirs in her life time.—Litchfield v. Tunnicliff, 118 Mich. 383.

¶ 34. To constitute adverse possession it is necessary to show that the ownership is of such a character as to openly and publicly indicate an assumed control or use consistent with the character of the property.—Crosby v. City of Greenville, 183 Mich. 452.

¶ 35. Adverse possession must be based on exclusive occupancy, known to and against the will and consent of those interested, and whose right it is to contest.—Marble v. Price, 54 Mich. 466.

¶ 37. To constitute adverse possession it is sufficient if the acts of ownership are of such a character as openly and publicly to indicate and assume control or use such as is consistent with the character of the premises in question; the occupation need not be such as to inform a passing stranger that some one is asserting title, but it is enough if it be such as to notify and warn the owner should he visit the premises, that a person is in possession under hostile claim.—Whitaker v. Erie Shooting Club, 102 Mich. 454.

¶ 38. To constitute adverse possession it is not necessary that the occupation should be such that a mere stranger passing by the land would know that some one was asserting title to and dominion over it, nor is it necessary that the land be cleared or fenced or any building be placed upon it.—Murray v. Hudson, 65 Mich. 670.

Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 49.

Under tax sales, see also post § 27.

Particular acts of possession, see also post §§ 21-23.

¶ 40. Use of land as a wood lot apurtenant to one's farm, and the exercise of such acts of ownership as are necessary to such use, amount, if continuous and uninterrupted, to actual possession.—Murray v. Hudson, 65 Mich. 670.

¶ 41. Notices posted around a piece of marsh land from early in the spring until late in the autumn every year for twelve successive years that the land belongs to the club posting the notices, and that all trespassers will be prosecuted, are notices of an adverse title and possession, the meaning of which could not be misunderstood by the owner if he visited the land, they being inconsistent with his rights as the original owner of the fee.—Whitaker v. Erie Shooting Club, 102 Mich. 454.

¶ 42. Plaintiff claimed ownership of certain land by adverse possession under a void tax title deed. In 1885 he arranged with one Calhoun to take possession of the land for him, and Calhoun went upon the land and cleaned off the timber until 1889, when he moved away. Thereafter plaintiff did nothing to the land, which was wild. Held, that there was no adverse possession after 1889, since there was no indication of possession.—Lasley v. Kniskern, 152 Mich. 244.

¶ 46. Adverse possession up to a boundary for fifteen years being sufficient to bar a recovery by the contiguous owner, actual knowledge of the adverse holding is not required where the circumstances are such that the contiguous owner should have known it.—Bird v. Stark, 66 Mich. 654.

¶ 47. Actual notice is not required where one enters under a conveyance of an entire interest by a tenant in common, though it may be questioned whether a mere entry suffices without some knowledge or notice brought home to the co-tenants.—Fuller v. Swensberg, 106 Mich. 305.

¶ 48. To transform a permissive use into an adverse one there must be a distinct and positive assertion of a right hostile to the rights of the owner, and such assertion must be brought to his attention.—Weber v. City of Detroit, 159 Mich. 14.

¶ 49. Where the owner of land has actual notice of adverse possession, it is unnecessary that the possession be notorious to be adverse.—Lasley v. Kniskern, 152 Mich. 244.

¶ 51. Possession may ripen into an adverse holding, although the act of taking possession was not hostile in the first instance.—Michigan Land & Iron Co. v. Thoney, 89 Mich. 226.

¶ 52. To constitute adverse possession the possession need not have been hostile in the first instance, but it is sufficient if it becomes so and continues for the requisite time, although the original entry was by consent of the owner and without shadow of title.—Ward v. Nestell, 113 Mich. 185.

¶ 53. Title by adverse possession cannot be claimed by one who has obtained and who holds possession of land under an agreement with another person in possession by the true owner's assent.—Butler v. Bertrand, 97 Mich. 59.

Entry on wild land by permission of one tenant in common, see post ¶ 79.

¶ 55. Possession, when taken wrongfully, should put the real owner on his guard; but when held in apparent subordination to the owner's rights, and without his knowledge that it is in opposition to them, it cannot be considered adverse.—Campau v. Lafferty, 50 Mich. 114.

¶ 56. A possession gained by force and held but a short time cannot be made the ground of an action.—Harrington v. Scott, 1 Mich. 17.

¶ 57. A nocturnal entry by stealth and without right upon lands in the peaceable possession of another cannot amount to a possession that enables a party entering to question the sufficiency of the true possessor's title or to set up an outstanding title in a third person.—Van Auken v. Monroe, 38 Mich. 725.

¶ 58. Where the purchaser of a tax deed colluded with the tenants of the owner of the land, asked them to leave, and then return and take possession for him under the tax deed, he cannot be considered as holding adversely under the tax deed, and the statute of limitations does not run in his favor.—Williams v. Fox, 152 Mich. 215.

Disputed strips and uncertain boundaries, see post § 20.

Adverse possession against one where others have no mature right of entry, see ante ¶ 29.

¶ 59. Where land is owned by tenants in common, and one tenant in common claims title to all the property as the result of adverse possession, the nature of such adverse possession is not the same as where such relation does not exist.—Rich v. Victoria Copper Mining Co., 147 F. 380.

¶ 60. Neither occupation in common with the public, nor possession concurrent with that of the true owner of land, is such an exclusive possession as will support title by adverse possession.—LeRoy v. Collins, 176 Mich. 465.

¶ 61. The possession by an aged mother, after the death of her daughter, of real property owned by the latter, under an arrangement that the former might continue to make the place her home, cannot become adverse as against the daughter's heirs, until after some notorious, open, and hostile act, inconsistent with possession under such arrangement.—Beaufait v. Dolson, 110 Mich. 146.

¶ 62. A father deeded land to his daughter as a gift but remained in possession, paying the taxes out of moneys owed to the daughter. After the latter died, the father bought the land at a tax sale, but this title was invalid. He remained in possession and subsequently deeded the land to plaintiff. The daughter left minor children and defendant acquired their title. Held that the father's possession began in subordination to the daughter's title and remained so until her death, and the title then vested in her minor heirs, and there having been no ouster of them by any actual notice either during minority or after, limitation did not run against their title and hence defendant's title was good.—Nugent v. Peterman, 137 Mich. 646.

¶ 63. One Fitzgerald loaned money to one Quinlan and had the mortgage made out to his sister, one Schell. Later the mortgagor at Fitzgerald's request deeded the premises to the said Schell. Fitzgerald reserved a couple of rooms in the house on the premises, and for many years spent much of his time there. He at one time leased the premises and caused his sister to join in the lease. The heirs of Fitzgerald brought a bill to have the deed from Quinlan to Schell set aside. Held, the bill should be denied, as Fitzgerald's possession was not adverse to the ownership of his sister.—Atkinson v. Schell, 161 Mich. 380.

Character and sufficiency of proofs, see post § 50.

¶ 64. As between tenants in common there can be no ouster and no adverse possession until one of them does or says something that is unequivocal notice to his co-tenants that he claims the entire property as against them.—Fenton v. Miller, 94 Mich. 204.

¶ 65. To make possession adverse as against a co-tenant, notice of the hostile claim must be clearly brought home to him and mere occupancy for the statutory period by one of them is not enough.—Weshgyl v. Schick, 113 Mich. 22.

¶ 66. Mere possession by one co-tenant is not sufficient to establish ouster and adverse possession, especially where the co-tenants are brothers and sisters; some clear, positive and unequivocal act amounting to an open denial of the co-tenant's rights must be shown.—Fenton v. Miller, 94 Mich. 204.

¶ 68. To constitute adverse possession of land by one tenant in common mere actual possession and doing things which might seem to others proper by one owning the entire interest is insufficient, and it is necessary that the other tenant in common shall have notice that his co-tenant is asserting title to the whole estate.—Rich v. Victoria Copper Mining Co., 147 F. 380.

¶ 69. Where a mining company tenant in common of certain property, obtains a deed from one holding a life estate in the remainder of the property, and continues in lawful possession of all the property until the death of the life tenant, the continuance of that possession is not adverse to the remainderman, its then co-tenant, unless accompanied by tortious and disloyal acts, which must be open, continued and notorious so as to preclude all doubt as to the character of the holding or the want of knowledge on the part of the co-tenant.—Rich v. Victoria Copper Mining Co., 147 F. 380.

¶ 70. Occupation by one tenant in common, giving leases and receiving rents for more than twenty years, with the knowledge of the co-tenant, but without actual knowledge of the latter's rights, and without any claim by the co-tenant for a share of the rents and profits, constitutes adverse possession in the absence of anything to show that it is other than adverse.—Dubois v. Campau, 28 Mich. 304.

¶ 72. Any acts by a tenant-in-common in possession, equivalent to a denial of the rights of his co-tenant, are sufficient to set the statute of limitations in motion as against the latter. The ouster need not necessarily be founded upon a deed assuming to convey an entirety.—Fuller v. Swensberg, 106 Mich. 305.

¶ 73. An ouster of a tenant in common may be predicated upon a quitclaim deed from a co-tenant purporting to convey the entire interest, as well as upon a deed with covenants of warranty.—Fuller v. Swensberg, 106 Mich. 305.

¶ 74. A tenant in common in possession cannot use tax titles so as to predicate bar of statute of limitations by adverse possession against co-tenant; nor can his grantee. —Richards v. Richards, 75 Mich. 408.

¶ 76. Where certain of a number of tenants in common of lands, conveyed the property by warranty deed to bona fide purchasers for value, and the latter after examining the title go into possession and improve the property and later convey by similar deed to other bona fide purchasers, it operates as an ouster of the other tenants in common, since the second purchasers went into possession as strangers to the interests of such other tenants, and under claims which denied any rights of such other tenants.—Brigham v. Reau, 139 Mich. 256.

¶ 78. In an action of ejectment where the owner of a dower interest which had not been assigned, had leased the premises to the defendant, who had entered into possession of the premises, his possession could not become hostile as to the other owners of the title in fee, by any agreement made with or acquiescence of the owner of the dower interest.—Lee v. Livingston, 143 Mich. 203.

¶ 79. The fact that a tenant in common of wild, unfenced land permitted one, without the knowledge of the other life tenant, to allow his cattle to graze on the land, is not evidence of adverse possession as against the co-tenant.—Rich v. Victoria Copper Mining Co., 147 F. 380.

¶ 80. That a tenant in common of property allows the taxes to go unpaid and then bids them in are not acts of absolute ownership, evidencing title to the entire property by adverse possession as against the co-tenant.—Rich v. Victoria Copper Mining Co., 147 F. 880.

¶ 81. Possession by a vendee under a land contract is not adverse until he has either complied with its terms, or has in some way given notice to his vendor or the latter's assignees that he claims to hold in hostility thereto.—Burke v. Douglass, 115 Mich. 197.

¶ 82. The holder of a legal title is not ousted by the act of a contract purchaser in going on the land with a team and ploughing for a few hours.—Goetchius v. Sanborn, 46 Mich. 330.

¶ 83. Acquiescence by a vendor for the statutory period in the possession of land by a vendee in a land contract, under a claim that the contract had been surrendered and that the land belonged to the vendee, will bar a recovery by the vendor in ejectment.—Michigan Land & Iron Co. v. Thoney, 89 Mich. 226.

Interruption after beginning to run, see post § 35.

Effect of disbelief in title or right, see post § 31.

¶ 84. Where A. entered under a deed from the owner of land conveying an entire tract "except the parcel of land deeded by quitclaim deed to G. and C., if included in the foregoing description," and where, except for such quitclaim deed, there was no evidence that G. or C. ever had any title to any part of such tract, A.'s constructive possession as against persons claiming under G. and C. was not limited by the fact of his entering under the deed to himself.—Clark v. Campau, 92 Mich. 573.

¶ 85. In an action involving title to real property, where defendant, who was formerly plaintiff's wife, claimed title by adverse possession, the fact that defendant had within the fifteen years, filed a petition for alimony in which she stated that plaintiff owned the property, does not estop her from asserting title where no alimony was granted on the petition.—Place v. Place, 139 Mich. 509.

¶ 86. Where a person in possession of premises allows them to be assessed in the name of another and bids them off year after year, such conduct is not necessarily inconsistent with his claim of adverse possession.—Merritt v. Westerman, 165 Mich. 585.

¶ 87. The acquiescence which will prevent the running of the statute must be that of the possessor in the owner's claim, and not that of the owner in possession not acknowledged to be held under him.—Bower v. Earl, 18 Mich. 367.

¶ 88. One in possession of land, claiming to own it, may buy an outstanding claim of title without abandoning or impairing his own or acknowledging the validity of the title bought.—Ripley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 47.

¶ 89. Where one in the possession of land holds the same under a tax deed, he may contract to purchase the claims of title put forward by another person and in so doing he does not acknowledge the validity of said person's claim or relinquish his own adverse possession.—Ripley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 47.

¶ 90. "A mere permissive possession" of land adjoining a line fence, which is understood and agreed between the adjoining owners to be subject to change on accurate survey, cannot ripen into title by adverse possession.—Pugh v. Schindler, 127 Mich. 191.

¶ 92. An error was made in running a division line between two farms. The parties respectively occupied up to the erroneous line for more than twenty years. Afterwards the correct line was run. Held, that if the parties occupied up to the erroneous line supposing it to be the true boundary, and relying upon it, such line could not be disturbed afterwards, and a mere oral agreement to run a new line could not disturb the title thus fixed; but if the parties did not rely upon the first survey, but expected to settle the line by another when convenient to make it, the mere possession for twenty years, according to the erroneous line, would not give title.—Bunce v. Bidwell, 43 Mich. 542.

¶ 93. An owner of land seeing a fence at about the line where it commenced near a road on which he passed is not charged with knowledge thereby that it deviates and incloses his land as it draws away from that point.—Hockmoth v. Des Grand Champs, 71 Mich. 520.

Instructions as to, see post § 56.

¶ 94. It is not necessary, in order to entitle one to claim title by adverse possession, that the premises should be inclosed by a fence, or that when a fence is used it should be of any particular kind.—Greene v. Anglemire, 77 Mich. 168; Sauers v. Giddings, 90 Mich. 50.

¶ 95. The mere fact that one builds fences and afterwards claims ownership is not enough to constitute adverse possession, which involves uninterrupted occupancy as well as claim of title.—Beecher v. Ferris, 117 Mich. 108.

Use for home, see also ante ¶ 39.
Taking timber, see also ante ¶ 42.
Admissibility of evidence as to, see post § 47.

¶ 96. An owner of outlots which he does not fence or cultivate may establish an adverse possession by cutting grass and timber, ditching, paying general and special taxes, and openly and notoriously claiming and using the land.—Curtis v. Campbell, 54 Mich. 340.

¶ 97. Where for eighteen years the grantees in a warranty deed duly recorded, and those claiming under them, pay the taxes from year to year, and publicly, and without their rights being questioned, cut valuable timber at different times as they see fit, and erect shanties for the use of their workmen, cut hard wood and burn charcoal on the land for several years, clear and cultivate a portion of it, and at one time raise crops thereon, pasture it, run lines around and make roads over the land, and look it over from year to year to prevent trespasses, such acts of ownership are sufficient to establish a title by limitation.—Deer Lake Co. v. Michigan Land & Iron Co., 89 Mich. 180.

¶ 99. The occasional cutting of timber on wild, rough mining and mineral land by a tenant in common, a mining company, does not constitute adverse possession as against a tenant in common, there being no continuity in such cutting.—Rich v. Victoria Copper Mining Co., 147 F. 380.

Permitting assessment to another and bidding in for tax, see also ante ¶ 86.
Assessment to new claimant as tacking to that of former occupant, see post ¶ 186.

¶ 100. The mere payment of taxes on land is not such an assertion of ownership as to affect the adverse possession of another party, or to weaken the force of the payer's other acts and conduct looking to an abandonment of his claim of title.—Cook v. Rounds, 60 Mich. 310.

¶ 101. A father bought a farm for his son upon which the latter afterwards resided, making some repairs and paying taxes and part of the interest of a $3,000 purchase-money mortgage given by his father, who paid the rest of the interest and the principal, but retained the title to the farm, never conveying, or being asked to convey to the son; and before his death, twenty-two years after the purchase, he devised the premises to the son, subject to a charge of $3,000 to be used in paying legacies. Held, upon an executor's bill to foreclose the lien created by the will, that the son's possession could not be regarded as hostile to his father's title.—Gifford v. Gifford, 100 Mich. 258.

¶ 102. Adverse possession is held as against one's grantor by one who has taken a warranty deed of the premises in reliance on the record title and in ignorance of any life-lease outstanding in the grantor.—Case v. Green, 53 Mich. 615.

sion, and the evidence showed that the defendant, then a tenant, had built a house on leased land which extended a foot or less upon other land of the lessor, the adverse possession claimed cannot begin to run against the lessor until the date of a deed made by the lessor to the lessee of that portion of the premises leased.—Ross v. Guentherodt, 142 Mich. 634.

¶ 104. Premises which are occupied by a religious society, by virtue of a common-law dedication to that use, are not held adversely so that title to the fee may be gained by adverse possession.—Patrick v. Young Men's Christian Ass'n of Kalamazoo, 120 Mich. 185.

Effect of deed or mortgage by owner to break possession, see post ¶ 152.

¶ 105. The possession of land by a donee under a parol gift, accompanied by a claim of ownership, is adverse to the donor.—Schafer v. Hauser, 111 Mich. 622.

¶ 106. Twenty years' adverse possession by one heir to an estate, following a parol sale to him of the interest of another heir, gives the former a sufficient title.—Hyne v. Osborn, 62 Mich. 235.

§ 26. Holding over one's estate, lease or grant.

See also ante § 15, ¶¶ 62, 63.
Presumptions as to, see post § 45.

¶ 108. A tenant who, after the expiration of his lease, holds for more than fifteen years under claim of title the open, notorious and hostile possession of a portion of the leased premises, which he had inclosed with his own adjoining lands during tenancy, acquires title.—Sanscrainte v. Torongo, 87 Mich. 60.

¶ 109. Where, prior to the married woman's act, a husband was vested with an estate in the marital right, which terminated at his wife's death, if he held over he became, not a tenant at sufferance, but a trespasser; the right of action of the wife's heirs accrued at her death; and from that time the statute of limitations began to run in his favor.—Pattison v. Dryer, 98 Mich. 564.

¶ 112. Possession is adverse where it appears that the entry was made by claimant under a deed of warranty to the entire estate from one who had bought it for taxes and before he had received his tax deed had bought in an undivided interest from one of the owners, and where the land was wild and unoccupied at that time and no actual entry was made by the tax purchaser. The entry in such case cannot be said to have been under any duty or recognition of the rights of the other undivided interests.—Watkins v. Green, 101 Mich. 493.

Extent to which possession covers street, see post § 37.
Joint occupation with public, see ante ¶ 60.
Recognition of public right, see post ¶ 159.
Tacking successive possessions, see post § 39, ¶ 189.
Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 51.

¶ 113. Possession under claim of title of land embraced in the swamp-land grant to the state would not be adverse to the state until the state's right of entry became complete under the terms of the grant.—People v. Warner, 116 Mich. 228.

¶ 114. Where the title to land has been for many years in a city as the result of successive tax sales to it, the holder of the record title cannot, merely by virtue of the theoretical possession incident to such title and without actual occupancy, acquire a title by adverse possession as against the city.—Galinski v. City of Detroit, 193 Mich. 184.

¶ 117. In order to acquire title by adverse possession to a public street or way, the occupancy must be such as to warn the public that the occupant is going beyond his right as an abutting owner and is actually claiming the property as his own.—Crosby v. City of Greenville, 183 Mich. 452.

¶ 118. Since an abutting owner may use a street in any manner which does not interfere with public travel, uses which might be evidence of a claim of title if individual property was concerned, may not be notice to the public that title is claimed in the street.—Crosby v. City of Greenville, 183 Mich. 452.

¶ 119. In order that occupancy of part of a highway by an abutting owner may ripen into title by adverse possession it is necessary that it be clearly established that the possession was actual, continuous, visible, notorious, distinct and hostile to that of the public.—Mendel v. Poland, 200 Mich. 571.

¶ 120. Where a private way is improved by the owner and left open convenient for others, their use of it in common with the owner and those for whose special benefit it was opened is, as a rule, to be regarded as permissive only, and under an implied license.—LeRoy v. Collins, 176 Mich. 465.

¶ 122. A lot owner who building a fence so as to inclose, together with his lot, a strip of land claimed to be within the limits of an adjoining street, and who builds a house so that it stands partly upon said strip, the remainder of which is fenced in a manner not permitted, is not acting within the license of statutes (acts of May 18, 1807, and Nov. 7, 1815), reserving certain space of street for porches, grass-plats, etc., prohibiting erections on such space that exceed fifty inches in height, and forbidding severance of space from street; and his possession of the strip is adverse.—Flynn v. City of Detroit, 93 Mich. 590.

¶ 124. Complainant owned some lots bordering on a public alley. The whole land was a common, with nothing to distinguish boundary lines, and complainant for many years piled lumber on the alley, lumber which he changed and replaced by other lumber several times a year. Held, the possession by complainant was not notorious and hostile so as to give him title by adverse possession.—Weber v. City of Detroit, 159 Mich. 14.

¶ 125. The occupation and use of a private alley by a lot owner in connection with other adjoining lot owners for purposes of general convenience in the use of their property, and especially of a strip thereof, the record title to which is in another, cannot be such exclusive possession as to give title thereto by adverse possession.—LeRoy v. Collins, 176 Mich. 465.

¶ 127. Where land has been used for some time as a private way by abutters with the apparent acquiescence of the owners, and where a city acquires a title by virtue of a tax sale, and recognizes to some extent its use as a way, the city will not, in the absence of actual occupancy by some one claiming a right to occupy, have any occasion to eject or oust any one in order to prevent such person from obtaining title as against it by adverse possession, it being assumed that when some one occupies the premises under a claim of right to do so, the city will begin proper proceedings to try title, and the abutters will begin proceedings to

¶ 128. Whether the act of a city in constructing a sewer across land is a disseisin depends upon the facts and circumstances under which the city entered upon the land and constructed the sewer.—Harrington v. City of Port Huron, 86 Mich. 46.

B. CLAIM OR COLOR OF TITLE.

Constructive possession of whole tract covered by color of title, see post § 38.
Necessity that deed transferring right of possession cover land in question see post § 39.
Evidence as to color of title, see post §§ 46, 48.
Color of title as basis for claim for compensation for improvements in ejectment, see Ejectment, VI.

¶ 131. An adverse holding must formerly have been under claim of title to make void a deed given by one out of possession; but no claim of title has been necessary to perfect an adverse title under the statute of limitations.—Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274.

¶ 132. Adverse possession, under Comp. L. 1871, § 7137, need not be based on color of title, and it may become perfect even though the possessor originally had no shadow of title. But it must plainly appear, in such a case, that the real owner has been given a cause of action; and if the possession began in subordination to his right he is entitled to assume that his right is continuously admitted until he finds that it is disputed, or that the possessor has renounced the title under which he entered; and until then the owner cannot be prejudiced by not bringing suit.—Campau v. Lafferty, 50 Mich. 114.

Recognition or acknowledgment of better title, see ante §§ 18, 19.
Pleading, evidence and practice as to, see post V.
Instructions as to, see post § 55.

¶ 133. One who does not believe in his title cannot have his possession regarded as adverse, where he is not a defiant trespasser.—Smeberg v. Cunningham, 96 Mich. 378; Campau v. Lafferty, 43 Mich. 429.

¶ 134. A poor person who takes possession of a house on relinquishment by another living therein, neither paying rent nor intending to do so but both taking possession because they supposed that they would never be asked to pay rent and having had information that another owned it, and not intending to hold it against a demand for rent, does not thereby institute adverse possession.—Smeberg v. Cunningham, 96 Mich. 378.

Intention to settle boundary as element in adverse possession of disputed strip, see also ante § 20.
Lease lacking signature of wife, see also ante ¶ 107.
As law question, see post § 52.

¶ 137. An entry upon land by an heir of the patentee thereof, from whom no conveyance is shown, is not without color of title, although the patent is not in his possession, and others have in fact acquired title to the land by adverse possession.—Miller v. Davis, 106 Mich. 300.

¶ 141. The occupation by a mining company of two quarter sections of land in a section, on one of which it has a mine, and a claim of the whole section, does not charge a tenant in common in the remaining two quarter sections with notice that the mining company, the other tenant in common, makes any hostile claim or put him upon inquiry in respect to the nature of the mining company's claim, the interest of the mining company in the respective parcels being acquired under independent grants.—Rich v. Victoria Copper Mining Co., 147 F. 380.

¶ 142. A tax deed which discloses on its face that it was issued in violation of law is not color of title sufficient to set the statute of limitations in operation, for it is not of itself prima facie evidence of title.—Fitschen v. Olson, 155 Mich. 320.

¶ 143. The claim of a tax title is necessarily hostile to that of the original owner. —Lasley v. Kniskern, 152 Mich. 244.

¶ 144. Tax deeds and leases, though shown by evidence to be void, afford color of title to one who has gone into possession thereunder.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 Mich. 90.

C. DURATION AND CONTINUITY; STATUTORY PERIOD.

§ 34. Period and duration under the statutes.

The period of limitations and the construction and application of the statutes pertains rather to Limitations of Actions, which see; and for special periods within which to sue for annulment of proceedings affecting titles, see topic treating of the specific proceeding, e. g., Taxes, XII, C (proceedings to annul tax sales).

Accrual of right to sue as beginning of period, see ante § 8.

For recovery of lands generally, see Jud. Act, Chap. IX, Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12311-12322.

¶ 145. The period in which title to land will become absolute by limitation depends upon the statute in force at the time the right of action accrues to the owner.—McKenzie v. Cook Co., 113 Mich. 452.

¶ 146. Actual and undisputed possession of land purchased under a void tax deed for a period of five years from the date of such purchase gives the purchaser title by adverse possession under Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206, § 73, as amended by Pub. Acts 1895, No. 154, and by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 262, since the general statute of limitations (Comp. L. 1897, § 9714) does not apply to such cases, as shown by the general policy of the state. —Pence v. Miller, 140 Mich. 205.

See also ante ¶ 42.

Temporary entry under vendor, see ante ¶ 82.

Presumption as to occasional interruptions, see post ¶ 210.

Persons against whom limitations will run, see generally Limitations of Actions, III.

¶ 148. Title by adverse possession cannot be acquired by the erection along a portion of a disputed line, of a fence which was not continuously maintained but was permitted to fall into decay.—Conner v. Detroit Terminal R. Co., 183 Mich. 241.

¶ 149. The continuity of adverse possession is broken by a decree requiring the occupant to convey the land, even if the actual possession is not disturbed. The decree has the effect of a voluntary conveyance.—Gower v. Quinlan, 40 Mich. 572.

¶ 150. Where the ownership of the record title to unoccupied, uninclosed wild land is cut off by a sale of the land to the state for taxes and failure to redeem any claim of title by adverse possession by a stranger is likewise cut off.—Closser v. Remley, 195 Mich. 313. (Stone and Ostrander, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 151. Adverse possession is not broken by deeding the land away if the grantor continues in possession and takes back a mortgage for purchase money which he afterwards forecloses, and under which he himself becomes foreclosure purchaser. And it is immaterial that the foreclosure proceedings are defective if the possession is retained.—Whitford v. Crooks, 54 Mich. 261.

¶ 152. The execution of a mortgage by the oral donor of land subsequent to the entry of the donee does not change the character of the latter's possession, as adverse to the donor nor operate to suspend the running of the statute in his favor.—Schafer v. Hauser, 111 Mich. 622.

ruption of an adverse possession as to suspend the operation of the statute of limitations as against him, although, having misconceived his remedy, he subsequently discontinues his suit, and the defendant thereupon enters upon a writ of restitution.—Millard v. Hayward, 107 Mich. 219.

¶ 154. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9721, mere disturbance of possession of lands not acquiesced in, does not interrupt the running of the statute of limitations.—Place v. Place, 139 Mich. 509.

¶ 155. Possession for the requisite period, of a vacant lot under a deed from an assignee in bankruptcy, by fencing the lot and using it for such purposes as vacant lots are used, could not be interrupted by acts amounting merely to trespass.—Potter v. Martin, 122 Mich. 542.

¶ 156. Tearing down the fence between one's self and one's next neighbor after asserting a right to premises inclosed by it is a mere trespass; and though perhaps a common-law entry, it does not break his adverse possession of the premises inclosed, nor of itself disseise him.—Donovan v. Bissell, 53 Mich. 462.

¶ 157. The mere failure to reside continuously on premises does not necessarily constitute a failure to keep continuous adverse possession, where such permanent and visible improvements were made and existed in such a way as to indicate to the owner, had he seen the premises, that some one was in possession under a hostile claim.—Merritt v. Westerman, 165 Mich. 535.

Recognition of title as preventing inception of adverse holding, see ante §§ 18, 19.

Making new lease after title is complete, see post ¶ 200.

As to proof of taking lease, see post § 48.

¶ 158. Adverse possession is not broken by negotiating with other claimants if there is no waiver or nonclaim on the occupant's part.—Chapin v. Hunt, 40 Mich. 595; Ripley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 47.

¶ 159. The removal by a lot owner, pursuant to notice from the board of public works, of a fence which, for a period sufficient to give title by adverse possession, had inclosed with the lot a strip of land situated within the sidewalk line, will not be construed, after the lapse of twelve years, during which time the city has made no attempt to use any part of the strip of land for public purposes, and during which, also, the porch and steps of the lot owner's house have projected several feet over and upon said strip, as an acknowledgment by the lot owner of the claim of the city that the line of the street included said strip of land.—Leonard v. City of Detroit, 108 Mich. 599.

¶ 161. The running of the statute of limitations in favor of a tenant in common in possession of the entire estate is suspended by the recognition of the title of the cotenants by executing an option for a mining lease, and by the execution of such lease.—Donahue v. Vosper, 189 Mich. 78. Affirmed in 243 U. S. 59, 61 L. Ed. 592, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350.

D. AREA AND EXTENT.

Evidence as to, see post §§ 46-48.

¶ 163. An occupant's possession of land is coextensive with his claim and color of title. If in possession of a part under color of title to the whole tract, his constructive possession extends to the whole.—Fuller v. Swensberg, 106 Mich. 305.

¶ 164. Where the line of a building on a street has been occupied and used by the public as the line of the street for twenty-five years, title is gained as against the public to all the ground occupied by the building.—City of Big Rapids v. Comstock, 65 Mich. 78.

¶ 165. A tenant in common who has entered upon a portion of the premises is not thereby precluded from claiming the whole, since he is not barred from buying the remainder of the title.—Chamberlain v. Ahrens, 55 Mich. 111.

¶ 166. Title by adverse possession of an entire tract of land is acquired by defendant in ejectment, where such defendant or its grantor has been in actual occupancy of a part of such land, and no one has been in adverse occupancy of any part of it.—Lang v. Osceola Consolidated Min. Co., 145 Mich. 370.

his lot into the street, so as to gain title by adverse possession.—Triece v. City of South Haven, 154 Mich. 129.

¶ 168. Title by adverse possession was obtained to the center of a village alley, as against the village, where certain lots were purchased which abutted on land platted as an alley but which was never used as such by the public or the village authorities, and where although the alley was not included in the literal reading of the deed in question, the purchaser and his grantor had been in possession for a much longer period than that required by the statute to obtain title by adverse possession.—Darrow v. Village of Homer, 122 Mich. 229.

¶ 169. Occupation of the house and garden on a designated tract of land, under an agreement to keep off trespassers and to prevent the cutting of valuable timber, extends to the whole tract, and is sufficient to apprise the original owner that adverse claims are being asserted thereto.—Merritt v. Westerman, 180 Mich. 449.

¶ 170. As a general rule, when a grantee takes actual possession of a part of a tract of land which the grant purports to convey to him under a claim of title to the whole derived from the grant, such partial possession will by construction extend to the limits of the grant.—Rich v. Victoria Copper Mining Co., 147 F. 380.

¶ 171. Color of title under a deed and occupancy of a part will constitute an adverse possession to a single lot except where there is an actual occupancy under a different claim.—Millerd v. Reeves, 1 Mich. 107.

¶ 172. Possession of part of a tract which has always been occupied and taxed as one parcel and which has never been subdivided is constructive possession of the whole.—Clark v. Campau, 92 Mich. 573.

¶ 173. Where a grantee builds a boundary fence according to a recent survey and occupies for more than fifteen years, his possession must be regarded as having been under color of title to the whole tract, including a strip which by a later survey was found to be outside the boundary.—Carpenter v. Monks, 81 Mich. 103.

¶ 174. Where one sells part of a parcel of land and delivers possession up to a certain line, and continues the occupancy of the remainder to that line, he is to be considered, as against his grantee, in adverse possession to that line, and if such possession is continuous for twenty years the grantee cannot insist that such line was not the true boundary.—Bower v. Earl, 18 Mich. 367.

¶ 176. A defendant in trespass who entered into possession under a tax deed, and cleared up and fenced a small portion of the land and planted a crop, and was in actual possession coextensive with the deed.—Brigis in a position to contest plaintiff's title, the deed, though conceded to be void, giving him color of title to the whole tract.—Hecock v. Van Dusen, 80 Mich. 359.

¶ 178. If one has a deed or color of title to one entire tract of land, as to one whole lot or farm, which is uninclosed, and he is in actual possession of a part, the remainder not being actually occupied by any one, his deed or color of title will ordinarily extend his possession to the entire tract, for the purpose of showing adverse possession.—Kingston v. Guck, 155 Mich. 264.

¶ 179. Where the same grantor conveys to the same grantee two separate descriptions of land, contiguous to each other, by separate instruments, which are thereafter used, dealt with, and deeded by the grantee and his successors in title as one description, acts of dominion over any portion of the land covered by the entire description are referable to the whole, in any event after the two descriptions are merged in one.—Kingston v. Guck, 155 Mich. 264.

E. TACKING AND TRANSFERS.

§ 39. Successive possessors; tacking.

Effect of buying in outstanding titles and claims, see ante §§ 18, 19, 36.

¶ 180. Separate successive disseisins cannot be tacked so as to constitute one and a single continuous possession unless there is privity of estate between the successive parties in possession, each coming in as the transferee of the possessory rights of his predecessor.—Sheldon v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 161 Mich. 503.

¶ 181. Where a grantee relies upon the deed of his grantor to show privity of estate between himself and the latter, he cannot have the benefit of the grantor's possession of lands which are not mentioned in the deed. —Sheldon v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 161 Mich. 503.

¶ 184. Where one in possession of premises has contracted to sell them and has recovered possession from the vendees through forfeiture of the contracts or otherwise, the possession of the vendees may inure to his benefit in establishing continuous adverse possession if there has been no interval between the vacation by the vendees and the occupancy by the claimant.—Merritt v. Westerman, 165 Mich. 535.

¶ 185. One cannot have the benefit of the adverse possession of land by his predecessors in title where the conveyances under which he claims do not purport to convey the premises so occupied, and where the same are not within the inclosure of those actually conveyed.—Nichols v. New England Furniture Co., 100 Mich. 230.

¶ 186. The mere assessment of land to a claimant thereof, and the payment of the taxes by him, is insufficient to continue an adverse possession previously held by his grantor, especially where the latter had abandoned the premises prior to conveying them. —Miller v. Davis, 106 Mich. 300.

¶ 189. Actual possession and occupancy for the statutory period, by successive owners of a city lot, of a strip of land included within the platted lines of a public street, is sufficient to establish title as against the city, although none of the owners occupies the premises for the full period, and although each conveyance excepts that part set aside for sidewalk purposes, where the part actually used for a sidewalk has never included the strip claimed, and the recorded plat sets aside no specific land for such purpose.—Vincent v. City of Kalamazoo, 111 Mich. 230.

F. DISABILITIES AND SUSPENSIONS.

§ 40. Capacity to enter or sue for possession.

Capacity of the public to be disseised, see ante § 5.

Necessity that right of entry exist, see ante § 8.

The disability to sue pertaining to infancy, coverture, etc., is fully treated in Infants; Husband and Wife; Insane Persons; Limitations of Actions, which see.

The maturity of the right to enter depends on the nature of the estate under which entry is to be made, and hence is properly treated in topics Life Estates, Reversions and Reminders; Dower; Wills; and the like.

Time when right deemed to have accrued, see Jud. Act, chap. IX. §§ 2, 3, Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12312, 12313.

Extended time for persons under disability, see Jud. Act, Chap. IX, §§ 5, 7, Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12315, 12317.

Extension on account of death, see Jud. Act, Chap. IX, § 6, Comp. L. 1915, § 12316.

IV. EFFECT AND TITLE ACQUIRED.

Constructive possession of whole tract under color of title, see ante § 38.

The area to which title passes depends on the extent of possession under color or claim of title, as to which see ante III, D.

Sufficiency of title to control giving of notice to occupant or owner in highway opening proceedings, see Highways, II, B.

Disseisin as preventing consummation of dower in premises on death of husband, see Dower, II.

The general doctrine that possession is notice of the possessor's claim or right to one taking a conveyance from another is treated in Notice and Record of Title.

¶ 190. Actual possession with a claim of ownership in fee establishes a presumptive title as against every one but those whose title is better.—Loomis v. Roberts, 57 Mich. 284.

¶ 192. Fifteen years' adverse possession is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to maintain ejectment without paper title.—Nowlen v. Hall, 128 Mich. 274.

¶ 193. A title obtained by more than 15 years' adverse possession is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to maintain trespass.—Hart v. Doyle, 128 Mich. 257.

¶ 194. A purchaser at guardian's sale duly confirmed by the probate court and conveyed subsequent to the ward's attainment of majority, purporting to convey the ward's interest and held as such for 42 years with no recognition of any tenancy in common with him, has the title good as against one claiming through such ward.—Payment v. Murphy, 141 Mich. 626.

¶ 195. The adverse possession of land by a patentee and those claiming under him for fifty years renders evidence of the nonrecord of the patent irrelevant in a suit involving the title to the land.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 78 Mich. 455.

See also post ¶ 227.

Transfer of possession before title complete, see ante III, E.

The general doctrine that a title or interest in land must be conveyed by a writing is treated in Frauds, Statute of.

¶ 197. In an action of trespass involving the true location of a boundary line, it appeared that, upon defendant's removing a fence from the line as claimed by plaintiff, where it had existed for many years, and building it upon the line as claimed by himself, plaintiff stated that he would have a resurvey to determine where the true line was, and would not abide by the survey which defendant had caused to be made, and in accordance with which he had erected his fence. Held, that plaintiff was not thereby estopped from setting up title to the land in dispute by adverse possession.—Van Der Groef v. Jones, 108 Mich. 65.

¶ 198. A parol agreement made by a person after he has acquired title to a disputed strip by adverse possession, that he will unite with the adjoining landowner who claims to own such strip, in having a survey made to determine the true line, will not, at least until it is acted upon, and the line actually established, divest such person of his title.—Lamoreaux v. Creveling, 103 Mich. 501, on authority of Burns v. Martin, 45 Mich. 22.

¶ 199. If a boundary line has been established by adverse possession for more than 15 years, an oral agreement to have a survey made to establish the line is not sufficient to defeat the title obtained by the adverse possession.—Lamb v. Lamb, 139 Mich. 166.

¶ 200. A husband leased a part of a homestead to a township, but the lease was void for lack of the wife's signature. The township occupied the premises for thirty-six years. The township board learned of the lease, and found it among the township papers. It made a new agreement to pay rent for the premises. Held, it was estopped to set up that it had held the premises by adverse possession.—Township of Jasper v. Martin, 161 Mich. 336.

V. PLEADING, EVIDENCE AND PRACTICE.

Admissibility in proof under general issue in ejectment, see Ejectment, III.

¶ 201. A purchaser of real property may set up adverse possession as against a tax lien in favor of the city existing at the time of the purchase, without alleging want of knowledge of the outstanding tax lien at the time of purchase.—Cass Farm Co. v. City of Detroit, 139 Mich. 318.

¶ 202. A bill to quiet title to certain lands, based upon adverse possession, held sufficient in alleging adverse possession without also alleging same was exclusive.—Corby v. Thompson, 196 Mich. 706.

¶ 203. An allegation of a bill of complaint that trustees have always refused and still refuse to account to the complainants for the corpus of the trust estate, negatives any claim that the trustees hold adversely to the complainants.—Sprague v. Trustees of Protestant Episcopal Church, 186 Mich. 554.

¶ 204. Where a bill by a vendee for specific performance alleges that the vendee purchased, took and continuously maintained possession under the contract and paid the full purchase price an allegation of adverse possession therein is wholly untenable.—Rodgers v. Beckel, 172 Mich. 544.

¶ 206. Where the possession of land is separate from the title the law will not presume that the possession is adverse, since every presumption is in favor of possession in subordination to the title of the true owner.—Conner v. Detroit Terminal R. Co., 183 Mich. 241.

¶ 207. Evidence of adverse possession must be strictly construed, and every presumption is in favor of the true owner.—Sheldon v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 161 Mich. 503.

¶ 210. The effect of evidence of continuous possession as the basis of a claim of title is not destroyed by proof of occasional interruptions in the actual occupancy of the premises, nor by the fact that at times they were actually occupied by persons not distinctly shown to be in under any of the parties in the claimant's chain of title; there being no proof of any adverse occupancy, or of any intention of the claimant or his grantors to abandon the possession. It is a just presumption that such persons were in, as tenants merely, under the parties claiming title.—Rayner v. Lee, 20 Mich. 384.

Degree and sufficiency of proofs, see post § 50.

¶ 214. Where one of several heirs had taken exclusive possession of land to which all were entitled as tenants in common, and had improved it without interference from the others, though they lived in the immediate neighborhood, and no possessory action was brought by them, or by their heirs or representatives for more than twenty-five years after their death, it was held that no possession could properly be found that was not adverse and exclusive within the statutory period of limitation, and that there could be no recovery in the right of the excluded parties.—Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274.

¶ 215. Whether it is error to rule that occupation by one tenant in common, giving leases and receiving rents for more than twenty years with the knowledge of his co-tenant, without actual acknowledgment of the latter's rights, and without any claim by such co-tenant for a share of the rents and profits, will bar a recovery in ejectment by the latter, quere, two justices holding that upon such facts the inference or presumption of title is one of law, and the other two holding it to be one of fact for the jury.—Dubois v. Campau, 28 Mich. 304.

¶ 217. Where children are of full age, married, and with homes of their own, there is no conclusive presumption that a father who occupies realty owned by the deceased mother does so in subordination to the title of the children.—Tyler v. Wright, 164 Mich. 606.

¶ 218. In an action of ejectment by one tenant in common against another, where defendant claims title to all the property as the result of adverse possession of the part claimed by plaintiff, where defendant obtained possession lawfully under a deed from the life tenant and its possession did not become unlawful until the death of the life tenant, the burden to show that the continued possession was adverse was upon the defendant.—Rich v. Victoria Copper Mining Co., 147 F. 380.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post §§ 48-51.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

The cases on the rule that one's acts and declarations out of court may be received against him as admissions against interest, and on the rule that one's similar acts and declarations are not receivable against the other party unless brought home to his knowledge or notice under a duty to make reply, are treated in Evidence, VII.

¶ 219. Adverse possession and its character may be shown by the claims and assertions of occupants, and if these are made in the ordinary course of possession and not during litigation, they are admissible as explanatory and for what they are worth.—Jacobs v. Callaghan, 57 Mich. 11.

¶ 220. A defendant in ejectment interposed the defense of adverse possession. In order to meet this, plaintiff was allowed to prove by the grandfather of certain minor heirs who inherited the land, and through whom plaintiff claimed title, that defendant's possession of the land was under an agreement made by him with the witness, who assumed to act for the minors, that defendant might occupy said land in consideration of his paying the taxes thereon. The testimony was objected to for want of proof of the authority of the grandfather to act for the minors. Held, that, if defendant in fact entered into the possession of the land under the agreement testified to, he did not enter in hostility to the minor heirs, and that for the purpose of establishing such fact the testimony was admissible.—Hoban v. Cable, 102 Mich. 206.

¶ 221. Where plaintiff claims by adverse occupancy up to a division fence which defendant claims was not built by plaintiff with the expectation of holding all of the land inclosed within it, defendant may show that after a survey which disclosed that part of the fence encroached on defendant's land, plaintiff removed it so as to conform to the division line as located by said survey.—Hockmoth v. Des Grand Champs, 71 Mich. 520.

¶ 222. Where, in an action of ejectment for a strip of land which plaintiff claimed by adverse possession, a surveyor testified that he was employed by plaintiff's grantor, seventeen years before, to make a survey of the ground, and that the latter then claimed title up to the fence on the west side of his premises, it was proper to show, by way of characterizing his claim, that the original boundary, as located by the surveyor at the time, was east of the strip in controversy, and that he so indicated the line by a surveyor's mark, which was yet visible.—Beecher v. Ferris, 110 Mich. 537.

¶ 224. The intention with which possession is held constitutes the very essence of adverse possession, and the assertion of the occupant with reference to the nature of his possession is competent evidence to prove intention.—Youngs v. Cunningham, 57 Mich. 153.

¶ 225. In an action involving title to certain land, it being claimed that the common grantor had conveyed to his daughters who had again conveyed to plaintiff, claiming adversely, evidence showing how the land was treated by the members of the family, and their understanding as to whom it belonged to, is admissible as bearing upon their subsequent conduct.—Brigham v. Reau, 139 Mich. 256.

¶ 226. In ejectment, it was not error to refuse to permit defendant to testify on the issue of adverse possession of a disputed strip, as to whether at the time he built the fence in question, he ever intended to change it; where such fence was built under some arrangement between defendant and plaintiff's remote ancestor, since deceased.—Miller v. Shumway, 135 Mich. 654.

¶ 227. On an issue of adverse possession in ejectment by one against another common owner testimony by defendant that many years ago his father, the ancestor of both, made defendant a parol gift of the land was incompetent.—Weshgyl v. Schick, 113 Mich. 22.

¶ 228. In ejectment, it was not error to refuse to permit defendant to prove on the issue of adverse possession, that it was generally understood in the neighborhood that he owned the land in controversy; where defendant's possession was conceded to be distinct and notorious, but its hostility was denied.—Miller v. Shumway, 135 Mich. 654.

¶ 229. The extent of the possession is a fact to be established upon the trial, and it is always competent to establish it by any testimony relevant for that purpose, where title is claimed by adverse possession.—Greene v. Anglemire, 77 Mich. 168.

¶ 230. Deeds, whether valid or not, under which a party in possession claims, are admissible for the purpose of showing possession under claim and color of title, and the extent thereof.—King v. Merritt, 67 Mich. 194.

¶ 231. On issue of adverse possession whether a former suit in ejectment has or has not been abandoned is not material when it is admitted only for the purpose of proving that the plaintiffs therein by bringing it, committed an ouster of their co-tenants.—Fenton v. Miller, 94 Mich. 204.

¶ 233. In an action of ejectment by a wife's administrator against the heirs of her deceased husband, defendants' attorney offered in evidence a tax deed acquired by the husband in the wife's lifetime, stating that he proposed to follow it up by proof of adverse possession. She had been dead more than 15 years when action was begun. The admissibility of the deed was questioned, and the court inquired if defendants proposed to build up title under the deed, and also asked if there was any claim that the statutory period began to run from the wife's death. Defendants' counsel refused to concede that they relied wholly upon the deed, or to base their claim solely on adverse possession subsequent to the wife's death, but stated that they would "build title of possession up under the deed from the time it was given." The court thereupon rejected the evidence and directed a verdict for plaintiff. Held, that defendants should have been allowed to introduce their proofs relating to adverse possession in view of the rule that color of title is no longer requisite.—Ward v. Nestell, 113 Mich. 185.

¶ 234. Inclosure of land by a fence for twenty-eight years, cutting wood on said land during that time, and performance of other acts indicating ownership and tending to show occupancy up to the line of the fence, must be regarded as tending to establish adverse possession.—Lamoreaux v. Creveling, 103 Mich. 501.

¶ 235. Evidence that defendant had used the strip of land in question, lying east of his fence, for a pathway during part of the time for which plaintiff claimed to have been in adverse possession, was admissible in the former's favor.—Beecher v. Ferris, 110 Mich. 537.

¶ 236. Although paying taxes, or asserting title, or the common understanding in the neighborhood, or making surveys, or an occasional renting for trapping and shooting, are not sufficient to establish title by adverse possession, yet such acts are competent evidence to be considered in determining the question.—Whitaker v. Erie Shooting Club, 102 Mich. 454.

¶ 237. Payment of taxes on land by a person claiming ownership is admissible in an action of ejectment against him, as tending not only to establish his claim of ownership, but to show adverse possession, the taxes being assessed to him.—Murray v. Hudson, 65 Mich. 670.

¶ 238. Where possession is shown to have been once acquired by those under whom a party claims, evidence that the land has since been assessed as resident land, and that the taxes have been paid by some one in such party's chain of title, is admissible as tending to show that the possession was continued.—Rayner v. Lee, 20 Mich. 384.

¶ 239. A tax deed which is insufficient in itself to pass title, and assessment rolls showing the assessment of the property in the name of the grantee, and proceedings of the probate court showing that the land was treated as a part of the estate of such grantee upon his decease, are admissible, upon an issue of adverse possession, to characterize the acts of possession, on the part of such grantee and his successors, shown by the evidence.—Chabert v. Russell, 109 Mich 571.

Necessary factors of openness, hostility, etc., see ante § 9 et seq.
Necessity of stronger case where there is no color of title, see ante ¶ 132.
When urged as title in ejectment, see also ante ¶ 22.
As question for jury, see also post §§ 52-54.
Propriety of directing verdict, see post § 54.

¶ 244. Adverse possession must be clear and distinct, and plainly proved, to establish title.—Campau v. Campau, 45 Mich. 367.

¶ 247. When title is claimed under a deed, the deed is the best evidence of the extent of the possession, and when applied for that purpose the same rules of evidence apply in a case of adverse possession as in any other case, and no more than a preponderance of evidence is ever required to establish such a possession.—Greene v. Anglemire, 77 Mich. 168.

¶ 248. Upon the question whether a testator has title by adverse possession to realty which he attempts to dispose of by will, statements in the will tending to disparage his title must be interpreted in connection with the whole will, due weight being given to the fact that by making the will he assumed the right to dispose of said realty.—Tyler v. Wright, 164 Mich. 606.

¶ 249. Color of title, under a deed, and occupancy of a part, will be sufficient proof to constitute an adverse possession to a single lot.—Millerd v. Reeves, 1 Mich. 107.

¶ 250. Proof that a person entered into possession under a contract with a party under whom the claimant holds—it appearing that he never received a deed and that he has ceased to occupy the premises—is not evidence of possession adverse to claimant.—Rayner v. Lee, 20 Mich. 384.

¶ 251. Adverse possession is made out by showing that the plaintiff had entered into possession twenty-five years ago, built a house on adjacent property and used the tract in question since that time.—Hart v. Doyle, 128 Mich. 257.

¶ 252. Title cannot be gained by adverse possession where there is an absence of proof that the occupation was hostile and in denial of the owner's rights, and where the alleged adverse possessor conveyed his adjacent land without including the small parcel in question.—Dillie v. Longwell, 163 Mich. 439.

¶ 253. Evidence of a former ejectment suit brought by the now defendants against the husband of the now plaintiff in which the wife was a witness and interested in the suit, in which title by adverse possession was asserted and found for the then plaintiff, if not sufficient to show res adjudicata, is at least enough to warrant an issue for the jury in the present case involving lands with the same chain of title.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 126 Mich. 217.

¶ 254. Title by adverse possession is shown, where, in a suit to quiet title, it appears that claimant under such title purchased the land in controversy thirty years prior upon foreclosure of a mortgage, that he lived in a village near by, that the land was generally known by his name, and was assessed to him, that he inclosed it with a fence, took wood and hay from it, raised some crops upon it and kept hay in a building upon it; even though such foreclosure proceedings were admittedly void.—Miskwabik Development Ass'n v. Croze, 140 Mich. 194.

¶ 255. Uncontradicted testimony of defendant's grantor that he took title subject to a life lease in duplicate to plaintiff's grantor, as lessee, who was previously in possession, relied on to prevent such possession being adverse, and that it was entered into in settlement of an effort to remove such possessor, who was to pay the taxes during his life, is discredited by failure to show that any one ever heard of any steps by him to oust such possessor, or of the lease, though each of the parties made transfers of the land, that the witness conveyed it by warranty deed and on the same day it was reconveyed to his wife, that his mediate and immediate grantees did not take the lease with their title papers, that the supposed lessee died before witness conveyed the land and before the lease was destroyed, as he claimed, nine years later, and that during such interval he was agent of his wife, in respect to the property and as such went to see the land, near which the supposed lessee had lived, but without learning of his death for twelve years.—Howatt v. Green, 139 Mich. 289.

¶ 257. In an action of ejectment a charge that the defendant had not established title by adverse possession held justified where the evidence tended merely to show that a crooked fence had stood along the boundary line for a period of much less than fifteen years, that a tenant of the defendant for a time maintained a garden on the strip and that another tenant had during one season made a lawn on a part thereof.—Austin v. Crowell, 193 Mich. 296.

¶ 258. In summary proceedings for the possession of real estate, where the sole question involved was whether defendant's adverse possession of the premises had been sufficiently hostile, the evidence showed that defendant had, a number of years before, disputed the title of plaintiff's decedent; that at the same time he disputed the right of plaintiff's decedent to put him off the land; that plaintiff's decedent lived eight years thereafter, and took no steps to disturb defendant; that after the death of plaintiff's decedent, defendant told the son who acted as agent for the estate that he (defendant) was the owner of the farm, and could not be put off, also telling him his grounds for claiming title; that defendant paid the taxes which were assessed to him; that after asserting title he built a substantial house on the land, and that he granted a right for a highway and drain through the land, and sold gravel from it. Held, that this evidence is sufficiently clear and cogent on the question of the hostility of defendant's possession.—Parker v. Case, 155 Mich. 497.

Character of possession required, see ante § 10.

¶ 260. Evidence that in 1861 the grantor of defendant relying upon adverse possession employed to look after the land a farmer who at times drove his cattle there to pasture, and authorized men to cut the grass, that the land was used by the cattle of the neighborhood as a common, that grass was cut by any one who chose, that the farmer's supervision ended in 1876 or 1878, and that the land remained unoccupied until 1882, when defendant entered under a deed, is not sufficient to make a prima facie case for submission to the jury.—Judson v. Duffy, 96 Mich. 255.

¶ 261. Title was claimed by adverse occupancy up to a fence which, when built, commenced on the true line and by a deviation inclosed the land in dispute. It was composed in part of logs and brush. The adjoining land was wild and its owner did not live in the neighborhood, though he occasionally passed that way. Held, that the evidence of adverse holding should be such as to convince the jury that the fence was built as a permanent assertion of title to all of the land inside of it, which was thereafter held for the statutory period under such circumstances and in such a way as plainly to give notice that the occupant claimed title thereto as against all persons, and this so notoriously that the original owner, if he did not know of such hostile occupation, ought to have known it; and that the jury might take into consideration how and when the fence was built, and of what materials.—Hockmoth v. Des Grand Champs, 71 Mich. 520.

¶ 262. A bona fide and actual possession of wild lands is not clearly established by testimony tending to show that the party making such claim occupied a shanty on the land while removing timber therefrom, it not appearing who built the shanty, nor what the purpose was for which it was built, and there being a doubt as to the shanty's being upon the land from which the timber was removed.—McKinnon v. Meston, 104 Mich. 642.

What constitutes ouster, see ante § 16.
Ejectment suit as admission of ouster, see ante ¶¶ 75, 76.

¶ 263. Title by adverse possession, whatever the extent of the claim, must be clear and distinct, as against co-tenants.—Campau v. Campau, 44 Mich. 31.

¶ 264. Before a tenant in common will be held to have acquired title against his cotenant by adverse possession the proofs must be clear and cogent, and the case cannot be made out by inference.—Donahue v. Vosper, 189 Mich. 78, affirmed in 243 U. S. 59, 61 L. ed. 592, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350.

¶ 265. A tenant in common executed a quitclaim deed purporting to convey the entire estate. The grantee entered into possession, claiming to own the whole property, and he and his grantees maintained an actual, continuous, and exclusive possession thereof for twenty-eight years, improving the premises, paying the taxes assessed thereon, and successively conveying the entire interest by warranty deed. The owners of the remaining interest resided in the immediate neighborhood during the greater part of such period of occupancy. Held, upon a bill for partition filed by the latter, that an absolute title by adverse possession had been established in the defendants.—Fuller v. Swensberg, 106 Mich. 305.

¶ 267. A finding of an ouster of a tenant in common by his co-tenant, essential to make the sole possession of the latter adverse, may rest upon evidence tending to show that for thirty years or more the land has been known by his name, that such acts of ownership as the character of the land was susceptible of were exercised by him, that he procured a tax deed, which he caused to be placed of record, and that upon his death the property was divided and the lots distributed among his heirs, and that neither the former tenant nor any of his successors made any claim to the premises during such time.—La Fountain v. Dee, 110 Mich. 347.

¶ 268. Evidence that a widow had a dower right to land occupied, under an agreement with the heirs, and subsequently built a house upon the premises upon condition of life tenure, although contradicted by other testimony of her claim of a fee, is held sufficient to defeat a title by adverse possession.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 126 Mich. 217.

¶ 269. Title by adverse possession held sustained by the evidence in an action to quiet title, the question being between rights under an original tenancy in common, the defendants having resided in the vicinity at all times and been familiar with the lands in question.—Brigham v. Reau, 139 Mich. 256.

¶ 270. Evidence held to show plaintiff's possession of a certain portion of lands into possession of which plaintiffs' and defendants' ancestors had entered in common was of such character as to impart information and give notice to plaintiffs' co-tenants in common that adverse possession and actual disseisin were intended to be asserted against defendants, where plaintiffs had occupied such portion for seventy years, paid taxes, transferred same by warranty deeds, and had leased, inventoried and listed same as their own, in a suit to quiet title to such portion.—Corby v. Thompson, 196 Mich. 706.

¶ 271. A lot owner does not obtain title to a portion of the street by adverse possession where the evidence shows that for many years the fences were not considered "line fences," that his building was recognized by him as encroaching, that there was a general understanding that he would remove the building when others did, and that the city had no notice of an open adverse possession.—Village of Red Jacket v. Pinton, 126 Mich. 194.

¶ 272. Title to a public street by adverse possession is not shown by fencing off and using for agricultural purposes where it is not clear that this is more than for temporary use of the land; the acquisition of title to a public street in this manner is not favored by the court.—City of Mt. Clemens v. Mt. Clemens Sanitarium Co., 127 Mich. 115.

¶ 273. Where a lot owner has adopted a certain line beyond the platted line as the boundary between his lot and the street, has built a fence thereon, and a barn, up to the line, and where sidewalks have been laid down and shade trees planted with reference to this claimed boundary, there is sufficient evidence of adverse possession to give complainant title.—Triece v. City of South Haven, 154 Mich. 129.

¶ 277. Adverse possession is a defense resting wholly upon facts.—De Mill v. Moffat, 45 Mich. 410.

¶ 280. It is for the jury to say whether plaintiff in ejectment has shown adverse possession where there is evidence on both sides of that issue.—Beecher v. Ferris, 117 Mich. 108.

¶ 281. Evidence of the assessment of land to a claimant by adverse possession is admissible as tending to show such possession, and, while not of any great value, its weight is for the jury.—Sauers v. Giddings, 90 Mich. 50.

¶ 282. Where notwithstanding a deed to one person another went into exclusive possession and exercised acts of ownership, and such possession was recognized by all mesne grantees of the first, the occupant's adverse title is a question for the jury in an action of ejectment against him by one claiming under the deed.—McCall v. Wells, 55 Mich. 171.

¶ 283. Where the testimony in support of a claim of adverse possession tends to show a continuous use of the land, by cutting the grass and pasturing cattle thereon each year during the period of occupancy, in addition to planting trees upon the premises, it is a question for the jury whether such occupancy was practically continuous, exclusive and hostile, and intended to be such by the claimant.—Sauers v. Giddings, 90 Mich. 50.

¶ 285. In ejectment, the issue of adverse possession was properly submitted to the jury, where although there was testimony that plaintiff's grantor knew that defendant had held the land for longer than the statutory period in hostility to his claim, there was also testimony of admissions by the defendant that when the suit was commenced he had not held the land long enough to make it his.—Miller v. Shumway, 135 Mich. 654.

¶ 286. In ejectment between grantees of tenants in common defendant claimed title by adverse possession, and asserted that his entry under a warranty deed was an ouster of the co-tenants. There was evidence to show, however, that he only bargained for an undivided interest, and there was nothing to show that the co-tenants knew of his possession or claim of title. Held, for the jury to determine whether he entered claiming title to the whole, and intending to oust his co-tenants.—Highstone v. Burdette, 54 Mich. 329.

¶ 289. It is for the jury to say on the evidence of the occupancy of a line for more than twenty years whether it was supposedly the true boundary and intended to settle it there, or whether it was in expectation of adjusting the occupancy to the boundary as soon as ascertained.—Bunce v. Bidwell, 43 Mich. 542.

¶ 290. In an action of ejectment, the issue being one of adverse possession up to a certain fence, where defendant testified that an agreement had been made with plaintiff's predecessor that the line should be established by a survey, and the time when such alleged agreement was made was not fixed by the evidence, it raises a question for the jury whether such agreement, if made, was made at a date before the statute of limitations had run.—Lamb v. Lamb, 139 Mich. 166.

¶ 292. In ejectment the plaintiff may have the jury pass on his title by adverse possession, notwithstanding his ownership for less than fifteen years, if the location of the fence, undisputedly marking the boundary of the land for over thirty years, during his possession and that of his predecessors in title, has not been changed.—Gildea v. Warren, 173 Mich. 28.

¶ 293. Where a plaintiff in ejectment shows that her house was built where it stands more than fifty years ago and that a strip of land lying between the residences of the parties has been occupied as a part of the yard surrounding her residence for more than thirty years by herself and by the grantors of her residence property and the preceding ones in title, the question whether the property has been held adversely should be submitted to the jury.—Abel v. Roosenraad, 173 Mich. 98.

¶ 294. Unless the evidence as to adverse possession reaches the required degree of clearness and cogency—which is a question for the court—the case should not be submitted to the jury.—Judson v. Duffy, 96 Mich. 255.

¶ 295. Where, in an action to recover marsh land to which defendants claimed title by adverse possession, it appeared that their predecessors claimed to be the owners, and exercised acts of ownership by driving stakes to mark boundaries, by fishing, hunting, and trapping, by leasing to others, by erecting signs to warn off trespassers, and defendants by building a dike around the land, a request to direct a verdict for plaintiff was properly refused.—Chabert v. Russell, 109 Mich. 571.

¶ 296. It is error to direct a verdict upon evidence sufficient to show thirty years' ouster of a co-tenant, in the face of the testimony of a witness who had several times been upon the premises adjoining those in dispute, and who was in position to know if there had been any acts of adverse possession, that he had not seen any sign of occupancy up to three years before the trial, nor any attempt to exercise ownership of the land at all.—La Fountain v. Dee, 110 Mich. 347.

¶ 297. Where there is any evidence tending to show that the premises were unoccupied during part of the period of adverse possession relied on by defendants in ejectment, it is error to direct a verdict in their favor, it being for the jury to determine, on conflicting evidence, whether there has been an actual, or visible, or notorious, or continued possession.—Pendill v. Marquette County Agric. Soc., 95 Mich. 491.

¶ 298. Where in ejectment against a city for portions of an island in a river, it appeared that for more than forty years before suit, the city's grantors had been in possession of the upper part of the island, and for twenty years were in actual occupancy of that portion represented by a so-called interlocker while claiming to own the entire island, the city's title was so clearly established by adverse possession that the court would have been justified in directing a verdict in its favor.—McKee v. City of Grand Rapids, 133 Mich. 272.

¶ 299. In an action of ejectment by the owner of the record title to land, located on the shore of Pere Marquette Lake and occupied by the fishing shanty of defendant, defendant testified that he built the shanty upon the land, supposed that some one owned it, but, not knowing who, he claimed to own it from the outset, and so told almost everyone he knew; that he never had permission from any one to occupy it; that he used and occupied it for thirty-five years during the fishing season as any one would use his own property. The evidence was not clear that defendant supposed the land to be owned by the federal government. The plaintiff testified that the shanty rested part on land and part on water, and that he never paid any taxes on the property. Held, the court erred in directing a verdict for the plaintiff, since under defendant's testimony he was a trespasser and it was for the jury to say whether his occupancy was hostile so as to give him title by adverse possession.—Stearns Salt & Lumber Co. v. Newberg, 170 Mich. 324.

¶ 301. When the title is claimed by an adverse possession for the statutory period, it should appear that the possession had been actual, continued, visible, notorious, distinct and hostile. And where the circuit judge was requested so to instruct the jury, and refused, but instructed them only that the possession must be actual, continued and visible, held to be error.—Sparrow v. Hovey, 44 Mich. 63.

¶ 302. In an ejectment case the court instructed the jury, upon the question of adverse possession, that to bar a recovery the premises must have been occupied by defendant for fifteen years by an open and notorious possession, adverse to plaintiff, but did not tell them that this possession, in order to be adverse, must be distinct and hostile to plaintiff's rights. Held, in the absence of any request for a definition, that there was no error.—Miller v. Beck, 68 Mich. 76.

¶ 304. An instruction in ejectment that plaintiff's adverse possession would become perfect with the lapse of fifteen years, even if he originally had no shadow of title, if such possession was so open that any other person could bring suit to eject him, sufficiently presents the point that plaintiff need not show any deed, survey, or plat as evidence of ownership to entitle him to recover.—Beecher v. Ferris, 112 Mich. 584.

¶ 305. In an action of ejectment by one tenant in common against another, in which defendant claimed title to the entire property by adverse possession, an instruction upon the requisites of adverse possession that it was not necessary that the occupation should be such that a mere stranger passing by would see the possession and would appreciate that somebody was in possession there claiming title, and that it was only necessary that the possession was such that those in the neighborhood, and who were in a position to know what was going on, appreciated that the defendants had possession and claimed the exclusive right to the whole of the property, was erroneous in view of the relationship of the parties.—Rich v. Victoria Copper Mining Co., 147 F. 380.

¶ 306. In ejectment where the defendant claimed that when he took possession of the land it came within the description of his deed, that he occupied all of it as one farm, and that the timber land was occupied as any farmer would occupy his timber land; it is not error to refuse to charge "that adverse possession, as far as the boundary is concerned, does not extend beyond the ground actually occupied."—Henry v. Henry, 122 Mich. 6.

¶ 307. Instruction in an action of trespass as to the elements of adverse possession pleaded defensively, held erroneous as requiring more direct and certain and explicit acts of the defendant than the law provides.—Sherrard v. Cudney, 134 Mich. 200.

¶ 309. An instruction, that executing a lease which recognized title in another would be very strong evidence that the lessee understood that he had no title to the property, is not objectionable as telling the jury that one must believe in his title in order to have an adverse possession.—Campau v. Lafferty, 43 Mich. 429.

¶ 310. Where the possession had continued so long that title was complete unless a certain lease to the claimant, ten years before suit, broke the continuity by recognizing title under which plaintiff claims, it was error to refuse to charge that the "lease shows full recognition of the title * * *, and if the jury find it was signed by defendant with full knowledge of its contents, the plaintiff is entitled to recover," and to charge instead that such recognition would be very strong evidence that he understood that he had no title and that twenty years' adverse possession would give him a perfect title without charging further what was meant by adverse possession.—Campau v. Lafferty, 43 Mich. 429.

¶ 311. In ejectment on a claim by plaintiff of adverse possession it is error to charge that, if one of plaintiff's grantors (Holland) held under S. as tenant, no independent title could be founded thereon; where S. also conveyed to plaintiff, who thereby became entitled to take possession, and the defendant did not claim under S.—Hoffman v. City of Port Huron, 102 Mich. 417.

¶ 312. Where plaintiff in error claimed title by adverse possession to a strip of land which defendant had used for a footpath, it was error requiring reversal to give an instruction not supported by the evidence, to the effect that defendant had paid the taxes on the land for a specified year, since such fact, if true, would tend to show that the user of the strip by defendant was accompanied by a claim of title, and was therefore not in subordination to, or acquiescence in, plaintiff's claim.—Beecher v. Ferris, 117 Mich. 108.

¶ 314. In ejectment involving the title to portions of an island in a river, where there was dispute as to whether the narrowing of the channel was due to natural accretions or to dredging, the jury were properly instructed that unless they believed that the narrowing was not made by natural accretions and that the defendant had not been in adverse possession of the strip of land between what was then the west bank and the bank at the present time for a period of 15 years; it was a question for the jury to say how far from the east bank of the channel plaintiffs were entitled to recover.—McKee v. City of Grand Rapids, 133 Mich. 272.

¶ 315. As a fence is not necessary to the adverse occupancy of land it is error to charge that the removal of a fence precludes claiming adverse possession.—Beecher v. Galvin, 71 Mich. 391.

¶ 316. On the question of adverse possession by fencing and occupancy, it is too broad to charge that the fence must be permanent and that a pole or brush fence does not amount to exclusive possession, where the land at the time was all wild; since the time and character of the place and of the fence should be considered.—Hockmoth v. Des Grand Champs, 71 Mich. 520.

¶ 317. Where title is claimed by adverse possession of land bounded by a fence it is proper to charge that if adverse possession for the requisite period is found, "it is wholly immaterial how or by what right or authority the fence came to be constructed and maintained at the place or along the line where it stood (when the suit was brought), if it was by and through an error or mistake."—Greene v. Anglemire, 77 Mich. 168.

¶ 319. It was error to refuse to charge that the owner need not move to retake possession till he learns that the land is in possession, where there is evidence that the possession was by inclosing with a rude fence, and that it was not all built at one time, and that the owner had at times passed by the place.—Hockmoth v. Des Grand Champs, 71 Mich. 520.

¶ 320. In an action of ejectment, the issue being one of adverse possession up to a certain fence, instructions that unless the jury find that the land was occupied up to the fence under a claim that it was the line for fifteen years, and also that there was no agreement that the true line was to be ascertained by a survey, the line would not be fixed by adverse possession, is proper.—Lamb v. Lamb, 139 Mich. 166.

¶ 321. An instruction in ejectment that if the jury find that the land was occupied for fifteen years by the defendant, an oral agreement after that time by which the boundary was changed would come within the statute of frauds and not be binding, is sufficient on the question of adverse possession.—Dawson v. Falls City Boat Club, 125 Mich. 433.

¶ 322. Adverse possession, to give title, must be an actual, continued, visible, notorious, distinct and hostile possession, and a finding of adverse possession must set forth in explicit terms a state of facts that will satisfy the legal definition.—Yelverton v. Steele, 40 Mich. 538.

¶ 323. A finding of adverse possession must set forth in explicit terms a state of facts that will satisfy the legal definition.—Paldi v. Paldi, 95 Mich. 410.

§1. In general; when and by whom to be made.

The necessity, propriety and sufficiency of affidavits as incidents to a particular proceeding or instrument will be considered in connection with the topics to which it relates, and only matters general to any and all affidavits are retained in this topic.

Oath to depositions, see Depositions, IV.

¶1. An affidavit is a sworn statement reduced to writing, and evidenced by the fact that it has been subscribed and sworn to before some officer having authority to administer oaths.—People ex rel. Esper v. Burns, 161 Mich. 169.

§2. Before whom made.

Officers empowered to administer oaths, see Oaths; and see also topics treating of the various offices, e. g., Notaries Public; Courts, I (clerks); Justices of the Peace.

¶2. An affidavit is a nullity if sworn to before a person not authorized to administer oaths.—Greenvault v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan, 2 D. 498.

¶3. The deputy city clerk of Ionia may administer oaths and take affidavits in the absence of the clerk.—Tower v. Welker, 93 Mich. 332.

¶4. Under Comp. L. 1857, § 404, How. St., § 573, a deputy county clerk has general authority to perform the duties of his principal; therefore an affidavit for attachment sworn to before him is good, though it does not appear that the clerk was absent at the time.—Dorr v. Clark, 7 Mich. 310.

¶5. An affidavit sworn to before a notary is not avoided by his subsequent appearance as attorney in the cause wherein it is used.—Sullivan v. Hall, 86 Mich. 7.

¶6. An affidavit in a chancery cause is not void because the jurat is signed by the "deputy register" as the officer who administered the oath.—Torrans v. Hicks, 32 Mich. 307.

Competent officer, see ante § 2.
Mode of entitling, see post § 4.
Reduction to writing, see ante ¶ 1.
Caption and venue to certificate of acknowledgment, see Acknowledgments, § 11.
Caption and venue of pleadings, see Pleading, I, E.

¶9. Formal requisites of an affidavit are the title, the venue, the signature, the jurat and the authentication.—Beebe v. Morrell, 76 Mich. 114.

¶10. The jurat must show that the affidavit was sworn to before the officer signing it. Where it was stated that it was "sworn and subscribed," without adding "before me," it was held to be a nullity.—Smart v. Howe, 3 Mich. 590.

¶12. When an affidavit is made for the purpose of being used before the officer who administers the oath to it, the omission in the jurat of the words "before me" will not vitiate it.—In re Teachout, 15 Mich. 346.

¶ 13. Where the affidavit was sworn to before a notary public, omission of the venue from the jurat, even though the notary did not state the county for which he was appointed, was held not fatal.—Sullivan v. Hall, 86 Mich. 7.

¶ 14. Where the caption names the county, the affidavit is not bad because the name of the county for which the notary was appointed does not appear after his signature to jurat or in the body of the affidavit.—Smith v. Runnells, 94 Mich. 617.

¶ 15. The omission of the justice's signature to the jurat upon an affidavit in replevin in justice's court may be supplied when objection is raised.—Peterson v. Fowler, 76 Mich. 258.

¶ 16. The affiant's omission to sign an affidavit the jurat of which was officially signed by a justice of the peace before whom the affidavit is used is not fatal; the justice having therein expressly certified that it was subscribed and sworn to by the person concerned.—Bloomingdale v. Chittenden, 75 Mich. 305.

¶ 17. While it is better practice to have the affiant sign an affidavit, it is not essential where his name is stated and it appears from the jurat of the notary that he was properly sworn.—Wynkoop v. Grand Traverse Circuit Judge, 113 Mich. 381.

¶ 18. It is not necessary that the officer in signing the jurat should give more than the initials of his Christian name.—Rice v. People, 15 Mich. 9.

§ 4. Entitling in name of suit or proceeding.

¶ 20. An affidavit in order to be used in a cause must be entitled in like manner as the cause.—Graham v. Elmore, H. 265; Whipple v. Williams, 1 Mich. 115.

¶ 22. The general rule is that an affidavit must be entitled in the cause in which it is to be used, and if it is entitled in a suit that is not pending it is null.—Beebe v. Morrell, 76 Mich. 114.

¶ 23. If an unentitled affidavit filed in a pending suit is fully identified as filed in that cause, the want of a title is immaterial.—Beebe v. Morrell, 76 Mich. 114.

¶ 24. The object of entitling affidavits being to connect them with a suit, so that perjury may be assigned upon them, an affidavit referring to a paper properly entitled and to which it is applicable must be assumed to have adopted the title by reference.—King v. Harrington, 14 Mich. 532.

¶ 25. An affidavit referring to a paper properly entitled, to which it is appended, must be assumed to have adopted the title by the reference.—King v. Harrington, 14 Mich. 532.

¶ 26. A writ of error was sued out in the names of A. and B. On motion, A. was allowed to sever. Affidavits subsequently drawn up and entitled in the names of A. and B. were held bad.—Whipple v. Williams, 1 Mich. 115.

¶ 27. On an application to dissolve a temporary injunction, an affidavit filed by the complainant which on its face is not entitled in the cause, but which is attached to a cover properly entitled in the cause, substantially complies with circuit court rule 37 (b) requiring papers to be entitled in the court and cause, which by chancery rule 15 is applicable to chancery cases, and it may be considered on the hearing.—Doane v. Allen, 172 Mich. 686.

Necessity of certificate to office of the notary taking affidavit in another state, see ante ¶ 19.

The sufficiency of affidavits for various purposes of making a showing is treated in connection with topics treating of the thing or proceeding or writ to which the affidavit is incident. See such topics as Attachment; Pleading, IX, A (formation of issues non est factum and the like): Taxes (authentication of assessment lists and the like); Process, II, D (proof of publication).

Affidavits as evidence in Equity, VIII, A; or on Motions and Orders; or for Injunctions, IV; will be treated such topics.

¶ 28. As a general rule, no matter can be tried upon mere affidavit, except such as to depend upon the discretion of the court.—Haskins v. Moore, How. N. P. 17.

I. THE RELATIONSHIP.

A. NATURE, CREATION AND EXISTENCE.

§ 1. In general; agency or sale, bailment or trust.

Duration, revocation and termination of relation, see post I, B.
Necessity of writing or license, see post §§ 4, 5.
Who is agent or servant within embezzlement statutes, see Crimes.
Agency or independent contract distinguished, see Independent Contractors, I.
Nature of trustee's relation to persons interested in the trust, see Trusts, I.

¶ 1. In legal conception an agency is a contract which to be binding must possess all the essentials of such an agreement.—Cunningham v. Irwin, 182 Mich. 629.

¶ 2. The two positions of principal and agent are inconsistent with each other, and the law will not permit a man to act in such dual capacity.—Hogle v. Meyering, 161 Mich. 472.

¶ 3. One who examines risks for insurance, suggests improvements, fills out and submits applications, and recommends them, if favorable, for an insurance company to write, is an "agent" of such company although he is called an "inspector."—Seamens v. Temple Co., 105 Mich. 400.

¶ 4. A corporation that expressly authorizes a named person "to make sale of same (referring to certain mining leases) on such terms as he shall see fit," and is silent about dividing the proceeds among the shareholders, establishes an agency rather than a trust.—Titus v. Minnesota Min. Co., 8 Mich. 183.

¶ 5. An agreement between a retail grocer and a commercial broker that the former shall include for the latter in his annual order for canned goods a certain amount for the broker is a contract of agency and not a case of bargain and sale required by the statute of frauds to be in writing where the value of the goods exceeds $50.—Hatch v. McBrien, 83 Mich. 159.

¶ 6. A contract whereby a party agrees to sell drills for a company to be settled for during the season at agreed prices, any not sold to be settled for by note or at the option of the company remain its property, and the proceeds of all sales to be turned in to the company with final settlements twice a year, is a contract of purchase and not one of agency merely.—DeKruif v. Flieman, 130 Mich. 12.

¶ 7. A contract by which brewers agree to ship to a certain firm all beer ordered by it at a specified price per barrel, title to remain in vendors until the beer is sold, and by which the firm agrees to take and pay for the beer on such conditions, creates a mere agency.—Dewes Brewery Co. v. Merritt, 82 Mich. 198.

¶ 8. A contract between a resident of the state and a nonresident corporation which has not fulfilled the statutory requirements by filing its articles of incorporation within the state, held to provide for an absolute sale, and not for the establishment of an agency.—Standard Fashion Co. v. Cummings, 187 Mich. 196.

See also post ¶ 35.

Involved in assignment, see also post ¶ 26.

Agency involved in joint adventure or partnership, see Joint Adventures; Partnership.

Partial assignee as agent for assignor to collect balance, see Assignments, III.

¶ 9. Although in ordinary transactions the relation of contractor excludes that of principal and agent or of master and servant, yet there is not necessarily such a repugnance that they cannot exist together.—City of Detroit v. Corey, 9 Mich. 165; Gardner v. Smith, 7 Mich. 410.

¶ 10. In an action to recover the balance due on a contract under which plaintiff agreed to place defendant's advertising, it was held that the court properly charged that the contract created an agency and should govern so far as it expressed the agreement of the parties.—Ayer v. Devlin, 179 Mich. 81.

§ 3. Capacity to be agent or principal.

The capacity of infants or insane persons or married women to enter into contract relations involving agency is treated in Infants, IV; Insane Persons, IV; Husband and Wife, IV, A.

Corporation as agent, see Corporations, XII, B.

§ 4. Object and purposes of agency; regulations and legality.

The general doctrine that a contract for an illegal object is void, is treated in Contracts, IV.

Registration and regulation of agents dealing in securities under the Blue Sky Law, see Pub. Acts 1915, No. 46, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 11955.

Regulation and licensing of agents soliciting for charities, see Pub. Acts 1915, No. 68; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15344-15346.

Registration of name of agent for owner of dwelling under act regulating buildings used for habitation, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 167, § 107.

¶ 11. There can be no agency to do an illegal act, which will absolve the agent when he has performed it and relegate the third person to an action against the principal alone; so held where a sheriff executed a void tax warrant and had paid over the money realized thereby and was afterwards sued for the amount.—First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Watkins, 21 Mich. 483.

§ 5. Oral or written appointment.

Oral ratification, see post § 57.

Validity of power of attorney between parties without acknowledgment, see Acknowledgments, ¶ 74.

Necessity and sufficiency of writing to comply with Statute of Frauds, see Frauds, Statute of.

Formation of contracts of agency by proposal and acceptance, see Contracts, III, B.

Requisites of power of attorney "over or concerning lands or in any manner relating thereto," see Comp. L. 1915, § 11975.

Provisions of the Staute of Frauds as to necessity of written authority, see Comp. L. 1915, chaps. 231, 232. Requirement of writing of agreement to pay commissions on sale of real estate, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11981, ¶ 5.

¶ 12. The general rule is that an agent may be appointed by parol.—Mayor, etc., of City of Detroit v. Jackson, 1 D. 106; Johns v. People, 25 Mich. 499; Taymouth v. Koehler, 35 Mich. 22.

¶ 13. To authorize an agent to execute an instrument under seal, the instrument upon which his power is founded need not be so executed.—McIntosh v. Hodges, 110 Mich. 319.

¶ 14. Complainant sold the timber on certain land to defendant company. The latter at her direction paid back taxes standing against the land, such payment to apply on the timber account. Held, defendant was complainant's agent in paying the taxes.—Backus v. Cowley, 162 Mich. 585.

§ 6. Agency as between two principals.

Evidence as to who was principal, see post §§ 9, 10.
Estoppel to question principalship, see also post ¶ 102.
As question for jury, see post § 11.
Duty of agent, fidelity and good faith, see post §§ 90, 91.
Effect of notice, which person bound and as to what, see post § 74.
Scope of collecting agency, agency in acts beyond scope, see post § 36.
Double agency of broker, see Brokers.
Liability of corporation for acts of agent done while agent of predecessor, see Corporations, VI.
Liability of firm for acts of agent while such for its predecessor, see Partnership, IV, A.
Liability of joint stock association for acts of its predecessor's agent, see Joint Stock Companies.

¶ 15. An agent of one party to a transaction may be appointed as agent of the adverse party for certain purposes, and each party will then stand in the relation of principal to the agent as to the matters by him intrusted to the agent, and as to those alone.—Cutter v. Powers, 200 Mich. 375.

¶ 16. The agency of one who for the buyer has taken charge of timber that has been sold and accepted is single throughout, although he was in the general employment of the vendor, both principals having knowledge of it; and if the point that one cannot be agent for two principals at the same time has any force it would not apply.—Colwell v. Keystone Iron Co., 36 Mich. 51.

¶ 17. A. employed B. to procure for him a loan from C. B. secured C.'s assent, and received a letter of account from C.'s banker authorizing him to draw for the amount, which he afterwards did. Held, that as between A. and C., B. must be considered A.'s agent in procuring the loan, and the letter of credit as only the mode of effecting it; and that the legal effect of the whole transaction was the same as if C. had delivered his own check, or the money, directly to A.—Clark v. McGraw, 14 Mich. 139.

¶ 19. The agency for the mortgage of a firm of attorneys to receive payment of the principal of a mortgage not in their possession, a payment having been made to one of them, who misappropriated the proceeds, is not established by evidence that, without any request by the mortgagee, they had collected the interest on the mortgage, and that, a short time before the payment, some correspondence had passed between them with reference to having the mortgagor procure a renewal of the insurance, where the loan was procured by them for the mortgagor, who paid them by a note included in the security of the mortgage, and which, according to their understanding, also covered their services in collecting interest, and it was the custom of the firm to see that the parties for whom they procured mortgage loans kept up their insurance.—Van Deusen v. Ingraham, 110 Mich. 38.

¶ 20. Where the holder of an unrecorded assignment of a mortgage permits the mortgagee, with whom he has an open account, and who has been intrusted with the care of his money, to collect and receive payments on principal and interest of such mortgage, the mortgagee is his agent, and payment in full to the mortgagee discharges the mortgage.—Bissell v. Dowling, 117 Mich. 646.

¶ 22. A bank through which the parties on payment of an outstanding mortgage and the payment of the purchase price and the making of a new mortgage paid the money necessary to perfect the transaction, which bank paid to each the moneys due him, is to be regarded as the agent of the vendor; and the purchaser is not liable for a misapplication of the money on the old mortgage, which covered other lands, thus leaving the purchase price unpaid, the vendor at the time receiving all that he demanded as his share.—Newman v. Baker, 131 Mich. 89.

¶ 23. A. gave B. a power of attorney to settle a claim due him, and afterwards, without revoking B.'s authority, agreed with C. to give him half of the amount collected, the agreement reciting that the claim was in C.'s hands for collection. A. received without objection half of a payment collected by B. and transmitted to A. through C. B. signed receipts as A.'s attorney in fact, and did not claim to act as C.'s agent. Held, that he was A.'s agent, not C.'s, and that C. was not liable for his misfeasance.—Hoag v. Graves, 81 Mich. 628.

¶ 24. Evidence that the plaintiff is an undertaker hiring hearses from a liveryman, that he insisted that the liveryman purchase more hearses if he wanted to keep his business, and introduced him to the defendant's agent, who sold him the hearses, will not make him an agent for both parties so as to defeat an action for commissions.—Flattery v. James Cunningham, Son & Co., 125 Mich. 467.

¶ 25. Under a contract for the sale of fruit, creating an obligation on the purchaser to accept drafts at a certain place or to notify the seller of a change in the arrangement for payment, the banker with whom the purchaser deposited at such place and to whom a draft was forwarded by the seller was the purchaser's agent, and he was chargeable for the banker's neglect in informing the seller that he had provided for a different place of payment; but the bank through whom the seller acted was the latter's agent making him chargeable for information received by such bank.—Town v. Jepson, 133 Mich. 673.

¶ 27. In an action by the purchaser of stock against an agent and his alleged principal for damages resulting from the sale of the stock, the purchase of which was alleged to have been induced by false representations, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the one defendant was acting as agent for the other and not as agent of the corporations in which his principal held the majority of stock.—Bartholomew v. Walsh, 191 Mich. 252.

Delegability of agency to subagent, see post § 29.

Right of subagent to agreed portion of commissions from agent, see post ¶ 548.

Agency of correspondents of collecting banks, see Banking, VI.

¶ 28. If an agent employs a subagent for his principal, and by his authority, express or implied, such subagent is the agent of the principal, and is directly responsible to the latter for his conduct.—Finch v. Karste, 97 Mich. 20.

§ 8. Agency coupled with interest.

Revocation by death or otherwise, see post § 15.

Mutual rights in property dealt with, see post § 97.

¶ 29. An agency coupled with an interest arises where, by agreement, A. is to lend B.'s money to borrowers at an agreed rate of interest, A. to collect and account for all above one per cent, his compensation.—Perkins v. Hershey, 77 Mich. 504.

§ 9. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence.

Of revocation or termination, see post § 17.

As to the authority of the agent, see post § 39.

As to ratification, see post §§ 66-68.

In actions between principal and agent, see post § 105.

Applications of the general rule that the admissions and declarations of agents are admissible against the principal, but that the agency cannot be proved against the principal by the agent's declarations alone, see Evidence, VII, C.

Admissibility of opinion of witness that conversation led him to believe agency existed, see Evidence, VI, A.

Parol evidence to contradict power of attorney by showing a sale from maker to holder, where third person sues, see Evidence, V, B.

¶ 30. One's agency and authority to act for an absent brother—e. g., in redeeming from foreclosure—may be presumed where the necessities of the case warrant the inference.—Squire v. Wright, 85 Mich. 76.

leged that defendant brewing company sold the saloon in question but authorized the buyer to order supplies in its name an instruction is proper which places on defendant the burden of proving that plaintiff's agent who sold the goods knew at the time of the sale that the buyer had purchased the saloon and was not defendant's agent.—Rochester Distilling Co. v. Traverse City Brewing Co., 174 Mich. 318.

¶ 32. When a disorderly person is arrested by a special police officer, the presumption is that the officer is acting in an official capacity, and not as an agent for the party who by law is required to pay him.—Foster v. Grand Rapids Ry. Co., 140 Mich. 689.

¶ 33. Agency cannot be proved by the statements, declarations or admissions of the agent made out of court, but must be established by tracing its source to some word or act of the alleged principal.—Fisk v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 198 Mich. 270.

¶ 34. An alleged agent may testify directly to the fact that he is an agent, in which case the rule against proving agency by declarations of the agent out of court does not apply. An agent is a competent witness to testify as to the fact of his agency. —Spears v. Black, 190 Mich. 693.

¶ 35. The fact that a defendant railroad company was engaged in procuring aid and rights of way has no tendency to show that it was building its own road, or that any particular person employed in that work was doing so as a servant of defendant.—Bond v. Pontiac, O. & P. A. R. Co., 62 Mich. 643.

¶ 37. The authority of a husband to act for his wife in the making of a loan will not be presumed from the fact that he has acted for her in other matters, but must be proved by legal evidence; and evidence of other transactions in which he acted for his wife does not prove his authority to act in a particular case, and such evidence may be disregarded.—Three Rivers National Bank v. Gilchrist, 83 Mich. 253.

¶ 39. The fact that a third person received from a seller the proceeds of sales does not tend to show that the seller is the receiver's agent; it may be merely a repayment of advances, especially where so testified, and in an action against the receiver as the seller's principal, plaintiff has the burden of proving the agency.—Campbell v. Sherman, 49 Mich. 534.

¶ 40. Extortion of a bonus from the borrower of money is too common a procedure on the part of the lender's agent to be very significant for the purpose of showing that he was the borrower's agent rather than the lender's.—Matteson v. Blackmer, 46 Mich. 393.

¶ 41. In an action involving the question whether P. in purchasing certain property was the agent of defendant, testimony of a witness relative to what P. told him in regard to the agency is made admissible where it has first been drawn out in cross-examination of the witness that P. had told him all about it.—Johnson v. Doon, 131 Mich. 452.

¶ 42. In an action upon a claim against the estate of a deceased agent who had been employed to loan and collect money for plaintiff, a memorandum book kept by the agent containing a record of the business done for plaintiff both before and after the date of a settlement between them was had, is admissible as showing the nature and extent of their business relations, the prior entries being restricted to proving relationship only. —Jewell v. Jewell's Estate, 139 Mich. 578.

As to proof that person representing carrier, telegraph company, or other responsible superior, was its agent in dealings with the public or with plaintiff, see also generally Carriers; Corporations, XVII; Master and Servant, IV; Telegraphs and Telephones; etc.

¶ 44. If the facts and circumstances, or the habit and course of dealing, show a subsequent and continued ratification of the acts done they will be sufficient to establish the agency.—Lyell v. Sanbourn, 2 Mich. 109.

¶ 45. Agency may be inferred from the fact that circulars and letterheads of a person describe one as his agent.—Thelsen v. Detroit Taxicab & Transfer Co., 200 Mich. 136.

¶ 46. In an action of replevin where the question was one of authority of a third person to act as agent for the owner in the sale to plaintiff of standing timber, defendant claiming to have purchased from the owner at a date previous to plaintiff's having purchased from an agent, where the agent swore that the owner had written him two letters offered in evidence authorizing him to sell and that he had notified the defendant to that effect, and the defendant himself testified that when he called on the owner he was told that the latter had no knowledge of the value of the timber sold, but he would write to his agent and he could see him and perhaps make a deal for the timber, there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury, especially where the agent's authority had not been revoked.—White v. King, 87 Mich. 107.

¶ 47. In an action for labor performed for a partnership by one who had been employed by the husband of one of the partners, the evidence showed that the copartnership articles authorized her to appoint her husband as her agent, who should exercise with reference to the business of the firm powers such as she might have exercised had the appointment not been made. The firm paid plaintiff on account, honored orders drawn upon them, and furnished plaintiff through the husband with teams for the work done. Held, that there was evidence of the husband's agency, and that he was clothed by the articles with the general authority of a partner.—Meyer v. Montgomery, 87 Mich. 278.

¶ 48. Where one who has built a barn on defendant's farm testified that he contracted with her son, supposed to be acting for defendant's husband, the fact that defendant owns the farm, boards the workmen employed on the building and urges on the work of building does not make her liable.—Hillier v. Eldred, 91 Mich. 54.

¶ 49. Agency in taking lumber may be inferred from proof that the alleged principal inquired about lumber for sale, expressed satisfaction with some shown him, stated that he wanted it for a mill which C., his cousin, was to build, and that he would send for it within a few days, coupled with proof that a few days later C. came and got the lumber.—Hathaway v. Judie, 95 Mich. 241.

¶ 50. A finding that a local real-estate agent, who negotiated for the sale of land, was an agent of the nonresident owner, is justified by proof that he was paid by the owner, and that the land contract was sent to him for delivery to the purchaser.—Dodge v. Tullock, 110 Mich. 480.

¶ 51. Where a son acts for his father in procuring a mortgage, undertakes the whole negotiation, decides upon the security, satisfies himself as to the title, attends to the execution of the papers, receives the money from his father and pays it over to the mortgagor,—in short does everything an agent could do,—and his father accepts the benefits of the transaction, he may properly be regarded as his father's agent in spite of his testimony to the contrary, especially if he admits being his agent just before and after these acts; it is idle under such circumstances for him to claim to have been agent for the person giving the mortgage.—Matteson v. Blackmer, 46 Mich. 393.

¶ 53. The relationship of principal and agent in a particular transaction settling a claim for repayment of a loan is established by testimony that the agent was in sole and absolute control of the moneys, notes, mortgages, loans and other financial transactions of the principal and that he customarily exercised his own discretion in dealing in matters of this kind, without consultation or advice of his principal, and as freely as if he were acting in his own behalf, reporting after the fact.—Bullock v. Tompkins' Estate, 125 Mich. 17.

¶ 54. In an action by the representative of the estate of the assignor of a contract for the purchase of land against the agent of the assignee to recover money intrusted to defendant to pay a debt for a furnace placed on the premises by deceased, evidence held sufficient to show agency of defendant for such purpose.—Cutter v. Powers, 200 Mich. 375.

¶ 56. In an action against an agent to recover the amount received for sheep of plaintiff sold by defendant and not accounted for, where plaintiff claimed that a certain number of sheep were intrusted to claimant under an arrangement whereby they were to be let out to double within a certain period, and, upon return, the increased flock was let out on similar terms for a similar period, and at the end of the second period was, with the further increase, sold by defendant, evidence held sufficient to establish a contract of agency and plaintiff's interest in the sheep.—Miller v. Young, 196 Mich. 276.

As to authority of agent, see post §§ 42, 43.
In actions between agent and principal, see post § 106.

¶ 58. Whether a disputed agency exists is a question for the jury under proper instructions, where there is any evidence tending to prove its existence.—Hart Milling & Power Co. v. McCrillis & Son, 185 Mich. 693.

¶ 59. If the evidence respecting the agency to collect a note is ambiguous, the court cannot pass upon it, but must submit it to the jury.—Moore v. Hall, 48 Mich. 143.

¶ 60. When the correspondence and subsequent dealings between the parties in evidence raise a question as to the fact of agency about which minds might differ, it was for the jury to determine.—Fontaine Crossing & Electrical Co. v. Rauch, 117 Mich. 401.

¶ 62. Whether a person soliciting advertising for a publishing company was the agent of such company, was a question for the jury, in assumpsit upon an alleged advertising contract, where it appeared that defendant had written a letter to such company ordering the insertion of certain advertising, that the letter so written was dictated by such solicitor in defendant's office to a stenographer in the office, and was signed by defendant.—Mail & Express Co. v. Wood, 140 Mich. 505.

¶ 64. In an action by a railway company upon an aid subscription which defendant claimed was not to have been turned over to the company by the person who took it, except upon certain conditions, it could not be assumed by the court that such person was the agent of the subscribers rather than of the company; the question, if there was any dispute about it, would be one for the jury.—Saginaw, T. & H. R. Co. v. Chappell, 56 Mich. 190.

¶ 65. On an issue as to the agency of a son for his father in making a sale of hay, evidence showing that the father and son occupied contiguous farms, that one of them stated that their hay would probably all be sold together, that the son thereafter went to the purchaser's residence and made the contract, that the purchaser later sent a man to bale the hay, and that such man commenced work on the farm of the father, together with some proof of ratification, was sufficient to take the case to the jury.—Beasore v. Stephens, 155 Mich. 403.

¶ 66. The question whether a Massachusetts corporation was merely the agent of a Rhode Island corporation where the officers and stockholders of the two were identical, held properly submitted to the jury in an action against the latter corporation for merchandise shipped by the plaintiff to the former corporation, where there had been a long course of dealings between the plaintiff and the Rhode Island corporation in which the Massachusetts corporation had been held out by the former corporation as its selling agent.—Hart Milling & Power Co. v. A. B. McCrillis & Son, 185 Mich. 693.

B. DURATION AND TERMINATION.

§ 12. Term and duration.

Construction of terms as between agent and principal, see post § 95.

Revocation as breach of agency contract, see post § 95.

¶ 67. Where a contract of agency fixes no period for its duration, definite or indefinite, with reference to which it may be presumed that both parties contracted, each party has the right to terminate it at will.—Garlock v. Motz Tire & Rubber Co., 192 Mich. 665.

¶ 68. Where the duration of a contract of agency is not fixed the agent may terminate it on giving reasonable notice.—Barrows v. Cushway, 37 Mich. 481.

¶ 69. A contract of agency, bearing the date of June 14, 1899, for a term of three years and from year to year thereafter until terminated by either party by giving six months' written notice, was held to be terminated on June 14, 1905, and not before; where written notice of termination was sent the agent on November 7, 1903, signed by the successor of the company which signed the original contract, and where on February 9, 1904, a written notice of termination of such contract was sent such agent, signed by the name of the company which signed such contract, and containing a statement that such company had gone out of business, and that its successor declined to continue the existence of the agency; such latter notice alone being effective. and the relation terminating at the next anniversary following the required six months' notice.—Stone v. Fox Machine Co., 145 Mich. 689.

Under power of attorney from two persons, see also post ¶ 165.

Exhaustion of agency by single exercise of authority, see also post ¶ 197.

¶ 70. Power delegated to an agent to "fix and determine" a matter over which he has no original power outside of the agency is expended when he has once acted.—People ex rel. Douvielle v. Manistee County Sup'rs, 40 Mich. 585.

¶ 72. A power whereby an attorney was appointed to sell all the property of an estate belonging to the heirs, the signers, and to receive and distribute the proceeds, containing an express provision that the power was irrevocable and should survive if any of the signers died, is revoked by the death of two of the signers prior to the exercise of the power, it not being a power coupled with an interest.—Weaver v. Richards, 144 Mich., 395.

Effect of notice in one capacity as binding principal in other capacity, see post § 74.

¶ 74. The failure of an agent to observe secret instructions respecting delivery of the thing sold for his principal and collection of the price does not change the relation of agency into that of a debtor for the price.—Birdsell Mfg. Co. v. Brown, 96 Mich. 213.

§ 15. Agency coupled with interest or title.

What constitutes interest, see ante § 8.

Mutual rights under, see post IV, A.

¶ 75. The rule that death revokes a power is subject to the exception that where the instrument creating the power conveys to the attorney the legal title to the interest covered by the power it survives. This must be an interest in the thing itself and created by the instrument creating the power, and if it be an interest only in that which is to be produced by the exercise of the power it is not within the exception.—Weaver v. Richards, 144 Mich. 395.

¶ 77. When, by indorsement for collection, authority is given to an agent to sue in his own name on negotiable paper, the legal title in trust is transferred, and the authority to collect is not revoked by the death of the principal and owners.—Moore v. Hall, 48 Mich. 143.

¶ 78. A provision in a mortgage, expressed by a power of attorney, authorizing the attorney to collect the rents from mortgaged premises and apply them upon the mortgage, and assigning the rents, not only from the leases then in existence, but from those thereafter to be made, as security for the mortgage debt until it should be fully paid, is not revoked by the death of the mortgagor. —Kelly v. Bowerman, 113 Mich. 446.

Effect of failure to receive notice, see also post ¶ 102.

Liability for acts done after revocation, see also post § 48.

Notice of revocation as equitable assignment of contract to principal, see Assignments, II.

¶ 79. A general agency continues until in some way parties have been notified of its termination, or have sufficient facts in their possession to put them upon inquiry.—Bloomer v. Dau, 122 Mich. 522.

¶ 80. To all persons who have actual dealings with the agent, actual notice of the revocation must be given, or such notice of the fact must be brought home to them as would be sufficient to put an ordinarily prudent man upon inquiry.—Tousignant v. Shafer Iron Co., 96 Mich. 87.

¶ 81. Notwithstanding revocation, a former general agent continues, within the scope of his original authority, to bind the former principal as to those parties who have been and still are dealing with him in good faith, in reliance upon his former authority, until they have notice of its revocation.—Tousignant v. Shafer Iron Co., 96 Mich. 87.

¶ 82. One who has furnished board to employees under an arrangement with their employer, whereby the board bills are reported to him, he deducting the amounts from the employees' wages and crediting them to the party furnishing such board, is entitled to recover against such employer for board furnished after such employer's superintendent assumed control of the business as principal, if he had no notice of the change of employers, and if such arrangement continued after the change.—Tousignant v. Shafer Iron Co., 96 Mich. 87.

¶ 83. Actual knowledge that there has been a change of principals, howsoever acquired, dispenses with any notice.—Jones v. Schafer Iron Co., 96 Mich. 98.

¶ 84. In an action for damages for breach of a contract where, pending negotiations by wire and mail for the purchase of cedar posts, the vendor wrote to the vendee that if certain posts were not sold he could have them at a stated price, and that he would know by a certain date if the posts were sold, such letter amounted in law to a withdrawal of said posts from sale until the date named, and was a sufficient notice to the vendee that he must deal with the vendor personally; and a sale by an agent in charge of the posts, made after such date, is held not binding upon the principal.—Keith v. Sands Maxwell Lumber Co., 88 Mich. 172.

¶ 87. An agent's authority to make a contract relative to the sale of property may have been shown to exist at a specified time, and may be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, to continue until six months later.—Hensel v. Maas, 94 Mich. 563.

¶ 88. In the absence of proof to the contrary, authority to make a contract relative to the sale of property may be presumed to continue until six months later.—Hensel v. Maas, 94 Mich. 563.

C. AGENCY BY IMPLICATION OR ESTOPPEL, OR INCIDENT TO RELATIONSHIP.

Inference of agency from evidence (as distinguished from implication as matter of law), see ante § 10.

Presumptions as to existence of agency, see ante § 9.

Implication of authority from custom and usage, see post § 26.

Implication as to chief engineer's agency where railroad corporation is constructing its own road, see also post ¶ 176.

Implication from principal's being stockholder in alleged agent, see post ¶¶ 199, 200.

Adoption of acts of assumed agent, see post II, C.

Agency of husband for wife, see Husband and Wife, IV, B.

Agency of wife for husband, see Husband and Wife, III.

Agency of child for parent in contracting for necessaries, see Parent and Child, II.

Agency incident to joint adventure or partnership, see Joint Adventures; Partnership.

¶ 90. Whether persons, while acting in their own interest and making a request exclusively for their own advantage, can be deemed agents of a third person who would participate in the benefits that would arise from its being granted, quere.—Krueger v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 51 Mich. 142.

¶ 91. All persons rightfully using a track put down in a public street by one who is granted a license therefor by the city on stringent conditions to prevent accident, and which is built for convenience of his business, and to be lawfully used for no other purpose, are to be deemed his agents, and he is liable for their conduct; the use of a special franchise under the direction and for the purposes of its owner can never be maintained except as his act.—McWilliams v. Detroit Central Mills Co., 31 Mich. 274.

¶ 92. A bishop of a diocese who owns the land is not liable in assumpsit for plans prepared by an architect at the instance of the priest in charge of the parish for a building to be erected on the land with the bishop's permission.—Engelbert v. Foley, 125 Mich. 405.

¶ 93. An agency between father and son does not arise from the mere voluntary payment of a debt of the latter by the parent and for which he was in no way legally responsible.—Cunningham v. Irwin, 182 Mich. 629.

¶ 94. The fact that a note and mortgage are made payable at a bank does not establish the agency of such bank for the purpose of receiving payment in the absence of the securities themselves.—Bloomer v. Dau, 122 Mich. 522.

Estoppel to question authority of the agent, see post § 27.

Active controlling stockholder as recognized agent of corporation, see Corporations, XVII, C.

¶ 95. Where a principal by acts or conduct has knowingly caused or permitted another to appear to be his agent, either generally or for a particular purpose, he is estopped to deny such agency to the injury of third persons who have in good faith and in the exercise of reasonable prudence dealt with the agent on the faith of such appearances.—Pettinger v. Alpena Cedar Co., 175 Mich. 162.

¶ 97. Agency in fact may be implied where one person by his conduct holds out another as his agent and thereby invests him with apparent or ostensible authority as agent.—Cronk v. Mulvaney, 168 Mich. 346.

¶ 98. An agency by estoppel can be established only where defendant has held the agent out as authorized, and plaintiff, relying thereon, has in good faith acted upon such representation.—McBroom v. Cheboygan Brewing & Malting Co., 162 Mich. 323.

¶ 99. One who has accepted the benefit of a purchase by an alleged purchasing agent cannot deny the agency.—Colburn v. I. Stephenson Co., 133 Mich. 437.

¶ 100. Plaintiff, relying upon representations of the physician and attorney for the insurance company, with which defendant carried its industrial insurance, that the injuries to his eye were not of a serious character (signed a release for his claim for an insignificant sum, and upon discovering that he was permanently blinded in one eye and the other affected repudiated the release, held, that it was error to direct a verdict on the ground that no agency was shown between defendant and the employees of the insurance company, since by pleading the release, refusing to accept a tender of the money paid, and claiming the benefit of it, defendant was estopped to deny agency.—Bertha v. Regal Motor Car Co., 180 Mich. 51.

¶ 101. Where attorneys have permitted a clerk to represent them at an appearance and adjournment in justice's court, they cannot dispute his authority to consent to a further adjournment.—Simon v. Sempliner, 86 Mich. 136.

¶ 102. Where a mortgagee withdrew the mortgage and note from the bank which had acted as collection agent, and at once mailed notice of the fact to the mortgagor who, by reason of a change of address, never received the notice, and where payment was made to the bank, which became insolvent without accounting to the mortgagee and before he knew of the payment, the mortgagee was not estopped to deny the authority of the bank by his delay of about four years after notice that payment had been made to the bank, in beginning foreclosure.—Bloomer v. Dau, 122 Mich. 522.

¶ 103. A principal, who was undisclosed as such because he had held out appearances that led brokers to believe that his brother of the same initials was the principal, though the real fact was that the brother was merely employed in the business and lending his name as principal, is estopped to assert his ownership as principal for the purpose of recovering the profits of wheat sold for the supposed principal and of preventing the application of the money to the repayment of advances and loans made in other transactions, supposedly for the brother.—Stebbins v. Walker, 46 Mich. 5.

¶ 104. Where a brewing company sells its saloon but holds the license in its name and authorizes the buyer to order goods in the name of the company, such company may be held liable for goods purchased by the buyer in the company's name where the seller of such goods had no knowledge of the sale of the saloon.—Rochester Distilling Co. v. Traverse City Brewing Co., 174 Mich. 318.

As creating estoppel to deny authority, see post § 28.

¶ 106. No one has a right to rely on an agent's statements concerning his own agency.—Bond v. Pontiac, O. & P. A. R. Co., 62 Mich. 643.

II. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PRINCIPAL AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

A. AUTHORITY AND RESPONSIBILITY IN GENERAL.

§ 21. In general; necessity that agency exist.

[Note. Since there must be an agency in law or in fact before there can be any question of authority, the decisions turning on a question of the existence of an agency have been collected in division I, preceding this. The decisions collected in this division II and in divisions III and IV presuppose that there must have been and was an agency and that the question turned on its limits and extent.]

Creation and existence of the agency, see ante I.

Termination of agency by death of principal, see ante § 13.

Necessity that act should have been done for principal in order to be ratifiable by him, see post § 54.

Ratification as equivalent to original authority, see post §§ 63-65.

Necessity of proving agency before proving acts of agent to bind principal, see Trial, V, B.

¶ 107. Where an attempt is made to hold one responsible for the acts of another claimed to be his agent, the agency must be clearly shown.—Campbell v. Sherman, 49 Mich. 534.

¶ 108. The authority of an agent must be established to bind the principal by his acts.—Theisen v. Detroit Taxicab & Transfer Co., 200 Mich. 186.

¶ 109. A principal is not liable for an indebtedness incurred in his name without authority by an agent, where he has never held out the agent as having such authority, or done anything to ratify the unauthorized act; and much less where the credit was originally given to the agent and not to the principal. Grover & Baker Sewing Machine Co. v. Polhemus, 34 Mich. 247.

The principal's responsibility and liability depends on elements of representation or notice of the want of it as shown in the succeeding sections, viz., 23-76, which see.

Unauthorized and wrongful acts, see post II, B.

Liability as based on ratification, see post II, C.

Authority of superior agent to ratify act of another agent, see post § 61.

Notice to agent as affecting rights of principal, see post II, E.

Necessity of acting in name of or for behalf of principal, see post § 70.

Where agent represents two principals, see also ante § 6.

Jury questions and instructions, see post §§ 42, 43.

Declarations and acts of agents as admissions or res gestae receivable against principal, see Evidence, VII, C, VII, D.

Judgment against agent as former adjudication affecting principal, and vice versa, see Former Adjudication, V.

Power to subject principal's property to lien of innkeeper, see Inns.

¶ 110. A principal will be bound by the acts of one who has acted for him to the extent to which he has held him out as his agent.—Sorrell v. Brewster, 1 Mich. 373.

Necessity of notice of revocation, see ante § 16.

Effect of notice on liability respecting acts outside of authority, see post II, B.

Duty of principal to ascertain facts in adopting contract, see post ¶ 390.

Notice as affecting right to rely on agent's representations of fact, see post ¶ 322.

Taking other than money in payment, see post § 36.

Liability for acts in disregard of instructions, see also post § 47.

Duty to inquire or know of limits on corporate officer's or agent's authority, see Corporations, XVII, C.

¶ 112. One who purchases from an agent must ascertain the latter's powers, and cannot act on anything that does not proceed from his principal, either as actual authority or in some form of binding admission.—Kornemann v. Monaghan, 24 Mich. 36.

¶ 113. Every person dealing with an assumed agent is bound, at his peril, to ascertain the nature and extent of the agent's authority.—Pettinger v. Alpena Cedar Co., 175 Mich. 162.

¶ 115. One who deals with an agent is bound to inquire into his authority, and ignorance of the extent of such authority is no excuse.—Hammond v. Michigan State Bank, W. 214; Hurley v. Watson, 68 Mich. 531.

¶ 116. Where a firm doing business in one place takes charge, under a chattel mortgage, of the business of an insolvent debtor in another place, and leaves him to carry it on in its name, it is not negligence for others to sell to the agent on the responsibility of the firm without inquiring into the agent's authority; the firm must take the risks of the arrangement, which is of a questionable nature.—Banner Tobacco Co. v. Jenison, 48 Mich. 459.

¶ 117. Where defendant previously to a sale told plaintiff that a certain person was his agent for buying logs, and plaintiff also knew of such person's buying logs for defendant prior to or about that time and not too far away, plaintiff was justified in believing that such person had a right to buy logs and make contracts binding defendant.—Thompson v. Clay, 60 Mich. 627.

¶ 118. Presentation of a bill for goods previously sold and delivered by a merchant's employee does not warrant the debtor thereon in paying it to him unless it is within the scope of his employment to receive payment; authority to so receive money cannot be implied from the fact of his employment; and his mere statement that he is authorized to receive it is not enough; nor is it enough that the bill is in the merchant's handwriting and on one of his billheads.—Hirshfield v. Waldron, 54 Mich. 649.

¶ 119. One who makes payments upon non-negotiable securities to a person assuming to act as agent should see to it that the securities are in the hands of that person.—Eaton v. Knowles, 61 Mich. 625.

¶ 121. A solicitor for purchase of pianos without authority in fact to sell but only to report prospects placed an instrument on trial in defendant's house, and offered, in the presence of a member of the firm, to sell the same for $400, or $465, according to such partner, but this offer was refused. On a later occasion the solicitor told defendant that he would see his employers before the instrument was removed, and ascertain what they thought about it. Next day the solicitor returned, and represented that plaintiffs had authorized him to sell for $200, whereupon the bargain was concluded. Held, that the statement in regard to seeing his employers before making an offer, and his final proposition to sell at half price, were circumstances which as matter of law should have awakened suspicion of his lack of authority to consummate the sale.—Clark v. Haupt, 109 Mich. 212.

¶ 122. A purchaser of land who relies upon the statement of an agent that he is authorized to act for a mortgagee, and who makes a payment to such an agent without ascertaining whether the agent is authorized to receive it, must sustain the loss if the agent does not remit to the mortgagee.—Bacon v. Pomeroy, 118 Mich. 145.

¶ 124. Under a contract to furnish a tug and boom to inclose 500,000 logs, both tug and boom to be under the direction of the defendant, where plaintiffs did not assume risk of weather or accident unless due to negligence or disobedience of defendant's orders, neither of which was claimed, plaintiffs were not responsible for the consequences of the advice of the tug captain to the defendant that the boom would accommodate all of his logs, the same having run over 500,000 feet.—Hebard v. Shaw, 123 Mich. 514.

¶ 126. While a person dealing with an agent is bound to inquire into the extent of his authority and is not excused by ignorance of it, it also well settled that, having ascertained the general character or scope of the agency, such person may rely thereon to the extent of assuming that the agent has such powers as naturally and properly belong to his ascertained character, and if not put on inquiry is not bound to ascertain secret limitations and qualifications of his authority.—Grand Rapids Elect. Co. v. Walsh Mfg. Co., 142 Mich. 4.

tract by one of the parties thereto, cannot be limited within the scope of the business by private instructions of which the other party is ignorant.—Allis v. Voigt, 90 Mich. 125.

¶ 129. The authority of a general agent, within the usual scope of the principal's business, cannot be limited as to third parties by private instructions from the principal.—Inglish v. Ayer, 79 Mich. 516.

¶ 130. One who sells cabbages not yet ready for the market to an agent held out to the public as having authority to contract for future delivery is not bound by a secret limitation between the principal and the agent that only cabbages ready for market can be contracted for by the latter.—Baker v. Barnett Produce Co., 113 Mich. 533.

¶ 131. Where an agent has full authority to sell notes indorsed in blank, and has special instructions as to the mode of selling and the disposition of the proceeds, a stranger who buys without notice of these instructions is not prejudiced by the agent's violation of them; he is concerned with nothing beyond the general authority.—Howry v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29.

§ 25. ——Acts of self interest or repugnant to agency.

Agency as between two principals, see ante § 6.

Liability for unauthorized acts of self interest, see post § 46.

Self interest or bad faith of agent destroying force of notice to bind principal, see post § 75.

Ratification of application of payments to own debt, see post § 373.

Notice to taker of commercial paper from fact that it is payable to agent making or negotiating it, see Negotiable Instruments, XIII, A.

¶ 132. An agent cannot act for his principal in the same transaction in two inconsistent capacities, hence, having performed a duty by giving a notice to quit, he has no authority to represent that it need not be heeded.—Pittsburgh & L. S. Iron Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 92 Mich. 252.

¶ 133. One dealing with an agent who has general authority to sell goods or collect debts is bound to know that the agent has no authority by virtue of his agency to apply or offset his own private debt to such third party in payment of the debt to the principal.—Hurley v. Watson, 68 Mich. 531.

¶ 134. An indorsement of promissory notes as agent by one to whom such notes have been intrusted as agent for the holder was notice sufficient to put the purchaser upon inquiry as to the authority of such agent to apply part of the proceeds from such sale to his individual indebtedness to such purchaser.—McBain v. Seligman, 58 Mich. 294.

Implication from specific object of agency, see also post §§ 33-38.

Former collections as establishing custom, see post § 36.

Clerks left in sole charge of business, see post § 35.

¶ 136. Whether a general custom can establish a liability upon the part of a master for the contracts of his servant, quere; the general rule being that in such cases liability depends upon direct authority or special or individual custom.—Bourke v. James, 4 Mich. 336.

¶ 137. A manufacturer's agent employed to solicit orders for goods must, as to persons dealing with him, be deemed to have authority to accept such orders and to bind his principal by contracts of sale where such is the general usage, and where contracts so made by him have been repeatedly recognized by his principal.—Leo Austrian & Co. v. Springer, 94 Mich. 343.

¶ 138. A general custom authorizing manufacturers' agents engaged in soliciting orders to accept such orders without referring them to their principals binds the principals though they have no actual knowledge of the custom.—Leo Austrian & Co. v. Springer, 94 Mich. 343.

¶ 139. Plaintiff manufacturer of pianos made a contract to consign pianos to one Ray, a local dealer. By the contract Ray had authority to sell the same as plaintiff's agent for cash or credit. Ray traded a consigned piano to defendant for another piano. Held, in replevin, Ray's contract did not authorize him to exchange, but only to sell, and its terms could not be broadened by proving a custom in the trade for dealers to exchange.—Starr Piano Co. v. Morrison, 159 Mich. 583.

[Note. The distinction, if any, between estoppel by acceptance of benefits of the act done and ratification by acceptance of benefits is technical rather than substantial, but for purposes of classification the former is treated here and the latter post § 58.]

Estoppel to question existence of agency, see ante § 19.

Previous collections of interest as implying authority to collect principal of debt, see post § 36.

Presumptions and evidence, see post §§ 39-41.

Inferences from course of dealing, see post §§ 40, 41.

Liability for acts within held out authority, see also post II, B.

Estoppel of corporation to deny authority of officer or agent, see Corporations, XVII, D.

¶ 140. Holding out one person by another as authorized to make a sale of a piano for the latter does not estop him from denying the validity of a sale by the person thus held out, unless the purchaser acted in good faith, and in the honest belief that the agent was authorized to make the sale, all elements of an estoppel must be present.—Clark v. Dillman, 108 Mich. 625.

¶ 141. The owner of property is not estopped from denying the authority of an assumed agent to act with reference thereto where the person dealing with such agent is ignorant of the owner's claim to such property.—Joy v. Vance, 104 Mich. 97.

¶ 142. Where authority is conferred upon an agent in ambiguous terms, and the agent, in good faith, adopts a permissible construction, the principal is estopped from asserting, as against third persons having dealings with such agent, that the authority assumed in accordance with such construction was not the authority intended to be conferred.—Berry v. Haldeman, 111 Mich. 667.

¶ 145. Neglect to prosecute for the unauthorized use of one's name on negotiable paper does not estop one from denying his liability on similar paper made thereafter.—Stroh v. Hinchman, 37 Mich. 490.

¶ 146. If an engineer, in pursuance of authority given him by a subcontract for the construction of a railroad for a company to declare a forfeiture in case of the subcontractor's inability to perform, prosecutes the work in behalf of the company, which latter has assumed performance, the company is liable for indebtedness incurred by him in such prosecution; and if, while he is contracting for work, employing men, and purchasing supplies in defendant's name and upon its credit, its officers are advised and remain silent, it cannot be heard to say that his action was without authority, even though his authority was originally limited by secret instructions.—Hirschmann v. Iron Range & H. B. R. Co., 97 Mich. 384; Michigan Slate Co. v. Iron Range & H. B. R. Co., 101 Mich. 14.

¶ 147. One who has written to a proposing seller that the writer's named agent would call on the seller and negotiate for a bargain cannot show after a bargain has been made in his name, paying part cash and giving his note for the balance, that the agreement between him and the agent was to buy in the agent's name on advances made by the principal.—Sorrel v. Brewster, 1 Mich. 373.

¶ 148. A contract of employment as a baseball player made with the captain to whom the player was directed as the defendant's sole manager, with the statement that whatever such captain did "went," was binding whether the captain was the defendant's sole manager or not.—Scheibeck v. Van Derbeck, 122 Mich. 29.

¶ 149. A principal who has received the proceeds of the sale of bonds sold through his agent cannot deny the authority of the agent to sell them.—Schmid v. Village of Frankfort, 111 Mich. 291.

¶ 150. A company is not estopped from denying liability for goods purchased from a third person by its agent where the agent was not authorized to purchase goods and the third person who knew the agent was selling goods for the company did not inquire as to his authority before taking orders, and where there is evidence tending to show that credit was extended to the agent, and though the agent had an office and a sign thereon representing himself as a manager for the company when the orders were given, such office was opened without consulting the company and the sign was discovered after the orders were given and its removal was then suggested.—Rothschild v. Sugar Beet Products Co., 174 Mich. 237.

¶ 151. Plaintiff sold goods for a period of years to defendant. In making shipments, the invoices of the plaintiff stated that no discounts were allowed other than those specified therein. Defendant's clerk testified that he called up the plaintiff by telephone and asked why the prices in the invoices were higher than those made, including discounts, by one Berger, plaintiff's salesman, and that the plaintiff told him to go ahead and arrange it with Berger, and that would be all right. Held, that under such facts the plaintiff was estopped to set up that the discounts allowed by Berger were unauthorized.—Marx v. King, 162 Mich. 258.

¶ 152. Where an agent of a company manufacturing speedometers entered into an oral contract to sell speedometers on commission, and sales are made under such agreement to the knowledge of the company, it cannot claim that its agent was not authorized to make such contract.—Fuchs v. Standard Thermometer Co., 178 Mich. 37.

¶ 153. The introduction of a person as a representative to look after certain work to be performed under a written contract was not a holding out of such person as the general agent of his principal so as to bind the latter as to matters beyond the terms of the written agreement.—Reinforced Concrete Pipe Co. v. Boyes, 180 Mich. 609.

Agent describing himself as "manager," see also ante ¶ 150.

¶ 156. One's mere statement that he has authority as an agent does not bind the supposed principal.—Kornemann v. Monaghan, 24 Mich. 36.

¶ 157. One who deals with another, supposing him to be an agent, is not protected by his assumption of authority to act.—Rice v. Peninsular Club of Grand Rapids, 52 Mich. 87.

Liability for unauthorized delegation, see post ¶ 314.
Authority of one agent to ratify act of another, see post § 61.

¶ 158. Although it is generally true that local agents cannot, unless expressly authorized, delegate their authority to clerks, yet where such agents do business largely through clerks, who solicit insurance, make out applications and policies, and generally attend to the business of their employers, the acts of such clerks are binding as though done by the agents themselves.—Steele v. German Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 81.

¶ 159. A forwarder's clerk left in charge of the receipt of goods is conclusively presumed, if the customers have no knowledge of restrictions, to have authority to accept all contracts usual and proper in the business.—Hutchings v. Ladd, 16 Mich. 493.

Of powers of attorney, see post § 32.

¶ 160. The assignee of a contract wrote to the other party thereto notifying him of the assignment, and that his agent, the bearer, was "fully authorized" to do business for him, and that he was prepared to carry out the contract. The writing was construed by the agent and the other party as conferring authority upon the former to enter into a new agreement in relation to the subject-matter of the original contract. Held that such construction was permissible.—Berry v. Haldeman, 111 Mich. 667.

¶ 161. An order from defendant to plaintiff's general agent for a harvesting machine recited that the machine was purchased and sold under a warranty and agreement thereinafter set forth, which no one had any authority to add to, abridge, or change in any manner, and that keeping the machine during harvest, whether kept in use or not, should be deemed conclusive evidence that it filled the warranty. Defendant, upon ascertaining that the machine did not comply with the warranty, refused to keep it under the contract, and the agent who took the order persuaded defendant to retain the machine, and advised him that he might do so, and that if he kept it beyond the harvest it would be all right, and the machine would be plaintiff's and not defendant's. Held, in a suit to recover the purchase-price of the machine that the machine was retained by defendant under this new agreement, which the agent had a right to make, and that defendant is not bound to pay for the machine because he held it over the harvest.—D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Baker, 103 Mich. 247.

Ratification of excessive acts, see post ¶ 364.

¶ 163. Powers of attorney are not to be extended by construction. A power to sell land does not authorize the attorney to mortgage it; and if the land is conveyed by a deed that it really intended as a security merely, such conveyance is unauthorized, and the grantee cannot maintain ejectment.—Jeffrey v. Hursh, 49 Mich. 31; Jeffrey v. Hursh, 58 Mich. 246.

¶ 165. A power of attorney executed by husband and wife to sell, etc., "all real estate belonging to us, or either of us," is limited to lands then owned by the parties, and does not authorize sale, after the husband's death, of land quitclaimed by him to her after the execution of the power, and in which she had previously only an inchoate right of dower.—Penfold v. Warner, 96 Mich. 179.

¶ 166. A power of attorney authorizing the collection of all arrears due defendant as inspector of customs covers the collection of all claims against the government on defendant's part at its date.—Baker v. Baird, 79 Mich. 255.

¶ 168. Where the treasurer of a railroad company was one of the committee that had executed the contract on its behalf for grading its proposed road, and the only one of them who had given any personal attention to the work or directions to the contractors, and he had stated that the company were unable to collect money fast enough to pay according to the contract, and had asked that the force of men employed be decreased, thereby causing delay in fulfilling the contract, it was held that the contractors would have a right to assume, in the absence of any notice to the contrary, that he was authorized to give such directions, and were justified in acting accordingly.—Grand Rapids & B. C. R. Co. v. Van Deusen, 29 Mich. 431.

¶ 169. A tenant abandoned the leased premises because of the lessor's failure to provide heating facilities as agreed. The tenant told the lessor's brother-in-law, who had acted for the lessor in the matter of the heating, that he intended to vacate, and asked him to take care of the water pipes, telling him also where the key was left. Held, that the tenant was justified in leaving the care of the pipes to the brother-in-law, even though the latter had no authority to accept a surrender of the premises.—Rogers v. Babcock, 139 Mich. 94.

¶ 171. A superintendent was held to have authority to consent to alterations and to waive strict performance of a building contract.—Andre v. Hardin, 32 Mich. 324.

¶ 173. In an action by the owners of a tug against a log-towing company for towing services, it appeared that defendant sent an employee to plaintiffs with two letters, in one of which it introduced him as "our log-man," and stated that any orders from him would be the same as from its office. The other letter directed plaintiff to take said log-man and certain booms, and to tow a certain raft to a designated point, and, on arriving there, to send a telegram to defendant for orders. Held, that the term "log-man" is technical, and may have a signification limiting the range of the duties of the person to whom it is applied; that in the absence of such explanation, it cannot be said that defendant by said letters intended to restrict its log-man's authority to direct the speed of the tug (which plaintiffs claim he assumed to do), and as to what should be done in emergencies, and that if he gave such directions, and the same caused an increased strain upon the line so that it parted, and the line was not defective, or if the loss was aggravated by what was done under said directions, plaintiffs are not liable therefor. —Stevenson v. Michigan Log-Towing Co., 103 Mich. 412.

¶ 175. Neither the assistant road-master of a railroad company nor the master of transportation can be presumed to have authority to represent the company in claiming disputed titles.—Drew v. Comstock, 57 Mich. 176.

¶ 176. No presumption can arise of any power in a chief engineer, even where a railroad company is acting in the completion of its own road, to make a contract for the erection of depot buildings. The definite location of depots belongs to the board of directors, unless clearly delegated elsewhere; and a chief engineer cannot be made the possessor, by delegation, of the double power of locating depots and contracting for building them, if he can be at all, without the authority of the board.—Bond v. Pontiac, O. & P. A. R. Co., 62 Mich. 643.

¶ 177. The secretary and manager of a beet sugar factory has authority to guarantee one who agrees to raise and deliver sugar beets to the factory against loss upon his crop.—Constantine v. Kalamazoo Beet Sugar Co., 132 Mich. 480.

¶ 178. Where it appears that the owner and proprietor of a hotel employed another as his agent in and about the hotel and in running it, and held such person out as manager of the house, a jury would be warranted in finding that the agent has authority to purchase the usual and necessary supplies for the hotel, and to bind his employer in making such purchases on credit.—Beecher v. Venn, 35 Mich. 466.

¶ 179. A member of a debtor firm carried on and managed the business in B.'s name for creditors, giving and taking notes generally in such name, B. having authorized him to do so. A particular purchase relating to the business was made by A. in his own name, and was so billed. Held, that A. had authority to pay for the same by executing a note in B.'s name.—Shipman v. Byles, 65 Mich. 690.

¶ 180. A New York branch house manager of a corporation, manufacturing and selling through him folding chairs, revolving bookcases, hospital supplies, and invalid goods, has no implied authority to buy and charge to his principal ordinary household furniture of a class not dealt in or carried in stock for the principal and to order delivery of such goods direct to private houses designated by him, all such dealings being outside the apparent scope of his authority.—Cowan v. Sargent Mfg. Co., 141 Mich. 87.

¶ 182. The chief surgeon of a railroad company has no implied authority to employ an assistant not appointed by the company to treat an injured employee, where such surgeon's express authority is limited to employing regularly appointed local surgeons of the company under contract relations with it.—Burke v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 114 Mich. 686.

¶ 184. A railroad yard-master whose business it is to have charge of the yard and make up trains there, and who has a right to employ and discharge his help in these matters, and employ brakemen for himself and the road trains, and whose authority consists in employing men in his department, has no authority, by virtue of his office alone, to bind the railroad company which employs him to an agreement made by him to pay a surgeon for attending one of the men under him in the service of the company, who has been run over and injured by the company's cars.—Marquette & O. R. Co. v. Taft, 28 Mich. 289.

Forwarder's clerk, see ante ¶ 159.
Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 41.

¶ 186. A cashier, bookkeeper or corresponding clerk has not authority to compromise claims, settle unliquidated damages or release debts due to his principal.—Delta Lumber Co. v. Williams, 73 Mich. 86.

¶ 187. Proof that a person is clerk for another does not establish his right to receive for his employer payment of demands not shown to have any connection with the business; and evidence simply that payment of such demands was made to a clerk is not a sufficient showing of agency to receive the same to authorize evidence of admissions by such clerk of the payment to him.—Bowen v. Ruthland School Dist., No. 9, 36 Mich. 149.

¶ 188. A bookkeeper who had some discretion in small sales was directed to collect a balance due upon a particular sale or to get the goods. Held, that this did not give him such standing as an agent that his employer would be bound by his neglect to warn a third person, to whom the purchaser sold the goods, that there was an unpaid claim upon them.—Weaver v. Bechtel, 53 Mich. 516.

¶ 190. On the purchase of a farm, it was agreed between the grantor and grantee that a certain part of the money which the grantee had secured by mortgaging the farm to a third party should be retained by the agent who made the loan, and be by him used in paying off a prior mortgage when due, or whenever the mortgagee would receive his money. If any surplus remained, it was to be paid to the grantor to apply upon the purchase price of the farm, upon which the rest of the loan had been applied. Either party had the right to terminate the agreement at any time. The grantee sold the farm, subject to the mortgages, and it was agreed between him and his grantor and the purchaser, and the clerks of the agent, who still held said deposit, he being absent at the time, and said clerks having sole charge of his business, that the arrangement under which the money was originally deposited should continue in force. Held, that the clerks had authority to make said agreement.—Havens v. Church, 104 Mich. 135.

¶ 191. A statement of a telegraph agent or operator that a message was not delivered, made before sending a duplicate message, is an act within the scope of his authority and admissible in evidence to show nondelivery.—Carland v. Western Union Tel. Co., 118 Mich. 369.

¶ 193. One dealing with an agent for collection of debts is chargeable with knowledge that, in the absence of special authority, he can accept money alone in payment.—May v. Genesee County Savings Bank, 120 Mich. 330.

¶ 194. An agent authorized to collect a note is not authorized to receive a mortgage on wood as security to be disposed of in payment.—Pitkin v. Harris, 69 Mich. 133.

¶ 195. An agent empowered to redeem from a mortgage has authority to pay not only the amount due thereon, but to bind his principal to pay whatever expense has already been necessarily incurred in taking steps to enforce the security.—Shutes v. Woodard, 57 Mich. 213.

¶ 196. A mortgage company is impliedly authorized to receive payment of the principal of a mortgage which is in the possession of the mortgagee, where the latter has instructed it to inform the mortgagors in mortgages owned by her, including that in question, that they must pay at once or the mortgages will be foreclosed, and the company has been accustomed to collect the principal of her mortgages, and remit the sums collected to her upon receipt from her of a discharge of the mortgage together with the original papers.—Wilson v. La Tour, 108 Mich. 547.

¶ 197. The holder of a mortgage who, while still retaining the securities in his possession, forwards to a third person the coupon interest notes for collection as they mature, does not as a matter of law thereby constitute such person an agent for the collection of subsequent instalments of interest or of the principal.—Joy v. Vance, 104 Mich. 97; Trowbridge v. Ross, 105 Mich. 598.

¶ 198. That one has from time to time collected the interest on a mortgage does not of itself justify the inference that he is authorized to receive payment of the mortgage without the surrender of the securities.—Bromley v. Lathrop, 105 Mich. 492.

¶ 199. A mortgagee who has been accustomed to send the interest coupons to a mortgage company for collection does not thereby constitute the company an agent to collect the principal, even though the mortgagee is a stockholder in the company.—Wilson v. Campbell, 110 Mich. 580.

¶ 200. A letter from a mortgagee's agent, directing a firm that has looked after the collection of the interest upon the mortgage to call in the loan or foreclose, if certain interest moneys are not paid at once, does not, where the interest is promptly paid, authorize a mortgage company subsequently incorporated, and controlled by the individuals who composed the firm, to receive payment of the principal.—Terry v. Durand Land Co., 112 Mich. 665.

¶ 201. The discharge of a mortgage is not effected by the execution of a renewal mortgage to one authorized to collect the mortgage, and the transfer of the new mortgage by him to a third person in satisfaction of a pre-existing indebtedness.—Brooke v. Struthers, 110 Mich. 562.

¶ 202. One who acted as the agent of the mortgagee in making a particular loan and mortgage and was intrusted with all matters relating to the collection of interest and principal upon the loans of the mortgagee is authorized to receive payments in full satisfaction of the mortgage so as to bind the principal.—Ellis v. Maurer, 125 Mich. 400.

¶ 203. The fact that an agent is authorized to receive interest on a mortgage does not establish his authority to receive the principal, or any part of it, or justify a mortgagor in believing that the agent can act for the mortgagee generally.—Bacon v. Pomeroy, 118 Mich. 145.

¶ 204. An agent's authority to draw bills of exchange, payable on time or at sight, does not include authority to draw post-dated bills.—New York Iron Mine v. Citizens' Bank, 44 Mich. 344.

properties, and otherwise protected his principal's interests.—Bullock v. Tompkins' Estate, 125 Mich. 17.

¶ 207. The fact that a traveling salesman has authority to make collections for his firm does not authorize him to indorse the names of his employers to notes, nor to negotiate notes given to them.—Lonier v. Ann Arbor Sav. Bank, 162 Mich. 541.

¶ 208. Where an authorized agent settles an account and gives an order on third parties, acceptances and payment by them bind the party liable on the account; but if the settlement was not authorized, and was not made with a view of enabling the creditor to get his pay or a promise to pay from the debtor, he is not bound by it.—Mink v. Morrison, 42 Mich. 567.

¶ 209. Where two division superintendents of a railroad company represented the company on the final settlement of an employee's claim against the latter for a personal injury, which settlement the company has carried out by paying the amount then agreed to be paid, it is proper, in an action by the employee against the company for breach of a contract—claimed to be a part of such settlement, and to have been made by such superintendents in behalf of the company—under which he was to be furnished with employment for life at a fixed monthly salary, to allow the jury to find that said officers had authority to make said contract.—Brighton v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 103 Mich. 420.

¶ 210. When after selling machinery and entering into an agreement with a buyer, whereby he is given seven months in which to test the machine and reject if unsatisfactory, the seller is notified by the buyer that the machine is unsatisfactory and he in turn notified the buyer that the manufacturer of the machine has been notified, and subsequently the manufacturer of the machine sends an agent to examine and rectify the machine, and this agent takes an agreement from the buyer by which he is given thirty days for trial and agrees to furnish a written acceptance at the end of that time, it will be held that the facts show that the second agreement was made with the authority and for the benefit of the seller.—James Leffel & Co. v. Platt, 126 Mich. 443.

¶ 213. In the absence of authority conferred, or a valid usage, an agent cannot sell property on credit; the sale must be for cash.—Kops Bros. Co. v. Smith, 137 Mich. 28.

¶ 214. It seems that an agent with general written authority to bargain for and buy goods of a specified kind, who finds the amount of cash and drafts furnished to be insufficient to cover the purchase, may bind his principal for the balance by taking credit in his name.—Sorrell v. Brewster, 1 Mich. 373, but see annotation questioning this in 1 Mich. 373, annotated edition.

¶ 215. Where, upon an order procured by their agent, the vendors of goods sent them directly to the purchaser, together with a bill in their name, payment to the agent will be no defense to an action by the vendors for the goods, in the absence of proof of the agent's authority to collect, or of such prior dealings between purchaser and vendors as would lead the purchaser to believe that the agent had such authority.—Kornemann v. Monaghan, 24 Mich. 36.

¶ 216. An agent who is authorized to let a logging contract for his principal is authorized to do everything necessary to bring about such contract, and to make representations respecting the character of the lands, as being well situated for logging purposes; the character and quality of the pine, whether large or small, cork or sapling; and the quantity of timber on the land suitable for saw-logs.—Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 315, affirmed on rehearing 82 Mich. 336.

¶ 217. A nonresident vendor's local agent negotiated the sale of an engine which was shipped to the agent. The only knowledge of the vendees as to the identity of the engine sent with the one ordered was the agent's statement, and he informed them that if they did not wish to take the engine they need not do so, they claiming that it did not fulfil the requirements of their order and of the representations made to them. Held, that they had a right to assume that the agent had authority to bind his principal in respect to the taking of the engine.—Palmer v. Roath, 86 Mich. 602.

¶ 218. Persons who negotiated a sale of sawmill premises covered by a trust mortgage to creditors, were held upon the evidence not to have had authority to agree in behalf of the creditors that money would be advanced to make repairs on the property, such authority not appearing in a creditor's agreement appointing a managing committee to buy in the property and resell it, and not being evinced by subsequent negotiations.—Sheridan v. Peninsular Savings Bank, 116 Mich. 545.

¶ 220. An agent of a company was not authorized to incur debts for which it is liable where it seems that his only authority was to sell its products, and that the goods were usually shipped directly to the buyer after the orders were taken by such agent and the price was sent to the company which sent the agent his commissions.—Rothschild v. Sugar Beet Products Co., 174 Mich. 237.

¶ 222. The general authority of a lake carrier's shipping agent may reasonably include authority to agree for delivery at destination within a specified time.—Rudell v. Ogdensburgh Transit Co., 117 Mich. 568.

As to existence of the agency, see ante § 9.
As to continuance until revoked, see ante § 17.

¶ 223. Where title to a note is claimed through the payees' indorsement by their agent, plaintiff has the burden of showing such agent's authority.—Newton v. Principaal, 82 Mich. 271.

¶ 224. Where, in replevin for a piano, defendant claims to have purchased the instrument from an employee of plaintiffs, who was their agent for that purpose, or at least held out by them as such, the burden of proof to establish such agency, or an estoppel on the part of plaintiffs to deny it, is upon defendant.—Clark v. Dillman, 108 Mich. 625.

¶ 227. In an action on the contract of a railroad company to employ an injured brakeman, talks with the train master and the general superintendent are admissible as evidence to prove the contract, as it is assumed that the general superintendent has authority covering such contracts in the absence of evidence to the contrary, though it could not be assumed as to the train master.—Sax v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 125 Mich. 252.

¶ 229. Evidence of persons who have dealt with the principal through the agent is competent to show the character of the agency.—Leo Austrian & Co. v. Springer, 94 Mich. 343.

¶ 231. It is not proper to admit evidence showing that a salesman gave discounts to other dealers for the purpose of proving that his principal held him out as authorized to make discounts in the case in question.—Marx v. King, 162 Mich. 258.

¶ 232. The recognition of paper on which one's name has been used without authority may be shown not as proving, but as having a tendency, along with other evidence, to prove an implied authority to make such paper afterwards.—Stroh v. Hinchman, 37 Mich. 490.

¶ 234. Testimony tending to show that plaintiff, an attorney at law, was employed by a third party to act as attorney for the defendant in a certain proceeding, and that the defendant had ratified the act of such third party, was sufficient to have the case go to the jury on the question of the authority of such third party to make the contract in question for defendant with plaintiff.—Bissell v. Moore, 119 Mich. 222.

¶ 236. Receiving payment of interest through a mortgage company which was original mortgagee for eight years, recognizing an extension made by it, and accepting interest coupons made payable to it covering interest to accrue, do not show that the assignee of a mortgage had done anything to estop him from relying upon his ownership and possession of the mortgage and its accompanying notes, and from repudiating payment of the principal to the mortgagee whose authority extended only to receiving interest.—Bromley v. Lathrop, 105 Mich. 492.

¶ 238. A bank was sued by a depositor for moneys paid out on checks signed in his name by other persons. Held, that plaintiff's testimony that when sick he signed checks himself, and that he never authorized his daughter and others who attended to writing his letters to do so, had no tendency to show that he never gave such authority to the signer of the checks, and was inadmissible for that purpose.—American Nat. Bank v. Bushey, 45 Mich. 135.

¶ 239. Suit was brought by an indorser against the makers of a draft purporting to be drawn by an agent, and it was shown that the drawer had previously made a similar draft to the order of the same person, and it had been paid. Held, proper to show what the drawer had said in the former case as to his authority to draw, for the purpose of showing that he assumed to act in the same capacity in both cases, since his conduct in the earlier case gave color to his assumption of authority in the latter.—McDonough v. Heyman, 38 Mich. 334.

¶ 241. Where the authority of defendant's bookkeeper to employ plaintiffs to defend garnishment proceedings, and the knowledge on the part of defendant's officers that plaintiffs claimed to be acting as its attorneys, are in question, defendant's president should be permitted to testify why he did not employ counsel in the suit after having been advised of its progress and of plaintiff's appearance therein as attorneys for defendant.—DeLong v. Muskegon Booming Co., 88 Mich. 282.

Sufficiency of the evidence as a question for the jury, see post § 42.

¶ 242. A general agency may be inferred from facts and circumstances—from the habit and course of dealing.—Lyell v. Sanbourn, 2 Mich. 109.

¶ 243. Authority of a bookkeeper to sign orders for the payment of money can be inferred where there is evidence of the giving of such orders, and their payment by the principal, and where there is also evidence that the principal had stated that he would pay the orders.—Ryerson v. Tourcotte, 121 Mich. 78.

¶ 244. A railroad company's purchasing agent sent to a firm in a town on the road an order for square timber, and the firm, being unable to fill the same, called upon the plaintiff, stating that the company wanted the timber at once and had instructed them to get somebody else to fill the order in case of inability to do so themselves. Plaintiff, for shipment, delivered the timber to the local station agent without inquiring if he had authority to purchase or contract for the company, which he had not, and the agent billed the consignment to the company in the name of the plaintiff as consignor. The company made out a voucher—following the order—which ran to the firm and forwarded it to the station agent, the latter paid the money to the firm, and they kept it, paying the plaintiff nothing. On the company's being sued in assumpsit, it is held that it had no implied liability since no authority to bind it to plaintiff was shown. —Butler v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 60 Mich. 83.

¶ 245. In a particular case it was held that there was evidence sufficient to go to the jury on the question of the authority of defendant's attorney in fact to execute the note in suit.—Buhl v. Smith, 69 Mich. 552.

¶ 246. A brother of the seller, given authority to collect instalments on a sewing machine, who has collected all but $5 of the price agreed to be paid, title to be retained until the purchase price was fully paid, and who agreed to release it if a claim for defect was waived, may be found to have had authority to make the release.—O'Connor v. Le Roux, 78 Mich. 48.

¶ 247. Testimony tending to show that the manager of a merchant tailoring establishment, who had been forbidden by the proprietor to make purchases without express authority, informed his principal that certain goods were required, and that there was an agent in town representing a good house through whom they could be ordered, and that the principal answered that the agent knew what was required better than he did, is sufficient, if believed, to authorize a jury to draw the inference that the agent was authorized to make the purchase.—Lesher v. Loudon, 85 Mich. 52.

¶ 248. In settling an attorney's suit against his clients, the attorney's son, who, at the time, was in practice with his father, and who had been consulted—as had also his father—by defendant's counsel in the settlement, gave a receipt as the agent of his father, the latter being confined to his house by poor health. Said receipt was accepted by the father's attorneys as a valid settlement, and they received money paid thereon. Held, that the jury was justified in finding that the son had authority to settle all claims of his father against defendants, and that it was not error to refuse an instruction that the son's authority must be shown by direct proof, or that the presumptions confined his authority to settling the matters involved in the suit.—Hitchcock v. Davis, 87 Mich. 629.

¶ 250. The general agent of a corporation engaged in the manufacture of agricultural machinery settled with one of its agents with whom he had originally contracted for services, said agent securing the balance due from him to the corporation by a chattel mortgage. Afterwards the general agent contracted with another party to handle said machinery (which agreement was recognized by the company), and agreed with the mortgagor that, if he would assist said party in so doing, the mortgage should be canceled. At the close of the season the mortgagor claimed to have performed his agreement, which the mortgagee denied, and brought replevin for the mortgaged property. On the trial the above facts appeared, and in addition a witness for plaintiff testified that the authority usually conferred by plaintiff on its traveling agents was limited to proposing contracts for approval at the home office; but it appeared from the cross-examination of the witness that he had no direct knowledge of the extent of the authority of the general agent who made the agreement with defendant. Held, that the testimony was prima facie sufficient to show the authority of said general agent to make the contract in question.—Aultman, Miller & Co. v. Dodson, 104 Mich. 507.

¶ 251. Defendant, having contracted through a demonstrator employed by plaintiff for the purchase of a piano, called at plaintiff's place of business and asked him if the price should be paid to such employee. Plaintiff replied that he preferred to have payments made at the office, but that he would send an authorized agent to collect the money. Subsequently the employee negotiating the sale presented to defendant a receipt on one of plaintiff's printed blanks, signed in plaintiff's name, by himself as agent. Held, in an action of replevin for the piano, that the facts stated were sufficient to support a finding that defendant was justified in making payment to such person.—Warren v. Halley, 107 Mich. 120.

¶ 252. A person who has custody of a note and mortgage, and collects the interest and pays the same to the mortgagee, the latter accepting without question, is to be regarded as having had authority so to collect.—Donaldson v. Wilson, 79 Mich. 181.

¶ 253. A finding that defendant's traveling agent had authority to employ plaintiff as a salesman in a store, the proprietors of which had been given by said agent the exclusive agency in their city for the sale of defendant's wares, is supported by evidence that defendant accepted the contract made with the proprietors of the store, and shipped to them the wares to be sold; that said contract provided that the defendant should advertise, and that way aid said proprietors in making sales, also for the hiring of a party to aid in the advertising, for which purpose, among others, plaintiff was employed; that said agent came to said city to establish an exclusive agency, and that all he did in relation thereto was ratified and approved by the defendant; that a contract of advertising was entered into by defendant through the agent; that some considerable advertising was done, one bill for which defendant paid, and afterwards wrote to the newspaper company that the agent had some little leeway, but had not notified the defendant of the bill before, and requested the newspaper company not to accept any expense on defendant's account in the future, except with a written order from defendant's office, but stating that defendant hoped to do some further advertising next spring with the newspaper.—Booth v. Majestic Mfg. Co., 105 Mich. 562.

¶ 254. A finding that a given person was authorized to receive the principal of a mortgage in the possession of the mortgagee is sustained by evidence that the latter placed moneys in the hands of such person from time to time, to loan when opportunity offered, and that he collected the interest and principal of loans so made, obtaining discharges of the mortgages as they were paid, crediting the amount to the mortgagee, and reinvesting the same for him.—Ziegan v. Stricker, 110 Mich. 282.

¶ 255. Evidence that an agent for persons, including complainant, to whom certain mortgages were assigned made it a uniform practice to collect the interest and principal of such securities through a firm composed of the assignors, and later through a mortgage company in which they were the managing stockholders, and that this practice was sometimes by express direction to make such collections in particular cases, and at others by sending papers and discharges when informed that payments had been made, does not establish a general agency on the part of the mortgage company to collect all funds due the assignee, so as to discharge the mortgage debt by a payment to the company of the principal which it had no express authority to collect, and for which it failed to account.—Church Ass'n of Michigan v. Walton, 114 Mich. 677.

¶ 257. Evidence of agency on behalf of the owner of a building to make an original promise to pay a subcontractor for work to be done on it, is sufficient to go to the jury, where the alleged agent was a prospective son-in-law of the owner, expecting to live in the house, and in a conversation, though not the first one, the owner stated to the subcontractor that he would leave it all to the son-in-law "to look after the business for him," there being also testimony of a hearsay character but not objected to on that ground that the son-in-law stated that he was the owner's agent.—Wilhelm v. Voss, 118 Mich. 106.

¶ 259. Apparent authority of the son to contract for the auditing of defendant's books is not shown by evidence that defendant's business was in charge of a general manager, that the son of defendant was employed in a department of such business but without any authority to control or manage the concern, and that he contracted with plaintiff to audit such books, and that even though his name appeared in the city directory as assistant manager of such business, plaintiff had no knowledge of that fact previous to the making or performance of the contract.—Thiel Detective Service Co. v. Seavey, 145 Mich. 674.

¶ 261. In an action to recover the purchase price of meat sold to defendant's son, for his meat market, but on the credit of defendant, evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding of the trial court that there was no evidence of anything said or done by defendant, with knowledge on her part that plaintiff might be led to rely thereon, tending to show that the son had authority to buy any goods in her name or upon her credit, so as not to estop her from denying such agency to the injury of plaintiff.—Plankinton Packing Co. v. Berry, 199 Mich. 212.

¶ 263. In an action to recover the agreed price for the construction by plaintiff of a certain pattern to be used in casting a certain sheet metal cutting machine manufactured by defendant, where it appeared that a certain casting company had, at defendant's request, taken the pattern to its shop for the purpose of casting such machines, evidence held to show that the company had no authority from defendant to accept such pattern as complying with plaintiff's contract with defendant.—Waldecker v. Smith, 197 Mich. 58.

¶ 264. In an action by a vendor against the assignee of a contract purchaser of land to recover the balance of the purchase price evidence held insufficient to show that anyone acting for plaintiff had authority to make representations in relation to the boundary lines to the original purchaser.—Underwood v. Town, 201 Mich. 55.

§ 42. Questions of law and fact.

Submission of law question to jury as harmless error, see Harmless Error.

Submission of question of written authority to jury as harmless error, see Harmless Error.

¶ 266. The question of a general agency should not be submitted to the jury when the evidence tends only to show a special one.—Barnes v. Gardner, 60 Mich. 133.

¶ 267. Where there is no evidence of original authority of one codefendant to bind the other by the lease sued on, but there was testimony impeaching the denial of the one, alleged to have had authority, that he lacked it, it is error to let the issue of authority go to the jury over a request to eliminate that issue.—McPherson v. Pinch, 119 Mich. 36.

¶ 269. Whether, in a particular case, a merchant in New York, shipping goods to his correspondent in the interior, had authority to make a contract on behalf of the correspondent for shipment, on different terms from those ordinarily adopted by common carriers, is a question of fact to be determined by the jury from the evidence; and the court cannot properly be asked to make any charge that shall absolutely dispose of the fact in controversy.—American Transp. Co. v. Moore, 5 Mich. 368, affirmed 24 How. 1, 16 L. ed. 674.

¶ 270. The ownership of the paper discounted or sold to defendant, and the nature and extent of the authority of the agent selling it, were questions of fact for the jury, in an action where the principal sought to recover from defendant that part of the purchase price of such paper, which defendant, upon the authority of such agent, retained as a credit on such agent's individual liability to defendant.—McBain v. Seligman, 58 Mich. 294.

¶ 271. In replevin for a piano paid for to an employee who was hired to demonstrate pianos for a salesman, but who was the active negotiator of the sale and who appeared with a blank form of receipt and collected the price without authority, after plaintiff promised to send an authorized agent to collect, the case was properly submitted to the jury upon the single question whether plaintiff's conduct had been such as to justify defendant in believing that such person was authorized to receive the money, there being no evidence that he had express authority to make collections; and it was not error to refuse instructions that would not aid in determining this question.—Warren v. Halley, 107 Mich. 120.

¶ 273. In a cause the merits of which depend largely on the authority of defendant's local agent to make the contract sued upon, such authority, if sufficiently shown by the evidence, is a question properly to be submitted to the jury.—Van Vranken v. Union News Co., 78 Mich. 217.

¶ 275. The ordinary power of a division superintendent of a railroad company does not include the settlement of claims for injuries or the making of contracts for employing for life persons who have been injured; and where the evidence is all to the effect that the superintendent has not such authority, it is error to submit the question to the jury.—Maxson v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 117 Mich. 218.

¶ 276. In an action for work and labor against the owner of a farm, testimony by the defendant that he had contracted with his brother to clear land and cut hay and that defendant's brother hired the plaintiff and testimony by the brother that he had no authority to hire the plaintiff for the defendant, taken with the testimony by the plaintiff that the brother told him he and the defendant had two or three farms, and that the defendant paid the plaintiff $1 to buy seed corn with, raises an issue of agency for the jury and a directed verdict for the plaintiff is erroneous.—McClure v. Murphey, 126 Mich. 134.

¶ 278. In an action to recover for services as a baseball player, where there was testimony that defendant in referring plaintiff to the captain as his sole manager, stated that whatever he did "went," the question of the authority of such captain to contract with plaintiff was for the jury.—Schelbeck v. Van Derbeck, 122 Mich. 29.

¶ 281. In a suit in trespass vi et armis the evidence disclosed that defendant Brandan was the agent of defendant sewing machine company, in full charge of its local business; that plaintiff sent her machine to him to be repaired; that he gave her one which she supposed belonged to defendant to use; that he later sold it to her; and that upon her failure to make a final payment on the same he forcibly took it away from her home, inflicting personal injury on plaintiff. There was evidence that defendant company had given the machine to Brandan, but plaintiff did not know this and dealt with him as agent of the company. Held, that the court properly refused to direct a verdict for the defendant company on the ground that Brandan in committing the assault acted outside the scope of his authority.—Zart v. Singer Sew. Mach. Co., 162 Mich. 387.

¶ 282. In a suit by a bartender for wages where the evidence showed that plaintiff had been employed by the head bartender, the question as to the authority of the agent to contract for the owner, held properly submitted to the jury.—Devich v. Dick, 177 Mich. 173.

¶ 283. In an action to recover for goods purchased by defendant's alleged agent, where the defense is that the agent purchased the goods on her own account, the question for whom the goods were purchased is for the jury on all the evidence.—Feist v. Root, 189 Mich. 595.

¶ 284. In an action to recover on a written logging contract, where plaintiff was ordered by an agent of the defendant to change the character of the operation and perform extra services to meet an emergency, the agent agreeing that defendant would pay for such services, the submission of the question of such agent's authority to the jury held not erroneous under the evidence.—Martindale v. Lobdell-Emery Mfg. Co., 189 Mich. 477.

¶ 285. In an action to recover money paid for stock to an absconding agent of an insurance company evidence held sufficient to present, as a question of fact for the jury, the authority of such agent to act as such in soliciting subscriptions.—De Hoop v. Peninsular Life Ins. Co., 193 Mich. 380.

¶ 286. A charge that the authority of an agent to make a contract is not evidence that he had authority six months later, and one that authority at the time should be determined on the evidence, including what took place at a certain interview (the one six months before), are contradictory and misleading.—Hensel v. Maas, 94 Mich. 563.

¶ 287. An instruction that a person, not being an agent to deliver goods sold, had no right to collect the purchase price without special authority to do so, was properly refused, where it excluded a theory that plaintiff had held out such agent as having authority to collect.—Warren v. Halley, 107 Mich. 120.

¶ 288. An instruction that written authority to defendant's agent to fix the rate of wages to be paid need not have been shown in a servant's action for overtime work alleged to have been rendered under promise of pay, but that some authority must be found "as indicated by his conduct and his duties here and his relation to the railroad company (defendant) and his relation to the men under him," was proper where he testified that he had authority to employ and discharge men, but was limited by the payroll as to how much he could pay them, and that the fixing of wages was a matter for his superiors.—Bidwell v. Grand Trunk W. R. Co., 148 Mich. 524.

¶ 289. In an action for damages for breach of a contract to deliver apples which defendant claimed was entered into by his son without his consent, held that an instruction as to the liability of the principal for the acts of an agent having general authority to make contracts should be approved where there was testimony to justify a finding that the son had general authority from his father to make the contract.—Hecht v. Ebers, 189 Mich. 573.

¶ 291. In an action to recover the price and value of a new line of goods which defendant's agent did not have express authority to buy, he having only partial charge of the business in his employer's absence, and express authority to buy certain lines of goods, the plaintiff claiming that the order was unconditional, and the defendant that the goods were consigned for sale, held that an instruction upon the binding of a principal for the acts of his agent by holding him out as having authority to act was confusing and erroneous, as there was no evidence that the plaintiff or his salesman had or attempted to get any information regarding the authority of defendant's clerk to buy the goods.—Acorn Refining Co. v. Knowlson, 188 Mich. 123.

B. UNAUTHORIZED AND TORTIOUS ACTS OF AGENT.

§ 44. In general; who may question.

What acts are within authority, see ante 11, A.

What acts may be ratified, see post § 54.

Right of stranger to question ratification, see post § 65.

Liability of agent to principal for breach of duty, see post § 96.

Responsibility of principal for alteration of instrument by agent, and effect of such alteration, see Alteration of Instruments.

¶ 292. A principal is not bound by acts done by the agent outside of the scope of his authority.—Haggerty v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 59 Mich. 366.

P. A. R. Co., 62 Mich. 643; Delta Lumber Co. v. Williams, 73 Mich. 86.

¶ 294. A principal is not bound by a settlement made by his alleged agent assuming to act without authority and without consideration passing to the principal.—Baird v. Randall, 58 Mich. 176.

¶ 296. A principal is bound by the act of an agent who has only exceeded his authority or has violated special instructions, unless the party with whom he dealt had notice of the want of authority in the particular case.—Rice v. Peninsular Club of Grand Rapids, 52 Mich. 87.

¶ 297. Where an agent performs two acts at the same time, one of which he was not authorized to do, and the two are not so interwoven that they cannot be separated, but constitute different parts of the same contract, that which the agent was authorized to do is binding on the principal, and the other only is void.—Hammond v. Michigan State Bank, W. 214.

¶ 298. Both parties are equally responsible for the unauthorized acts of a third person whom they have mutually chosen to act between them, and where one of them has done all that by the agreement he was to do he is not to be held liable to the other for the failure of their mutual agent to do his part.—Crippen v. Hope, 34 Mich. 55.

¶ 299. One who deals with the agent of another has a right to presume that the agent is acting honestly with his principal, and does not become liable if he is not.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 388.

¶ 300. One, who has made a conditional subscription to a project on condition that the subscription is not to be delivered until the subscriber authorizes it, is not prevented from showing it in defense by the fact that the payee's agent in whose custody the writing was placed negotiated the contract without authority to make such a contract.—Davis v. Kneale, 97 Mich. 72.

¶ 301. A promise of an employer to pay for services rendered by a physician to an injured employee at the request of a forewoman having no authority to employ the physician, imports no more than the promise to pay the debt of another, which is void under the statute of frauds.—Holmes v. McAllister, 123 Mich. 493.

¶ 302. The rule that "where one of two innocent parties must suffer by the fraud of a third, he shall suffer who by his indiscretion has enabled such third person to commit the fraud," had no application in trover where although defendant purchased the property in question from an employee of plaintiff, the defendant purchased it as the property of such employee.—Ball-Barnhart-Putnam Co. v. Lane, 135 Mich. 275.

¶ 303. A municipality sued on bonds cannot impeach the title of the plaintiff holder by showing want of authority of a transferor's agent to transfer them to plaintiff unless the principal stood entitled to deny such authority.—Schmid v. Village of Frankfort, 141 Mich. 291.

§ 45. Acts done for benefit or interest of principal.

Jury question as to act having been a representative one, see post ¶ 458.

¶ 304. An agent who was furnished a horse, which he was to take care of, caused it to be kept on his principal's credit, without authority. Held, that the principal was not liable, even though the horse was used in his business to his profit.—Grover & Baker Sewing Machine Co. v. Polkemus, 34 Mich. 247.

¶ 305. A station agent of a railroad company having had no authority to employ a porter, permitted one to work as such, and this was known to but not ratified by the roadmaster. Held, that the company's liability for work performed by such porter, not employed by the proper officers, cannot be based upon the ground that it was necessary and beneficial.—Willis v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co., 72 Mich. 160.

As notice to other party of limitation on authority, see ante § 25.

As defeating right to commissions, see post § 101.

Making principal's paper payable to himself as notice preventing taking in good faith, see Negotiable Instruments, XIII.

Notice to purchaser of land from chain of title showing dealings by agent in his own interest, see Notice and Record of Title, I, B.

Crime of corrupting agents by bonus or gratuity, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15590.

¶ 306. One employed in an adverse capacity cannot bind his principal by anything he may do without authority prejudicial to his principal's interests.—Powell v. Conant, 33 Mich. 396.

certain notes to raise money for the business, indorsed them as agent to one who, the husband consenting, retained part of the price to satisfy the husband's original indebtedness to him, the wife could recover from the creditor the amount so retained.—McBain v. Seligman, 58 Mich. 294.

¶ 308. A. carried on and managed for creditors a business in B.'s name, giving and taking notes generally in such name, B. having authorized him to do so. A particular purchase relating to the business was made by A. in his own name, and was so billed. Held, that A. had authority to pay for the same by executing a note in B.'s name.—Shipman v. Byles, 65 Mich. 690.

Duty to inquire as to authority and effect of secret limitations, see ante §§ 23-25.

Liability for money received by auctioneer on sale variant from published terms, see Auctions and Auctioneers.

Liability of one party to escrow where depositary violates terms to damage of other party, see Escrows.

¶ 310. The fact that one who acted in the sale of land, for himself and a co-tenant, had been instructed by the latter not to sell by the acre, could not affect a purchaser who bought in that way, and evidence of such instructions would not be admissible in an action against the vendor for fraud in misrepresenting the number of acres to the purchaser.—Starkweather v. Benjamin, 32 Mich. 305.

¶ 311. A purchasing agent had bought seven or eight lots of lumber for defendants, and had instructions to purchase another cargo when he was notified that defendants did not desire him to buy any more on their account unless he could obtain better bargains. On the day he received this notice he bargained for another lot with plaintiffs, defendants to pay expense of moving and inspection, and he wrote to defendants informing them of the terms of the contract and asking if they would take it. Receiving no answer, at the end of two days he commenced to receive the lumber for defendants. Subsequently he received a delayed letter from defendants telling him to ship no more lumber. He wrote them what he had done, and they wrote and telegraphed that they could not take the lumber. Held, in an action by plaintiff for the expense of moving and inspecting the lumber, that the agent had no authority to contract, and that defendants were not liable for anything.—Miller v. Frost's Detroit Lumber & Wooden Ware Works, 66 Mich. 455.

¶ 312. The owner of timber land was bound by the act of an agent licensing the cutting of timber in excess of his authority, where it appeared that such agent had authority to contract for part of such standing timber; and where the licensee acted in good faith and in ignorance of any limitations or restrictions of the apparent authority of such agent; and such principal was bound by such apparent authority and not by the actual or express authority of such agent, whether such agency was a general or a special one.—Antrim Iron Co. v. Anderson, 140 Mich. 702.

Effect of notice after agency ceases, see post §§ 72, 74.

¶ 313. Where a person who had bought several lots of lumber for defendants, having, however, no general authority to buy, purchased for them another lot after they had notified him to buy no more on their account unless he could make better bargains, defendant's having refused to receive such lot, were not liable even for the inspection of it.—Miller v. Frost's Detroit Lumber & Wooden Ware Works, 66 Mich. 455.

§ 49. Negligence or tort by agent.

In a great number of personal injury cases as well as cases of injury to property the act or neglect of a servant or agent, while entering into the cause of action, is not the gravamen thereof; and the principle of respondeat superior is not questioned or applied. For instances of this kind, see topics treating of such causes of action, e. g., Carriers; Highways; Railroads; Street Railways; and the like.

See also ante ¶ 188.

Liability of carrier for acts of servants or agents, see Carriers.

Malice or wantonness of agent making principal liable for exemplary damages, see Damages, VII.

Liability by ratification of agent's act, see post § 58.

Liability of agent, see post III.

¶ 314. The mere act of conferring an authority that may properly be delegated does not constitute such negligence as to make one innocent party who confers such power responsible for a loss caused to another by the agent's dishonesty; nor can he be responsible if the other party has been negligent.—New York Iron Mine v. First Nat. Bank of Negaunee, 39 Mich. 644.

¶ 316. The owner of a store can be held liable for a tort committed by a clerk only if said clerk was acting in his capacity as a clerk in doing the act and within the scope of his employment.—Ducre v. Sparrow-Kroell Lumber Co., 168 Mich. 49.

¶ 319. Where a mortgage containing covenants against incumbrances was given to a loan agent to take up three existing mortgages, and where the agent, after assigning the mortgage, pays only two of the three old mortgages, the failure of the agent to make payment of the third mortgage cannot be visited upon either the holder of such unpaid prior mortgage or upon the innocent assignee of the new one, and the holder of such prior mortgage is entitled to foreclose, and the holder of the new mortgage is entitled to recover the full amount of his mortgage.—Bissell v. Hively, 123 Mich. 106.

¶ 320. Owners of property did not, by employing one who had on a previous occasion embezzled money from them as a shipping clerk, where he was not expected to receive money, incur the risk of his thefts, and preclude themselves from recovering, in trover, property stolen by such employee.—Ball-Barnhart-Putnam Co. v. Lane, 135 Mich. 275.

Agency as between two alleged principals, see also ante ¶ 23.

Responsibility of principal for representations of buying and selling or contracting agents, see ante § 38.

Adoption by ratification, see post § 58.

Persons liable for deceit or fraud, see generally Fraud and Deceit.

¶ 321. A principal's liability extends to the agent's frauds or misrepresentations committed or made while acting within the scope of his authority, whether real or (in case of subsequent ratification) assumed.—Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 336, affirming on rehearing 82 Mich. 315.

¶ 322. One has no right to rely upon an agent's representations as to the profits to be made by enlarging an electric plant, where, before the contract for the enlargement is executed the principal informs him that he must take his own risk in the matter.—Western Electric Co. v. Hart, 103 Mich. 477.

¶ 323. Where the owner of an equity in pine land acted as agent of the legal owner, his representations as to the timber's quantity and quality, and as to the land's being well situated for logging purposes, will, if relied on by the contractor for cutting the pine, who had no personal knowledge on the subject when he entered into the contract, be imputed to the legal owner, and the latter must answer for their accuracy though he had no knowledge about them until long after the execution of the contract.—Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 315, affirmed on rehearing 82 Mich. 336.

¶ 324. A foreman, even if a vice principal, has not the power to make representations as to the safety of appliances upon which his principal's employee is working which are obviously unsafe, and thus to bind his principal to respond in damages if injury results.—Toomey v. Eureka Iron & Steel Works, 89 Mich. 249.

¶ 325. In an action for deceit in misrepresenting the number of fruit trees upon a piece of land traded, where the broker had told plaintiff there were 175, if the defendant principal had told him before the trade was consummated that there were but from 80 to 90 the plaintiff could not thereafter treat the broker's representations as those of defendant.—Aldrich v. Scribner, 146 Mich. 609.

¶ 326. Where the agent of defendant in selling a lot to plaintiff represents that he is selling a corner lot when it is the adjoining lot, the agent having authority to make contracts to sell subject to approval, is acting within the scope of his authority in showing the lot to plaintiff and defendant is liable to plaintiff for damages sustained.—Smith v. Michigan Realty & Construction Co., 175 Mich. 600.

See generally such topics as Conversion; Trespass; Executions; Assault and Battery; False Imprisonment; Malicious Prosecution.

¶ 327. Whoever selects a person not qualified as a regular officer, e. g., a deputized constable, to serve a process should be held responsible for his behavior in the discharge of the duty.—Harvey v. McAdams, 32 Mich. 472.

¶ 328. One who employs another innocently and for a lawful purpose is not usually liable for his trespasses; so, of one who employs an officer to execute lawful process.—Sutherland v. Ingalls, 63 Mich. 620.

§ 52. Liability of principal where agent is also liable.

The general rule that all parties to a tort are jointly and severally liable is applied in topics dealing with the various torts, e. g., Assault; Conversion; Trespass; Libel; Fraud; Malicious Prosecution; False Imprisonment; Nuisance; Negligence; and topics treating of negligence respecting particular places of occupations, e. g., Carriers; Highways.

Coliability of agent, see post § 85.

¶ 329. The fact that the owner of an equity in pine lands, who assumed to be agent for the legal owner, has given to a contractor for cutting the pine his personal guaranty as to the truth of his representations about the quantity and quality of the pine, and the suitability of the land for logging purposes, all based on an estimate and report of another, does not relieve the legal owner from responsibility as principal for like representations, made earlier as agent; but simply adds the equitable owner's personal responsibility.—Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 315, affirmed on rehearing 82 Mich. 336.

¶ 330. Where the wrong is committed by an agent for the principal, under circumstances which make the principal liable, there are two actors, the principal and the agent and the injured party may sue either or both.—Cascarella v. National Grocer Co., 151 Mich. 15.

C. RATIFICATION AND ADOPTION, OR REPUDIATION.

§ 53. In general; knowledge and intent.

Acceptance, acquiescence and inaction with knowledge, see also post §§ 58, 59.

Evidence as to knowledge, see post § 66 et seq.

Ratification by corporation or its stockholders of acts of officers or directors without authority, see Corporations, XVII, D.

Ratification of partner's act by firm, see Partnership, IV.

¶ 332. There can be no ratification of an agent's acts without full knowledge of the acts claimed to be ratified.—Hurley v. Watson, 68 Mich. 531.

¶ 333. Ratification by the principal of a contract alleged to have been made by his agent for the purchase and delivery of coal is established only when it appears that at the time of the alleged ratification the principal knew that his agent had made the contract which it is claimed was made.—Pittsburgh & Ohio Min. Co. v. Scully, 145 Mich. 229.

¶ 334. A subsequent letter relied upon as conferring authority upon a collection agent to effect settlement of a judgment at less than its full amount, was not binding on the creditor (principal) who had no knowledge of the facts surrounding the settlement.—Upton v. Dennis, 133 Mich. 238.

¶ 335. An unauthorized contract by the son of defendant for the auditing of defendant's books was not ratified by defendant's general manager of her store where, even though such work was done with the knowledge and assistance of defendant's general manager, such manager had no knowledge that it was being done under a contract ostensibly on behalf of defendant, but believed that plaintiff was hired by such son.—Thiel Detective Service Co. v. Seavey, 145 Mich. 674.

Attempted adoption of act of unauthorized person in taking up estray, see Animals.

¶ 338. A principal may ratify an unauthorized act of his agent.—Harlow v. Jaseph, 183 Mich. 500.

¶ 339. An act that might originally have been so done as to be binding may be so ratified or assumed as to bind the immediate parties.—Sault Ste. Marie Highway Com'rs v. Van Dusan, 40 Mich. 429.

¶ 340. A lease of land for more than one year, void because executed by an agent without written authority, is not validated by the principal's signing a duplicate of which the lessee has no knowledge.—Chesebrough v. Pingree, 72 Mich. 438.

¶ 341. For a case where, upon an unauthorized sale of land, instruments executed as duplicates were so different that one only was susceptible of ratification by the vendor, see Crane v. Portland, 9 Mich. 493.

¶ 342. One cannot be liable as for the ratification of a tort that was not committed in his interest; so held where suit was brought against the general agent of a sewing-machine company for a forcible trespass committed by employees while removing a machine by his direction and in compliance with the orders of the company from the premises of one who held it under a sewing-machine lease which had been forfeited.—Smith v. Lozo, 42 Mich. 6.

¶ 343. Consent, by a stranger to a contract for the purchase of land, to pay part of the amount remaining due thereon and some payments made pursuant thereto do not render him liable on the contract where it does not purport to have been made for him, since in such case there can be no ratification.—Ferris v. Snow, 130 Mich. 254.

Acts affecting two parties and ratified by one only, see ante § 54.

¶ 345. Ratification of agency must be entire; one cannot accept an agent's contract so far as it favors him and repudiate the rest of it.—Widner v. Olmstead, 14 Mich. 124; President, etc., of Peninsular Bank v. Hanmer, 14 Mich. 208; Hutchings v. Ladd, 16 Mich. 493; Eberts v. Selover, 44 Mich. 519; Bacon v. Johnson, 56 Mich. 182.

Evidence of ratification, see post §§ 67, 68.
Promise of undisclosed principal to pay, as ratification of acts, see post ¶ 454.
Ratification of settlement of account stated, see also Account Stated, ¶ 34.

¶ 346. Ratification of an unauthorized act may be express or implied, and when not express the facts and circumstances from which it may be inferred must be such as are inconsistent with a different intention.—Heyn v. O'Hagen, 60 Mich. 150.

¶ 347. A vendor of land who signs a contract for the sale brought to him by his agent, without reading it, is bound by a provision therein authorizing the purchaser to pay in merchandise, although the agent had no authority to insert the same.—Liska v. Lodge, 112 Mich. 635.

¶ 350. Where an auctioneer employed to sell land upon terms specifically fixed by the owner made a sale according to such terms, but afterwards made a contract with another than the vendee and upon different terms for a sale of such property, the contract was not ratified by the owner's tendering a deed upon the basis of a performance of the terms as originally authorized.—Muffatt v. Gott, 74 Mich. 672.

¶ 351. An unauthorized sale of a machine by an agent to whom it had been consigned for sale on commission, is not ratified by an unaccepted offer to exchange the machine bought for another made for the purpose of satisfying the purchaser and inducing him to complete the purchase.—Brown v. Foster, 137 Mich. 35.

¶ 352. A sale and delivery of a machine consigned to agents for sale on commission, contrary to an agreement not to deliver until payment of the purchase price, is not ratified by an indicated willingness to let the sale stand provided the agents would pay the purchase price less their commission.—Brown v. Foster, 137 Mich. 35.

¶ 353. A contract for sale of land slightly variant in terms from that which the agent was authorized to make is ratified therein, where the agent referred the terms by letter to the principal with a request to telegraph acceptance, which the principal did.—Stuart v. Mattern, 141 Mich. 686.

Execution of instrument by ratifying signature of another, see Execution of Instruments, II.

¶ 354. The authority of an agent to execute a written contract for the purchase of lands may be shown by an oral ratification; and the acts of the principal, from which such ratification may be inferred, are competent evidence for that purpose.—Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 374.

¶ 355. The execution by a traveling salesman of a nonresident firm of a bond of indemnity, under seal, in the name of the firm, in an attachment suit brought to collect a debt due the firm and contracted in the ordinary course of their business, although without express authority under seal, may be ratified by parol.—Palmer v. Seligman, 77 Mich. 305.

See also ante § 27, as to estoppel based on acceptance of benefits.

As evidence that agency existed, see ante § 10.

As basis for estoppel to deny agency, see ante § 19.

Acceptance of land in exchange by United States as ratification of officers' deed to other land, see Public Lands, II.

¶ 356. An arrangement made by an agent in excess of his authority is ratified if the principal retains its advantages.—Bacon v. Johnson, 56 Mich. 182; Nichols, Shepard & Co. v. Shaffer, 63 Mich. 599.

¶ 357. When a person adopts the unauthorized acts of another in his behalf, and has received the benefits accruing therefrom, he adopts and ratifies the instrumentalities by which the fruits were obtained.—Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 315, affirmed on rehearing 82 Mich. 336.

¶ 358. One who adopts unauthorized acts of another and receives and accepts benefits accruing therefrom, thereby adopts and ratifies the instrumentalities by which the results were obtained, and is estopped from denying that the agent was authorized to act.—Bertha v. Regal Motor Car Co., 180 Mich. 51.

¶ 359. A principal cannot take the fruits of a contract entered into by an agent without authority and not be bound by its terms.—Township of Wexford v. Seeley, 196 Mich. 634.

¶ 360. Where the proceeds of a draft, made without authority in the name of another, are received by the latter with full knowledge of the transaction, he must be held to have adopted the act of the original maker, and to be liable upon the draft.—McDonough v. Heyman, 38 Mich. 334.

¶ 361. A railroad company will not be held to have ratified the unauthorized hiring, by one of its local freight agents, of a person to assist in the detection of a thief who had stolen property in the hands of the company for transportation, by reason of the use by its detectives of information furnished by such person, leading to the arrest of the offender and the recovery of the property; such fact not constituting such an appropriation of the services of such person as to impose an obligation to pay for the same.—Somerville v. Wabash R. Co., 109 Mich. 294.

¶ 364. Where one holding a power of attorney to sell and convey land has made conveyances within the expressed terms of the power, and the owner has sanctioned the sales by accepting the proceeds, she cannot afterwards contend that the power did not authorize the sales.—Vaughn v. Sheridan, 50 Mich. 155.

¶ 365. Payment of mortgage to mortgage company was held ratified by owner's accepting from company property to balance account with it which he knows credits amount of mortgage, and by his claiming, in receivership proceedings against company, that money paid be treated as trust fund for his benefit.—Bissell v. Dowling, 117 Mich. 646.

¶ 366. Where an owner of an equity in land has executed in the name of the legal owner a contract for cutting the pine, the legal owner, by receiving the logs cut thereunder and by making advances to the contractor as provided in the contract, adopts and ratifies it, and cannot afterwards dispute that the equitable owner was his agent to contract for the cutting with authority to make representations as to the quantity and quality of the pine, and as to the suitability of the land for logging purposes.—Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 315, affirmed on rehearing 82 Mich. 336.

¶ 368. In a bill to subject a real estate mortgage to the payment of the claims of the complainants who had supplied labor and material for a building erected by a contractor to whom the mortgage ran, where it appeared that after the execution of the mortgage the contractor requested one of the defendants, who was a lumberman, to furnish lumber upon the mortgage being assigned to him, and where the lumberman had his agent examine the property to ascertain whether it was sufficient security and where the agent reported that it was, and thereupon the assignment was made, and the agent, without the knowledge of his principal, agreed that all bills for material should be paid by his principal and so informed complainants upon inquiry, the principal was bound to carry out the agreement made by his self-constituted agent pursuant to which the assignment was made.—Sokup v. Letellier, 123 Mich. 640.

¶ 370. In an action on a township treasurer's bond, signed in the name of a banking partnership as surety, by an employee, in the absence of the active partner who had the entire management of the business, and without his consent, and for the purpose of obtaining a share of township funds to be deposited by the treasurer, where it appeared that notice of the act was given such active partner upon his return and deposits were received by the bank during the term of the bond, and some by the active partner personally, and the township board was not notified that such bond was invalid, evidence held sufficient to show that such active partner impliedly ratified the act of such employee in signing the bond for the partnership.—Township of Wexford v. Seeley, 196 Mich. 634.

¶ 372. One cannot sit by and see another constantly using his name in the purchase of goods, receive the invoices showing such purchase, give orders for the goods to be taken from the depot and express office, see the other dealing them off as his own, and then, when called upon for payment by one who has been acting in good faith, repudiate the whole transaction and deny the agency; such silence is a ratification of the act of the other, though no authority, express or implied, for the purchase was originally given.—Cooper v. Mulder, 74 Mich. 374.

¶ 373. Knowledge on the part of a firm of coal dealers that a clerk had for more than seven years been in the habit of applying his rent and other claims due from him to his landlord on account of coal purchased of said firm by the landlord, during which time no objection was made by said firm, amounts to a ratification of said unauthorized course of dealing.—Hurley v. Watson, 68 Mich. 531.

¶ 374. A., representing himself to be B.'s agent, bought goods which were shipped to B.'s address, but which A. secured and carried to his place of business. Invoices were sent by mail to B. and were received by him, and then he learned what had been done; but he failed to repudiate the act, and said nothing to the seller until the latter came to collect the bill, when, after part payment by A., B. promised the vendor to see the balance paid. Held, that B. was liable for the unpaid balance.—Heyn v. O'Hagen, 60 Mich. 150.

¶ 375. Defendants, on receiving a bill for supplies furnished to one who had a contract with them for getting in logs, asked for the order upon which the supplies had been shipped, and, after such order had been sent to them, waited for a long time without denying the claim against them, which delay was prejudicial to plaintiff. Held, that the order was ratified by defendant's conduct.—Dousman v. Peters, 85 Mich. 488.

¶ 376. The erection of a $5,000 building on a $2,500 lot prior to the time when one of the common owners of it decided to repudiate the sale made through an agent with approval of the other common owner and with the knowledge of both, is sufficient part performance to disentitle her to repudiate.—Stuart v. Mattern, 141 Mich. 686.

¶ 377. A manufacturer was liable for salt bags, where, in an action for the sale price thereof, it appeared that such bags were ordered on the credit of such manufacturer, in pursuance of an arrangement between such agent and the manufacturer whereby such agent was to handle the entire output of such manufacturer, the manufacturer to furnish the bags, that such arrangement was known to the seller, and where such manufacturer kept the bags shipped to it for a long time and until after the negotiations with such agent had failed, whereupon it notified the seller that it did not want the bags.—Root & McBride Co. v. Walton Salt Ass'n, 140 Mich. 441.

¶ 378. An agent, in order to ratify the unauthorized act of another agent, must have general power to perform the act which he ratifies and both must be agents of the same principal, and the agent whose act is in question must have professed to act as the agent of such common principal.—Ironwood Store Co. v. Harrison, 75 Mich. 197.

¶ 379. An unauthorized act of a stranger may be ratified by the party for whom he assumes to act, but not by his general agent, unless the power of appointing agents has been delegated to such agent.—Ironwood Store Co. v. Harrison, 75 Mich. 197.

¶ 382. Whether ratification may be inferred from the act of an agent, when the principal himself could not lawfully have done the original act, and its consequences are beyond the control of both, quere.—Turner v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Hartford, 55 Mich. 236.

¶ 383. The fact that the general agent of a manufacturing company made no disclaimer of liability for a share of the profits alleged to be due to an employee under a contract with the superintendent, is no evidence of ratification since such agent had no power to enter into such contract nor to ratify it.—Deffenbaugh v. Jackson Paper Mfg. Co., 120 Mich. 242.

See also ante § 59.

¶ 384. A principal cannot ratify the act of his agent, who has assumed without written authority to execute an agreement for the sale of his principal's land, so as to render the alleged agreement binding upon the other party after such party has disavowed liability thereunder.—Baldwin v. Schiappacasse, 109 Mich. 170.

Acts involving other parties, see also ante ¶¶ 340, 341.

Ratification and continued recognition as evidence of agency, see ante § 10.

Ratification as evidence of right to commissions, see post § 105.

¶ 385. A subsequent ratification relates back and is equivalent to prior authority.—Lyell v. Sanbourn, 2 Mich. 109.

¶ 386. Ratification relates back to the time of performance of the acts ratified, and hence ratification of an agreement made with a tenant before he became a tenant for a year by entering upon a new term, is not nudum pactum though the ratification took place after he had entered upon the new term.—Rogers v. Babcock, 139 Mich. 94.

¶ 387. Where the action of one who acts as agent for another is adopted and followed by the assumed principal it is immaterial whether he had original authority or not.—Edwards v. Chandler, 14 Mich. 471.

¶ 389. That a person undertaking to sell land for another had in the first place no sufficient authority as agent is immaterial where the vendee has taken possession and where the vendor has fully ratified the agreement and offers to perform it.—Hanchett v. McQueen, 32 Mich. 22; Bailey v. Cornell, 66 Mich. 107.

¶ 390. When a principal adopts the contract of a self-constituted agent, who has assumed to act for him without authority, he is bound to inquire and ascertain the extent to which the agent assumed to act in his behalf; and the principal, when he becomes such by adopting his acts, is bound by all acts within the scope of the assumed authority.—Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 336, affirming on rehearing 82 Mich. 315.

¶ 391. A wholesale house which makes a shipment of goods upon the advice of its traveling agent that the purchaser will turn over in payment, instead of cash, the note of a third person, naming the maker and indorser, and suggesting that the latter's financial standing be ascertained by the house through a mercantile agency, cannot thereafter insist that the note received is insufficient because indorsed by the purchaser without recourse.—Peck Co. v. Gordon, 112 Mich. 487.

¶ 392. Executors who adopt a contract of sale made by an agent take it burdened with responsibility for the agent's fraudulent representations as to the premises sold.—Dodge v. Tullock, 110 Mich. 480.

Invalidity of oral promise to pay for services rendered at request of agent lacking authority, see also ante ¶ 301.

¶ 393. Though ratification of agency by co-vendor in land contract executed for him on parol authority is insufficient under statute of frauds to validate the contract, it is sufficient as to receipt of money on joint account, and renders party jointly liable to refund to vendee payments made by latter. —Wright v. Dickinson, 67 Mich. 590.

Right of stranger to question want of authority, see ante § 44.

¶ 394. If the principal recognize and affirm the existence and acts of an agent, a mere stranger will not be permitted to controvert either.—Scott v. Detroit Young Men's Society Lessee, 1 D. 119, writ of error dism'd 5 How. (U. S.) 343, 12 L. ed. 181.

¶ 396. Parol ratification of an agent's act in executing an indemnity bond may be shown by facts and circumstances.—Palmer v. Seligman, 77 Mich. 305.

¶ 398. As tending to prove ratification or adoption by co-vendor of vendee's payments on land contract executed on parol authority, jury in action by vendee to recover back such payments may consider, in determining whether there is a joint liability, the fact that such vendor approved the contract in writing after payments had been made, and that he joined with co-vendor in suit for balance of purchase money.—Wright v. Dickinson, 67 Mich. 590.

¶ 399. Where supplies have been furnished by plaintiff to one who had a contract with defendants for getting in logs, and where plaintiff claims that the contractor's order for such supplies was either authorized or subsequently ratified by defendants, testimony as to what was done with the supplies and what became of them was held competent and material as bearing upon the issues of authority and of subsequent ratification.—Dousman v. Peters, 85 Mich. 488.

¶ 400. As tending to prove ratification or adoption by co-vendor of vendee's payments on land contract executed on parol authority, the jury in vendee's action to recover back such payments may consider, in determining whether there is a joint liability, the fact that vendor approved the contract in writing after payments had been made, and that he joined with co-vendor in suit for balance for purchase money.—Wright v. Dickinson, 67 Mich. 590.

See also ante ¶ 370.

¶ 402. Where, in plaintiff's absence, his clerk received from his debtor a draft, and accepted the same, to be applied, when paid, on the debtor's account, and after the draft fell due the plaintiff wrote the debtor respecting it, not repudiating the act of the clerk, and, on subsequently suing the debtor, offered to return the unpaid draft, it was held that these facts furnished evidence from which a jury might infer a ratification by plaintiff of the act of the clerk.—Jennison v. Parker, 7 Mich. 355.

¶ 403. Evidence that the alleged agent was employed by defendant in other similar transactions, and that defendant, after such agent had made for him the contract of sale in question, called upon the vendee and attempted to settle the matter by delivering half of the quantity sold, is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of ratification. —Heffron v. Armsby, 61 Mich. 505.

¶ 404. A business that had failed with large debts was transferred to defendant, and the manager, one of the former owners, remained and continued the business for many years. Defendant lived in New York and took no active part therein. The manager was wont to sign notes in defendant's name, and defendant after some years in looking over the books, found such notes issued to a large amount, but made no objection or comment. Held, that such facts, coupled with uncontradicted testimony of defendant's statement that the manager had authority to issue such notes, were sufficient to go to the jury as to defendant's liability on a note so issued.—Buhl v. Smith, 69 Mich. 552.

¶ 407. When sued by a firm for goods sold, defendant claimed that he had sold goods to the firm's chief clerk who had charge of the books, and who, though he had no express authority to apply his individual debts on debts due the firm, agreed that the goods should go in discharge of the debt in suit. The firm's books showed certain credits given to defendant as if payment had been made in cash and the clerk kept an individual account on the firm's ledger in which items were entered of charges against him as turned upon defendant's account. One of the firm looked at the books every day and the other at odd times. Held, that it was proper to submit to the jury the question whether the clerk was authorized to make such an arrangement with defendant, and that as to sales made prior to the entries which could have informed the firm of its clerk's action in regard to defendant's account the firm could recover.—Hurley v. Watson, 92 Mich. 121.

¶ 409. In an action upon a lease, where the question of the authority of one of the defendants to bind the other defendant to accept the lease as altered after its execution by both defendants was in dispute, evidence that such defendant held himself out by bill heads as a proprietor; that he saw the lease in its changed form a few days after its execution and made no objection, and that upon plaintiff demanding rental he did not deny his liability but used language from which the jury would have been justified in inferring that he considered himself bound by the lease and obligated to pay, was sufficient to submit the question of ratification to the jury.—McPherson v. Pinch, 119 Mich. 36.

¶ 410. An agent for two tenants in common of lots negotiated a sale of them with the approval of one of such tenants who had the management for both. He died before conveyance and prior to receipt of a letter to him giving the details of the sale previously communicated to him by telegram. It was opened and read by the other common tenant, who was his sister, and replied to with expression of a wish by her that the property be sold as soon as possible and a desire for information as to interest and taxes mentioned in the letter to the brother. She had also conferred with the brother prior to his sending a telegram assenting to the sale. A draft to the brother's order was returned and indorsed to her and she cashed it, being part of the price. After visiting the purchasers and conferring she agreed to an amicable suit to perfect the conveyance and title in the purchasers, but when suit was filed she answered repudiating the sale. Held, she had ratified it.—Stuart v. Mattern, 141 Mich. 686.

¶ 411. In an action by a railroad company to recover demurrage charges on a shipment of sugar, where defendant pleaded in set-off damages due to breach of an agreement to rework the sugar after damage by a tornado while the sugar was in transit, which agreement was made by plaintiff's claim agent without authority, the fact that after plaintiff was advised of the agreement it delivered the sugar to defendant to be reworked according to the agreement held to warrant the jury in finding a ratification of the agreement, plaintiff's act and silence thereafter warranting an inference of acquiescence on its part.—Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co. v. Owosso Sugar Co., 192 Mich. 533.

Instruction on ratification as harmless error, where original authority was clear, see Harmless Error.

¶ 412. Ratification by parol is a jury question where there is evidence tending to show it by inference to be drawn therefrom. —Palmer v. Seligman, 77 Mich. 305.

¶ 413. The question of the ratification by a defendant corporation of a contract made by its local agent is for the jury.—Van Vranken v. Union News Co., 78 Mich. 217.

¶ 414. In trover for goods bought by defendant from plaintiff's wife it was not error to refuse to charge that where friends or relatives undertake to sell a man's property in his absence very slight evidence is needed to prove ratification. The question is for the jury.—Hake v. Buell, 50 Mich. 89.

¶ 417. The court should have instructed the jury as to what amounts to the ratification of the unauthorized act of a stranger, in an action for the price of a car load of lumber; where, lumber was ordered in defendant's name without his knowledge; but he, upon receipt of the invoice and of various letters and telegrams from the seller, failed to make any disclaimer, and instead, upon notification by the carrier's agent of the arrival of such car, turned the car together with the correspondence over to the person for whose use the lumber was ordered.—Long-Bell Lumber Co. v. Nyman, 145 Mich. 477.

¶ 418. In an action for the purchase price of a new line of goods which defendant claimed that his clerk had no authority to purchase in his absence, the plaintiff claiming that the order was unconditional and that defendant ratified the act of his agent because of his constructive notice of the sale through correspondence of his clerk with plaintiff, held, that an instruction on ratification of the act of the agent by constructive notice of the transaction was erroneous where there was evidence that the agent in the correspondence claimed that the order was on consignment.—Acorn Refining Co. v. Knowlson, 188 Mich. 123.

D. MANNER OF ACT OR WRITING TO BIND PRINCIPAL.

§ 70. In general; name or signature used.

Necessity that act purport to be for principal, see also ante ¶ 109.

Necessity that notice to agent be in connection with agency, see post § 72.

Liability of agent on contract ineffectual to bind principal, see post § 81.

Duty of agent to disclose agency if he would escape personal liability, see post § 86.

The general rule that an agent executing an instrument for and on behalf of the principal must do so in such manner and by such signature as to show an intention to bind the principal or purport to be his act done by an agent, is treated in Execution of Instruments, II.

¶ 419. It makes no difference whether an agent, in contracting for the sale of personalty, used his own name or that of his principal, so long as the bargain was carried out with the latter's consent and approval.—Stansell v. Leavitt, 51 Mich. 536.

¶ 420. Where an alleged liability is based on papers, and there is no attempt to show that they were executed by the person against whom it is asserted, there can be no recovery against him on a theory of agency, the dealings having all been had with another and on the latter's credit.—Sullivan v. Ross, 39 Mich. 511.

E. NOTICE OR KNOWLEDGE THROUGH AGENT.

Principal's knowledge as affecting agent, see post ¶ 482.

Notice or inquiry by other person of limits of authority, see ante §§ 23-25.

Ratification as including knowledge had by agent, see ante ¶ 348.

Notice to attorney as notice to client, see Attorneys and Counselors, II, C.

Notice to insurer through its agents, see also Insurance.

Notice to corporation through officers, agents or members, see Corporations, XVII, E.

Authority of corporation agent to be served for corporation, see Process; Notices.

Right of principal to avail of fraudulent representations made to agent in line of duty, though not communicated, see Fraud and Deceit, I; Sales, VIII, A.

Husband's knowledge imputable to wife, see Husband and Wife, IV, B.

¶ 421. Notice to an agent is notice to his principal.—Baker v. Pierson, 5 Mich. 456; Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202; Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109.

¶ 422. A principal is chargeable with such facts as are known to his agent.—Macomb v. Wilkinson, 83 Mich. 486; Dailey v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 102 Mich. 289; Loveland v. Bump, 198 Mich. 564.

¶ 423. Notice to one's agent or to those who conduct one's business for him is actual notice to him.—Baker v. Pierson, 5 Mich. 456.

¶ 423b. Notice to the foreman of a mill that sparks from its chimney are endangering adjacent property is, in the owner's absence, equivalent to notice to the owner, and evidence of it is admissible in an action for damages caused by a fire starting in that way, inasmuch as said notice may tend to hold the owner to a somewhat stricter measure of diligence.—Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181.

¶ 423c. Notice of defects in merchandise may properly be given to the agent or broker through whom the sale has been made.—Henkel v. Welsh, 41 Mich. 664.

¶ 423d. Where an interpreter is employed in negotiating a sale, the party furnishing such interpreter is bound by the statements made to him, and it need not be shown that such statements were communicated by the interpreter to such party.—Highstone v. Burdette, 61 Mich. 54.

¶ 423e. Notice to the yard-master of a railroad company that certain frogs are unblocked, or that a switch-engine is defective, is notice to the company.—Ashman v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 90 Mich. 567; Lyttle v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 84 Mich. 289.

¶ 424. The knowledge of agents within the scope of their agency is the knowledge of the principal.—McDonald v. Young, 198 Mich. 620.

¶ 425. A person whose agents and representatives are competent, and well-informed as to all matters affecting their principal's interests, cannot well plead want of notice of anything which his agents know.—Morgan v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 57 Mich. 430.

§ 72. Relation of knowledge or notice to scope of agency.

¶ 426. The doctrine that notice to the agent is notice to the principal is based on the view that the agent represents the principal in the particular transaction and the latter is bound by the knowledge, which the agent then has.—Advertiser & Tribune Co. v. City of Detroit, 43 Mich. 116.

¶ 427. The knowledge of an agent who has sufficient authority to institute an action based upon it charges his principal with notice of all the facts under which he acts.—Campau v. Konan, 39 Mich. 362.

¶ 428. The general rule that notice to an agent is notice to his principal does not apply where the agent's relation to the subject-matter renders it certain that he will not disclose his knowledge to his principal.—Miller v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co., 101 Mich. 49.

¶ 429. Notice to a selling agent who negotiated an order for fruit, that it was unsatisfactory and would not be accepted unless the price was abated, is sufficient to bind the seller, his principal.—Hitchcock v. Griffin & Skelley Co., 99 Mich. 447.

¶ 430. Where one of several joint vendors is manager of the business and makes all the bargains, he must be presumed to act for all where there is a joint interest and joint duty; and notice to him in proceedings arising out of a breach of warranty caused by the existence of a lien upon the property sold is notice to the rest, unless in cases where the original lien has been extinguished and the existing lien springs from a contract with the buyer.—De Witt v. Prescott, 51 Mich. 298.

¶ 431. Notice to the foreman of a mill, in the absence of the owner, that the sparks from the chimney are endangering adjacent property is equivalent to notice to the owner.—Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181.

¶ 432. Where the traveling salesman of a corporation has power to make a contract in its name, take payments thereon, receive a bond for its fulfillment and settle with the other party to the contract, his agency is sufficiently established to charge the corporation with notice of what was said and done in respect to liability on the bond at the time of the settlement.—Columbus Sewer Pipe Co. v. Ganser, 58 Mich. 385.

¶ 433. Where an attorney-at-law having funds to invest for a client bought for him a note, knowing that part of its consideration consisted of attorney's fees added to the amount claimed to be due on a statutory foreclosure, his client was charged with knowledge of the facts.—Macomb v. Wilkinson, 88 Mich. 486.

¶ 434. A state agent of an insurance company representing it in making advances for the company to an agent who has given bond to pay over to the company what he may owe on account of such advances, has authority to receive for it from sureties on the bond notice that the agent had quit his relationship and that advances thereafter made would not be received upon the credit of the bond but upon the agent's personal credit.—Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 105 Mich. 353.

¶ 435. The rule that knowledge of the agent is knowledge of the principal applies when the agent makes a loan, and takes notes as collateral security therefor, for his principal, and the latter subsequently claims to be a bona fide holder of such notes.—Loveland v. Bump, 198 Mich. 564.

¶ 436. Knowledge on the part of the servants having charge of a mule which kicked and killed another employee, of its vicious propensities, held imputable to their employer.—Robbins v. Magoon & Kimball Co., 186 Mich. 672.

¶ 437. The fact that a servant had heard others state that a mule which kicked and killed another employee, was a kicker, may be shown in an action against the employer, in order to impute to him the knowledge of the hearer.—Robbins v. Magoon & Kimball Co., 186 Mich. 672.

Facts amounting to notice of particular title, claim or incumbrance, see Notice and Record of Title.

¶ 438. Where the purchase of a tract of land was negotiated by an agent, and where an adverse holding of the land was treated as diminishing the vendor's interest, the agent's knowledge of the adverse possession will be the purchaser's, and if the agent omits to inquire of the party in possession as to his title, the purchaser will not be regarded as a bona fide one without notice.—Russell v. Sweezey, 22 Mich. 235.

¶ 439. Notice to an agent of the condition of the title to land which he buys for his principal is notice also to the principal, whatever may be the actual knowledge of the latter.—Taylor v. Young, 56 Mich. 285.

¶ 440. Where the agent of a landowner from whom one wished to obtain a right of flowage had inspected the premises to see how much of them would be under water under the circumstances set forth, it was held that the principal must be charged with the knowledge of the agent, and could not claim to have been deceived by representations of the grantee as to the area,—Sanford v. Nuyman, 23 Mich. 326.

¶ 441. Where a debtor, owning lands incumbered by mortgages, gave his creditor a deed of the lands on a parol understanding that the creditor was to dispose of them for the payment of the mortgages and of his debt, and account to the debtor for the balance, and the creditor, instead of paying off the mortgages, bought them as agent for, and in the name of, a third person, who claimed not to be aware of this understanding, held, that the latter was chargeable with notice of the facts of which his agent was cognizant, and took the land subject to the debtor's equities, and could not cut off those equities by selling the land mortgaged, under the power of sale, and bidding it in himself.—Emerson v. Atwater, 7 Mich. 12.

¶ 442. Where one takes a mortgage which another has caused to be executed directly to him he must adopt the acts of that other as his agent in procuring it and be held chargeable with notice of all the facts of the transaction known to the other. He can have no greater rights under the mortgage than if he had himself procured it of the mortgagor by the same means used by the other.—Terry v. Tuttle, 24 Mich. 206.

¶ 443. The fact that the agent of the mortgagee was in the city where the mortgaged property was located once or twice a year, after a purchaser from the mortgagor had gone into possession of part of the mortgaged premises, is not such notice to the mortgagee as would put a prudent man upon inquiry.—Balen v. Lewis, 130 Mich. 567.

§ 74. Notice acquired in other agency, transaction or capacity.

¶ 444. The principal is bound only by such notice or knowledge as comes to the agent while he is agent.—Bonewell v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 167 Mich. 274.

¶ 445. Where the same person is acting in the double relation of agent for both parties, his knowledge that his power to incur indebtedness or make expenditures for one of his principals is limited to such as are incurred and made with the consent of those who with himself constitute such principal, cannot be regarded as affecting the other principal who acts in entire good faith in furnishing supplies of which the former actually gets the benefit, and which the former has repeatedly permitted to be furnished without objection.—Michigan Slate Co. v. Iron Range & H. B. R. Co., 101 Mich. 14.

¶ 446. Notice to an agent of a particular fact in a certain transaction does not affect his principal with notice of the same fact in a subsequent transaction, where the agent at the time of the latter transaction does not remember the previous notice, and, in view of the circumstances, has no reason to suppose that the same inference is to be drawn from the same fact.—Great Western Ry. Co. of Canada v. Wheeler, 20 Mich. 419.

¶ 447. Where there had been a transfer of the property of a railroad company sued for personal injuries but the employees of the old company had continued in the service of the new owner, the declaration of the master mechanic as to notice of incompetency of an employee and fellow servant of one injured could not be considered as evidence of the incompetency in itself; but if the incompetency were otherwise shown, notice to him received before the transfer of the property would continue to be notice to the subsequent owner and master and would bind it.—McClure v. Detroit Southern R. Co., 146 Mich. 457.

¶ 449. Where defendant knew that an agent was acting in antagonism to plaintiff and that a notice to the agent would not be communicated to plaintiff, notice to the agent was not notice to the principal.—Brown v. Harris, 139 Mich. 372.

F. UNDISCLOSED PRINCIPAL'S RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

Estoppel to claim relation of principal, see ante § 19.

Rights and liabilities of agent, see post §§ 82, 86.

Wife as undisclosed principal of husband, see Husband and Wife, IV, B.

¶ 450. An undisclosed principal who is the only person entitled may sue upon a sale made by his agent.—Jenness v. Shaw, 35 Mich. 20.

¶ 451. A principal's right to sue upon a contract made by his agent is established if the agent notifies the other party that he must account to the principal; such a notification operates as an equitable assignment of the agent's interest in the contract.—Dustin v. Radford, 57 Mich. 163.

¶ 452. Where a creditor accepts money from his debtor to apply upon the purchase price of cattle, and thereafter refuses to deliver the cattle, and attempts to apply the amount upon the prior indebtedness, a third party, whose agent the debtor was in making the purchase, and who furnished the money therefor, is entitled, upon such refusal, to recover the amount so paid, even though the creditor had no notice that the money belonged to such third party.—Bearce v. Fahrnow, 109 Mich. 315.

¶ 453. Acts of an agent on behalf of his undisclosed principal, in purchasing boats in the agent's own name are binding upon the principal, but the rule is not of much importance where the seller of the boats knew of the furnishing of the money for that purpose by the principal.—Murphy v. Charlton, 118 Mich. 141.

¶ 454. When a husband, acting for his wife, telegraphed to a Nevada lodge that he guaranteed payment of the undertaker's charges in attending the dead body of his father-in-law, and, upon learning that a Michigan lodge had telegraphed a similar guaranty, told members of that lodge that the charges would be paid, he thereby ratified the unauthorized act of the Michigan lodge, and is liable to the undertaker as the undisclosed principal for whom both the Michigan and Nevada lodges acted.—Hillman v. Hulett, 149 Mich. 289. (Blair, Montgomery and Hooker, JJ., dissenting.)

G. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST THIRD PERSONS.

§ 77. Right to sue or defend.

Right of agent to sue in own name, see post § 89.

Right to recover from third person where agent acted without authority, see ante II, B.

Judgment against agent as binding principal, and vice versa, see Former Adjudication, V.

Right of undisclosed principal to sue or claim benefit, see ante § 76.

¶ 455. A principal's right to sue upon a contract made by his agent is established if the agent notifies the other party that he must account to the principal; such a notification operates as an equitable assignment of the agent's interest in the contract.—Dustin v. Radford, 57 Mich. 163.

[Note. Relatively few procedural questions arise involving agency except the issues of existence of the agency, its duration or termination, the authority or ratification, and these have already been treated in earlier parts of the topic. As they do not always arise in actions either "by" or "against" third persons, but sometimes collaterally, it has been deemed better to collect the decisions in one place which belong to either of these issues. See cross references following.]

Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence as to existence of the agency generally, see ante §§ 9, 10.

Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence as to the authority of the agent, see ante §§ 39-41.

Evidence of termination or revocation, see ante § 17.

Questions for jury and instructions as to fact of agency see ante § 11.

Jury questions and instructions as to authority, see ante §§ 42, 43.

Directing verdict on ground of estoppel to question agency, see ante ¶ 100.

Burden of proof, presumptions, evidence, jury questions, and instructions on ratification, see ante §§ 66-69.

Separate action against agent for tort, see post ¶ 486.

The action by or against the third person will necessarily be governed by the procedural law applicable to that kind of cause which is pleaded. Accordingly see topics such as Assumpsit; Contracts; Conversion; Fraud; Sales; Trespass; and see also topics treating of the specific matters or incidents of actions, e. g., Evidence; Pleading; Instructions; Trial; etc.

General law of procedure and evidence, see Evidence; Pleading; Parties; Trial; and like topics.

General rule that verdict and judgment must be for principal if agent be found not guilty. see Judgments, II, C; Verdicts, III.

Sufficiency of general issue to present question of authority, see Assumpsit; Pleading, IX.

Proof of account stated by agent, see Account Stated, ¶ 34.

Proper agents to serve for corporation, see Process.

¶ 456. A. wrote to B.: "I have on hand a lot of furs which I am anxious to sell." B. replied: "I have this day written to C., who is my agent, to make you a visit for the purpose of purchasing your furs, and I hope that you and he will be able to make a bargain for a lot of furs." C. afterwards called on A. and bought the furs, paying part cash and giving a note for the rest in B.'s name. Held, that B. was liable to A. for the unpaid sum as for goods sold and delivered, counts on the note being nolled.—Sorrell v. Brewster, 1 Mich. 378.

¶ 457. Where an agent enters into written contract for his principal in his own name, the principal must enforce it in the name of the nominal contracting party.—Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 Mich. 489.

¶ 458. A customer of plaintiffs, one Heusel, executed a note filled out by defendant bank and payable to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs' collecting agent, one Donaldson, went to the customer's desk and indorsed the note. Defendant's cashier let Donaldson have the money on the note. The cashier testified that he supposed he was making the loan to Mr. Heusel and not a discount to the agent, but that he thought Donaldson, who indorsed the note, was one of the plaintiffs. Held, in a suit for conversion of the note based on the unauthorized indorsement that the evidence was conflicting and the trial court erred in directing a verdict for defendant.—Lonier v. Ann Arbor Sav. Bank, 162 Mich. 541.

¶ 459. In an action against an agent and his alleged principal for damages resulting from the sale of corporate stock, the purchase of which was alleged to have been induced under false representations, made by the agent if at all, an instruction that it is possible to find one of the defendants guilty and the other not guilty held to be erroneous on judgment against the principal alone.—Bartholomew v. Walsh, 101 Mich. 252.

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF AGENT AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

Rights and liabilities on given transaction outside of the questions involving the law of agency are treated in topics dealing with the particular transaction or liability urged. See such topics as Contracts; Negligence, etc.

Finding that agent was bound as finding of fact conclusive on appeal or error, see Appeal and Error, XII, E.

¶ 460. An agent does not become personally liable unless his principal is unknown, or there is no responsible principal, or the agent exceeds his powers, or becomes liable by an undertaking in his own name.—Preston v. Preston, 1 D. 292.

¶ 461. In an action to recover damages for defendant's failure to fulfil his agreement to insure plaintiff's dwelling house, defendant claimed that, in whatever he did, he acted as agent for a third person, who held a mortgage on the property. Held, that an instruction that, if the jury should find that defendant was acting as such agent, and that he disclosed that fact to plaintiff, the latter could not recover was sufficiently favorable to defendant.—Banks v. Cramer, 109 Mich. 168.

Liability as dependent on sufficiency of execution in name of principal, see also Execution of Instruments, II.

¶ 462. Where a contract is made by an agent, and the principal is disclosed and the agent is known to be acting as such, the latter cannot be made personally liable unless he agreed to be so.—Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. ed. 1050.

Liability of corporate officer on contract made without authority, see Corporations, XVII, F.

¶ 463. Where an agent undertakes to contract on another's behalf and contracts in a manner that does not bind his principal, he will be personally responsible, as he is bound to know the exact extent of his authority.—Newberry v. Slafter, 98 Mich. 468.

§ 82. Contracts in agent's own name.

Notice to look to principal as equitable assignment to him, see ante ¶ 455.

Liability of cashier on contract in his name, see Banking, X.

¶ 464. Agents may bind themselves by their contracts, notwithstanding it be known to both parties that the contract is not for their benefit directly, but is for the benefit of another; and, having done so, they cannot evade their clearly-expressed liability under the contract by showing that they were agents.—Landyskowski v. Lark, 108 Mich. 500.

¶ 465. A written undertaking by the cashier of a national bank to save harmless one who should sign a replevin bond for customers of the bank renders him individually liable for such an undertaking, being ultra vires for the bank, and not clearly appearing upon its face to have been intended as the bank's undertaking.—Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200.

Profits made by dealing with principal's property, see post ¶ 503.

¶ 466. One who, as another's agent, has received payment on a demand beyond what is due, and has paid over the money before notice of the mistake, is not liable to an action by the debtor.—Granger v. Hathaway, 17 Mich. 500.

¶ 467. If an agent, to whom money is paid by a mortgagor after the foreclosure of the mortgage to apply upon the decree, makes prompt remittance to his principal, he cannot be held liable for his failure to make the proper application of the money.—Miller v. Sealey, 90 Mich. 218.

¶ 468. Where the agent of the vendor in an oral bargain for the sale of land has paid over the money to his principal, the vendee, seeking to repudiate the contract and suing to recover what he paid, cannot hold the agent liable, but must look to the principal if to any one.—Bailey v. Cornell, 66 Mich. 107.

¶ 469. A solicitor of life insurance who gives an agent's receipt for the first premium upon a proposed policy, which recites that, if the risk is not accepted, the sum collected shall be returned, incurs no personal liability to the applicant as to the amount advanced, where the latter deals with him merely as agent for a disclosed principal, although the policy issued is not such as the contract calls for.—Bleau v. Wright, 110 Mich. 183.

Jury question as to individual contract or one for principal, see ante ¶ 458.

Rights of assignee against agent holding under repudiated prior assignment, see Assignments, III, IV.

¶ 470. An agent for the exchange of property, who fraudulently retains the goods received in exchange, and turns over to his principal other like goods of an inferior quality, the principal in no way acquiescing therein, cannot maintain replevin against one who levies upon the goods retained by him under an execution against the principal, although the latter has failed to tender back the goods which he has received.—Carroll v. McKale, 111 Mich. 348.

§ 85. Torts in course of agency.

Liability of depositary of escrow for violating conditions for delivery, see Escrows.

Defense of principal's property as justification of assault on intruder, see Assault and Battery, II.

¶ 471. An agent's liability for causing an illegal arrest does not depend on his instructions from his principal.—Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300.

¶ 472. An agent is not exempt from liability for a fraud knowingly committed on behalf of a principal, even though the agent receives no personal benefit from the fraud, and the principal is at the bottom of it.—Weber v. Weber, 47 Mich. 569.

¶ 473. One who, while erecting for his wife a house upon her lot, permits a sidewalk taken up by one of his men to remain torn up, in consequence whereof a person is injured, is liable to such person as for an act of misfeasance.—Ellis v. McNaughton, 76 Mich. 237.

¶ 474. A contractor or laborer who, acting under a drain commissioner, constructs a tunnel as a public drain, and who has no control over its maintenance, is not liable for damages to a distant landowner's crops caused by a subsequent flow of water therefrom; such damages, if any, not being the immediate result of such work, but being caused by the subsequent maintenance of the tunnel.—Chapel v. Smith, 80 Mich. 100.

¶ 475. An agent in charge of a building is bound to inspect the condition of its windows to avoid possible injury to persons passing on a public street, through the falling of glass.—Bannigan v. Woodbury, 166 Mich. 491.

¶ 476. An action will lie against an agent for a fraud knowingly committed in behalf of his principal, even though the agent received no personal benefit from the fraud.—Haener v. McKenzie, 188 Mich. 27.

Rights and liabilities of undisclosed principal, see ante II, F.

¶ 477. The duty rests upon an agent, if he would avoid personal liability, to disclose his agency, and not upon others to discover it, and it is not enough that the other party has means of ascertaining the name of the principal, and the agent must either bring to him actual knowledge or that which to a reasonable man is equivalent to knowledge, or he will be bound.—Harmon v. Parker, 193 Mich. 542.

¶ 478. One who contracts as a principal cannot escape liability after suit is brought by proving that he was acting as agent.—McGovern v. Bennett, 146 Mich. 558.

¶ 479. The defendant permitted his brother to order liquors of the plaintiff and accepted the goods and sold them from his brother's saloon. Defendant held himself out to the plaintiff and the public as the owner of the saloon. Held, he was liable for the purchase price of the liquors, and could not set up the fact that he was only an agent of his brother.—Rochester Distilling Co. v. Bostrum, 158 Mich. 543.

¶ 480. Where, for the benefit of a company of which he is a member, A. agrees to pay B. if he will continue certain work, A. is liable to B. if he did not disclose his agency.—Mitchell v. Beck, 88 Mich. 342.

¶ 481. An agent is liable for money paid to him without consideration and by him paid over to his principal if the party dealing with him had no notice of the agency.—Smith v. Kelly, 43 Mich. 390.

¶ 484. A servant, agent or attorney cannot enforce in his own name the rights of his principal or master.—People ex rel. McBride v. Kent County Sup'rs, 38 Mich. 421.

¶ 485. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10421, providing that assumpsit lies to recover damages for injuries in all cases where a person is injured by fraudulent representations or conduct, assumpsit will lie to recover damages for deceit against an agent who is merely the mouthpiece of his principal.—Hallett v. Gordon, 128 Mich. 364.

¶ 486. An agent, when liable for a fraud committed in a principal's behalf, may as well be sued separately as any joint wrong-doer sued alone in an action of tort.—Weber v. Weber, 47 Mich. 569.

¶ 488. An agent cannot bind two parties having opposing interests in the same transactions, nor can he be at the same time a party and the agent of the opposite party, unless both parties know of the dual relation and assent to it.—Dull v. Royal Ins. Co., 159 Mich. 671.

¶ 489. An agent appointed to let a contract for his principal must secure the best terms he can, and if, in letting it, he surreptitiously takes an interest in it himself, the transaction is void. Actual fraud in the agent or injury to the principal is immaterial.—Flint & P. M. Ry. Co. v. Dewey, 14 Mich. 477.

¶ 490. An agent who owes his principal the duty of obtaining the best obtainable price cannot take a contract to which he himself is secretly a party.—Green v. Knoch, 92 Mich. 26.

¶ 491. An agent of a corporation who had done his full duty in making a purchase of certain of its stock at the lowest possible price, could not be required to deliver to the corporation certain other shares of its stock transferred to him by the seller in the transaction in which he acted as agent, subsequent to the completion of the transaction. —Lamb Knit-Goods Co. v. Lamb, 119 Mich. 568.

¶ 492. Where an agent pays back taxes on land at the direction of his principal, and then without her knowledge takes a tax deed for the same in his own name, he commits a fraud upon her.—Backus v. Cowley, 162 Mich. 585.

¶ 494. One acting as agent for the owner of property has no right to make himself the agent of others for the purchase of the property, nor to take any advantage of the confidence his position inspires to obtain the title himself.—Moore v. Mandelbaum, 8 Mich. 433.

¶ 495. An agent to sell cannot make a valid purchase from his principal without fully and fairly disclosing all the propositions he has received, and all the facts and circumstances within his knowledge in any way calculated to enable the principal to judge of the propriety of the sale.—Moore v. Mandlebaum, 8 Mich. 433.

¶ 496. A sale made by an agent to himself is void in law.—Clute v. Barron, 2 Mich. 192.

¶ 497. An agent, whether of the public or of individuals, who is authorized to sell property for the best price that can be obtained for it cannot become the purchaser, either in his own name or that of another, whether the sale be public or private.—Ingerson v. Starkweather, W. 346; Clute v. Barron, 2 Mich. 192; Ames v. Port Huron Log Driving & Booming Co., 11 Mich. 139; and see Beaubien v. Poupard, H. 206; Walton v. Torrey, H. 259.

¶ 499. An agent for the sale of real estate cannot purchase such realty upon his own behalf at foreclosure sale to the exclusion of his principal, as his duties are incompatible with such act; and if he does purchase he becomes a trustee for the principal when he acquires title.—Kimball v. Ranney, 122 Mich. 160.

¶ 500. An agent may be a purchaser from his principal so long as he acts in good faith and his principal is informed of the situation.—Walsh v. Goulden, 130 Mich. 531.

¶ 501. The application of the rule that an agent for the sale of property cannot purchase such property upon his own behalf to the exclusion of his principal, was not affected by the fact that the agent some 10 or 12 days before a foreclosure sale of the property notified his principal that he would purchase for his own benefit.—Kimball v. Ranney, 122 Mich. 160.

price does not justify the agent in sending a third person to buy it, and then buying it of the third person at an advance, though within the prescribed limit.—Armstrong v. Elliott, 29 Mich. 485.

¶ 503. Plaintiff, a resident of Ohio, as one of the heirs of her mother, of whose estate defendant was administrator, was the owner of an undivided fifth interest in 80 acres of land which she agreed to sell for $450 to another heir upon the advice of the defendant, and to whom the plaintiff forwarded a deed in which the consideration was fixed at $450, with the name of the grantee in blank. The proposed purchaser did not take the deed and defendant thereupon inserted his wife's name as the grantee without her knowledge, and forwarded the $450 to the plaintiff. A few weeks later defendant sold the land to the original proposed grantee for $600. In an action to recover the difference in price, held, that the defendant was acting as the agent of plaintiff, and that the money received from the purchaser belonged to plaintiff.—McNutt v. Dix, 83 Mich. 328.

¶ 504. An attorney in fact has not, by reason of his relation, authority to assign his principal's mortgage to himself.—Post v. Springsted, 49 Mich. 90.

¶ 505. An agent cannot make a valid purchase from his principal without fully and fairly disclosing all the facts and circumstances within his knowledge in any way calculated to enable the principal to judge of the propriety of the sale.—Beedle v. Crane, 91 Mich. 429.

¶ 506. A principal whose real estate agent purchased on his own behalf the principal's property at foreclosure sale, was not estopped from seeking relief in equity, by his act in obtaining an order for a resale and then upon finding that he could not comply with the conditions or that it would not pay him to do so, accepting the surplus of the purchase price and then waiting three or four years before instituting proceedings; where the agent had refused a tender of the amount received, with an added sum, and where the principal stood ready to account for the amount received.—Kimball v. Ranney, 122 Mich. 160.

¶ 507. The rule that an agent may not bind his principal by a purchase from himself without the principal's assent, such contracts being void or at least voidable, had no application in an action by a principal to recover the amount received by its agent for certain machinery which the principal supposed belonged to a third party, where the principal kept the machinery and apparently found it acceptable.—Antiseptic Fibre Package Co. v. Klein, 119 Mich. 225.

¶ 508. A contract creating an exclusive agency for the sale of land, to be performed within one year need not be in writing, but so far as its terms are in writing and accepted and acted upon by the parties, the writing controls.—Axe v. Tolbert, 179 Mich. 556.

¶ 509. Where one becomes sole agent to sell specific articles that he obtains only by purchase, the agency covers only the exclusive privilege of handling the goods in the territory allotted to him, and does not prevent an order for the articles being a sale to the agent.—Bill Pub. Co. v. Durgin, 101 Mich. 458.

¶ 511. A written contract between a manufacturer and its foreign agent contemplates that such agent should be the exclusive foreign representative of the principal, and that it should make its sales through him, where such contract provides, among other things, that such principal do no advertising in any European papers without including the name and address of such agent as their sole European agent, and that the principal will turn all inquiries from such territory over to such agent and will not knowingly supply goods to any other person or persons in such territory.—Stone v. Fox Machine Co., 145 Mich. 689.

¶ 512. A contract appointing a selling agent and providing that the manufacturer shall not advertise in any European papers without including the name and address of such agent as sole European agent, is to be construed to mean papers printed and published in Europe, and not American papers printed in this country.—Stone v. Fox Machine Co., 145 Mich. 689.

¶ 513. An agent for the sale of stock may recover commissions and for breach of a written agreement, notwithstanding the agreement contains a provision that his father is to subscribe for ten shares of stock at a meeting to be held in the future, but not to be bound for such subscription except in so far as the agent's commissions will cover the purchase price of the stock, there being nothing in the agreement to show that the father was to keep the understanding secret on making the subscription and no evidence that he ever did misrepresent his position in regard to the subscription.—Zabel v. New State Tel. Co., 127 Mich. 402.

¶ 514. The selling of baskets at a less price than agreed upon by the parties to the contract in question, and thereby inducing customers of defendants who retailed their own goods, to purchase of plaintiff, was a violation of the contract, justifying the dismissal of plaintiff, who sold the article on commission.—Dodge v. Reynolds, 135 Mich. 692.

¶ 515. An agreement by an agent to stand as security for all loss the principal might sustain on loans made by the agent, by reason of insufficient security or defect of title, does not apply to prior loans.—Perkins v. Hershey, 77 Mich. 504.

¶ 516. Where one who is agent for the sale of another's property, and has agreed not to sell for credit except to those who are good and responsible, and to take no paper but good, first-class, collectible paper, and such as he is willing to guaranty, takes paper he knows is worthless, and turns it over to his employer, who is ignorant of its character, the agent makes himself liable as guarantor of the paper, and is not entitled to have it returned to him as a condition precedent to judgment against him on such guaranty.—Clark v. Roberts, 26 Mich. 506.

See also Brokers.

Duration and termination of the relation, see ante I, B.

Necessity of paying compensation before revoking agency coupled with interest, see also ante ¶ 76.

Contracts with servants, see Master and Servant, II.

¶ 517. A contract of agency providing that it shall remain in force as long as the agent continues active, and produces results, but reserving to the principal the right to abrogate it, if dissatisfied with results, or with the manner of handling the business, indicates some period of duration for its continuance, which is to be determined by reading the provision with the remainder of the contract, with reference to what is desired and sought to be accomplished thereby.—Garlock v. Motz Tire & Rubber Co., 192 Mich. 665.

¶ 518. A contract of agency providing no fixed time for its duration, but providing that it shall remain in force as long as the agent continues active and produces results, and reserving to the principal the right to abrogate it, if dissatisfied with results, or with the manner of handling the business, held properly construed as warranting the principal in abrogating the agreement and in establishing a branch house in the territory allotted to the agent, and in refusing to furnish the agent more of its goods, whenever the principal became satisfied that such was the better method of conducting its business in that territory.—Garlock v. Motz Tire & Rubber Co., 192 Mich. 665.

¶ 519. The mere fact that a contract of agency does not provide for a definite period of duration is not controlling if some period is necessarily implied, especially if an independent consideration, other than a promise, moves to the promisor, or if it is terminable on expressed conditions.—Garlock v. Motz Tire & Rubber Co., 192 Mich. 665.

¶ 520. A contract leaving an agent free to terminate it at will is to be construed as leaving the principal free to discharge the agent at will, and generally without liability, although the agent has commenced performance.—Garlock v. Motz Tire & Rubber Co., 192 Mich. 665.

¶ 522. An employment of an agent for the sale of personal property upon a commission basis can be revoked, and the revocation cannot be complained of, unless colorable and unfair, and unless the new bargain was such as came within the same substantial terms which would have entitled to compensation under the old; and in such case the remedy would not be on a quantum meruit for services, whatever it might be as to the expenditures made in the service.—Hamilton v. Frothingham, 59 Mich. 253.

¶ 523. Defendant automobile company contracted with plaintiff for the latter to act as its agent in maintaining a sales garage. The contract provided that plaintiff should conduct the business to the satisfaction of the defendant, and that the defendant should give the plaintiff sixty days' notice to correct any error or mistake in carrying out the contract. Held, the defendant could not arbitrarily cancel the contract, but, during the sixty days' period after the giving of notice, was obliged in good faith to reserve judgment, remain in a receptive mood, and co-operate with complainant for the purpose of removing the causes of dissatisfaction and continuing the contract.—Isbell v. Anderson Carriage Co., 170 Mich. 304.

§ 96. Liability for loss, failure or neglect.

Effect of breach of instructions to make agent a debtor, see ante § 14.
Evidence, jury questions, and instructions, see post § 106.
Liability of collecting banks, see Banking, VI.

¶ 524. Where a principal places money in the hands of an agent to pay a debt when ordered, if the agent refuses to obey such orders he becomes liable to the principal, irrespective of whether the instructions are violated through mistake or design.—Cutter v. Powers, 200 Mich. 375.

¶ 525. Where property has been left with another to sell, the latter is not liable for failure to collect payment, unless guilty of negligence, bad faith or dishonesty.—Fick v. Runnels, 48 Mich. 302.

¶ 526. An agent who had sold certain goods on time and received them back as unsatisfactory could not be charged by his principal with a share of their value after the latter had caused the agent to send them back to him and had kept them.—Filer v. Jenks, 38 Mich. 585.

¶ 527. Where, after a foreclosure decree has been taken, the mortgagor makes a payment to the party who negotiated the loan, but who is not the agent of the mortgagee, which he at once forwards to the mortgagee, and notifies the solicitors for both parties, he is not guilty of such negligence as makes him liable to the mortgagor for the money on the failure of the mortgagee and his solicitors to make such application.—Miller v. Seeley, 90 Mich. 218.

¶ 528. A creditor may recover from a collection agency for the amount of a claim forwarded to the collection agency, where judgment was obtained on the claim; execution levied on real estate, and the real estate bid in for the creditor on the advice of the collection agency and subsequently the title was cut off by a mortgage foreclosure sale of the real estate to the defendant collection agency.—National Wall Paper Co. v. Ames, 129 Mich. 526.

¶ 529. Negligence of a member of a committee appointed to audit accounts of a secretary of a building and loan association, cannot be inferred, although such secretary embezzled money from the association, where the evidence shows that the committee examined quarterly reports of the secretary and checked books, receipts and disbursements submitted by the secretary, it appearing that the embezzlement was effected by the secretary keeping a private set of books. In such case there was no lack of ordinary care in examining the books and papers.—Alpena Loan & Building Ass'n v. Denison, 121 Mich. 159.

¶ 530. An agreement by which the negotiator of a loan is to receive one per cent a year from the mortgagee for guaranteeing the payment of interest indicates nothing more than a personal engagement to pay the one per cent, and gives him no interest in the mortgage.—Miller v. Seeley, 90 Mich. 218.

¶ 532. Where the main purpose of a contract was for the establishment of a selling agency of automobiles, and the sale and delivery of machines to the agency so established was incidental to this main purpose, after the principal had become entitled to abandon the contract of the agency, it was also entitled to cancel any orders for automobiles.—Wheaton v. Cadillac Automobile Co., 142 Mich. 21.

B. ACCOUNTING, COMPENSATION, REIMBURSEMENT AND LIEN.

Embezzlement by agent, see Crimes, II; Indictment; and see Comp. L. 1915, § 15317.

¶ 533. One who has long acted as another's agent and financial adviser is presumed to know the amounts he has received from and paid out for his principal, and cannot compel an accounting on the ground that he has paid certain debts and become an indorser; the account is not mutual.—Nash v. Burchard, 87 Mich. 85.

¶ 534. Where an employee is required to keep a true and accurate account of all moneys received by him, and to pay them over to his employer, a fiduciary relation exists, and the employer may proceed in equity for an accounting, and may pursue the fund.—Warren v. Holbrook, 95 Mich. 185.

¶ 535. While an employee who in addition to a salary is to receive as compensation a certain percentage of the profits of the business has a remedy in equity to secure an accounting as to the profits, such remedy is not exclusive, as a court of law has full power under How. St., § 7386, to appoint auditors to state the account.—Stockman v. Michell, 109 Mich. 348.

¶ 537. A principal is not guilty of laches who, after unsuccessful efforts to effect a redemption from foreclosure sale, at which his real estate agent purchased on his own behalf, delays three or four years before instituting proceedings to compel an accounting by such agent, where the latter has at all times denied the claims of his principal.—Kimball v. Ranney, 122 Mich. 160.

¶ 538. Upon a bill for an accounting against an employee charged with embezzlement the evidence was held sufficient to warrant a decree for money found in defendant's possession, where it clearly appeared that he took some money and some was found in his house, which he did not account for, that his pay was insufficient to support his family, his silence being taken as a circumstance against him.—Warren v. Holbrook, 95 Mich. 185.

See also Master and Servant, II.
Presumption and burden to show custom, see post ¶ 563.
Reception of services or benefit thereof as consideration for obligation by opposite party to compensate, see Contracts, V, A.

¶ 539. Where an agent is employed at a fixed salary or rate, and the principal imposes upon him, or he performs additional duties, with enlarged powers, no extra compensation can be recovered unless there is an agreement to such effect or some custom supporting such recovery.—Muir v. Kalamazoo Corset Co., 155 Mich. 441.

¶ 540. Expressions of confidence in an employee, based on his own reports, may be shown in an action by him upon his contract of employment, but they do not estop the employer from showing his default, or explaining what he did or neglected.—Alberts v. Stearns, 50 Mich. 349.

¶ 542. An agent to sell may not become the agent of the purchaser, or vice versa, so as to be entitled to commission from both unless both buyer and seller with full knowledge consent that the agent shall act for both and receive compensation from both.—Friar v. Smith, 120 Mich. 411.

¶ 543. An agent for the sale of typewriters, who, under his contract, was to receive the benefit of all sales made in a given state, is not entitled to commissions on the sale of a machine by the maker to a purchaser in another state, merely because it is shipped by the purchaser to its branch office within the agent's territory.—Wyckoff, Seamans & Benedict v. Bishop, 115 Mich. 414.

¶ 544. Where by agreement one is to be paid a certain commission on sales, and is to have whatever he can get above list prices, the fact that he is subsequently allowed to sell for less than list prices does not entitle him to claim all he receives in excess of the reduced prices.—Rosenfield v. Fortier, 94 Mich. 29.

¶ 545. By accepting and filling orders received from one's salesman which are accompanied by a claim for excessive commissions, one is not estopped from subsequently disputing such claim.—Rosenfield v. Fortier, 94 Mich. 29.

¶ 546. Where a contract employing a sales agent provides for the payment of a salary and commission on sales, but also provides that a certain minimum amount of business shall be done to constitute a fulfillment of the contract, the sales agent can become entitled to neither the salary nor the commission until the minimum amount has been sold under the contract.—Haas v. Malto-Grapo Co., 148 Mich. 358.

¶ 547. Plaintiff, acting under an agency contract, who sold machinery and who with the advice and consent of his principal accepted in part payment second-hand machinery at a fixed value, and the remainder of the price evidenced by promissory notes secured by chattel mortgage which were never paid, and the second-hand machinery was again sold for other machinery, cash and securities, is entitled to his commission on the exchanged machinery as upon a sale for cash without waiting until his principal has realised upon the securities which it accepted or until the second lot of machinery taken in the second exchange is sold.—Bills v. A. W. Stevens Co., 146 Mich. 515.

¶ 548. In an action by a third person for commissions in assisting a salesman in making sales an issue is raised for the jury by testimony of the salesman that his employer authorized him to pay commissions, and that in some of the sales the employer knew of the agreed commission before the sale was completed, and denial of this testimony by the employer.—Flattery v. James Cunningham, Son & Co., 125 Mich. 467.

¶ 549. A contract between a member of a banking copartnership and another person whereby such person agreed to assist in procuring subscriptions of stock to a proposed state bank and to obtain such subscriptions before a stipulated time for a specified commission on the sale price on all stock sold, and providing that the agent should not be bound further than to procure the subscription in entirety before the time mentioned, construed as meaning that while the agent's active obligation to the enterprise bound him no further than obtaining subscribers, his compensation for services was contingent upon the stock being in fact sold.—In re Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Lawrence, 194 Mich. 200; Smith v. Mosier, Id.

Indemnity and fidelity bonds and contracts in general, see Indemnity.

Contracts of guaranty, see Guaranty.

¶ 550. One for whom goods were ordered by another acting as agent, and who paid for them when received, cannot escape reimbursement of the agent on objection that the terms were not the same as the agent obtained for a similar purchase for himself at the same time, where no claim to such terms was made at the time of refusing acceptance.—Hatch v. McBrien, 83 Mich. 159.

¶ 551. A dealer who, acting as agent for defendant, placed an order for canned goods to be shipped with some of his own, and who as directed changed the grades and brands by sending in an amended order, may on receiving the goods and paying for them recover from defendant, who refused acceptance without objection to the failure to send grades ordered, the ones sent being better, the objection being on other grounds.—Hatch v. McBrien, 83 Mich. 159.

¶ 552. An agent's agreement not to charge his principal, for whom he loans money, anything for making loans or for collecting interest, does not prevent his recovering from the principal disbursements and attorney fee made and received in statutory foreclosure.—Lyon v. Sweeny, 91 Mich. 478.

General law of liens, see Liens.

¶ 553. A mere clerk or agent whose wages are measured by profits has no lien on the property in his possession as against a chattel mortgage executed by his principal.—Wilcox v. Matthews, 44 Mich. 192.

¶ 554. A collecting agent who advances money to his principal for the debtor, under such circumstances that the latter becomes liable to the agent, rather than to the principal, cannot retain the amount of such advances from moneys subsequently collected.—Wilson v. Crosby, 109 Mich. 449.

C. REMEDIES AND PROCEDURE.

Right to accounting, see ante § 99.

Right to sue concurrently for compensation earned and on contract releasing compensation agreement, see Abatement, ¶ 41.

Damages for breach of instructions and measure thereof, see Damages, II, D.

Time when limitations begin to run, see Limitations of Actions.

Remedies on contract generally, see Assumpsit; Contracts, X.

¶ 555. One who, being duly authorized, has collected money for his principal is liable to him in an action for money had and received.—Liesemer v. Burg, 106 Mich. 124.

¶ 556. Where certain machinery in possession of agents for the purpose of selling on commission, is wrongfully turned over to one who agrees to purchase if it shall prove satisfactory, the principal may waive the tort and sue the agent for its value on the common counts in assumpsit.—Brown v. Foster, 137 Mich. 35.

¶ 557. Executors of a deceased attorney in fact who had defrauded his principals and co-claimants by means of releases obtained from the latter after a settlement whereof the latter were ignorant, were properly made defendants to a bill by the defrauded parties for an accounting, they having taken measures to conceal part of the settlement moneys which had come into their hands from the testator.—Richardson v. Richardson, 100 Mich. 364.

¶ 558. An individual manufacturer, with whom an agent has had dealings, is not a proper party defendant to a bill for an accounting by such agent against a corporation and its successor, calling in question the transactions of such corporations, where the business of such manufacturer was merged in such corporation and the agent continues dealing with it and its successor.—Stone v. Fox Machine Co., 145 Mich. 689.

Proof of the fact of agency, see ante §§ 9, 10.

General law of pleading and evidence, see Pleading; Evidence.

¶ 559. Where a declaration alleges the violation of defendant's authority as an agent to the damage of his principal, it is essential to recovery that he show the agency.—Hicks v. Steel, 142 Mich. 292.

¶ 560. Where by way of payment or set-off it is claimed that an employee has misappropriated money with which he has been intrusted, such misappropriation must be shown before a claim can be established against him on account thereof.—In re King's Estate, 94 Mich. 411.

¶ 561. In an action by a firm of merchants against an employee, their traveling salesman, for money claimed by the plaintiffs to have been paid him on false statements of his expense account against them, testimony to show that defendant had expended more than his salary besides supporting his family, and that he had no other source of revenue, is properly excluded, as there can be no presumption that he has wrongfully obtained so much as was not paid him in wages, in the absence of proof that his property was limited to his earnings.—Linn v. Gilman, 46 Mich. 628.

¶ 562. It appearing that an agent suing for compensation had received and handled money belonging to the principal, there is a presumption that such money received was applied by him to the payment of his claim against the employer rather than that it was misappropriated.—In re King's Estate, 94 Mich. 411.

¶ 563. On the question whether a superintendent of a mine was to have the employer's house rent free or was to pay rent for it, the question being raised on a set-off pleaded to his action for wages, and being dependent on a custom to allow it, he must prove the custom or the set-off will be allowed on the theory that there was an implied contract to pay rent.—Berringer v. Cobb, 58 Mich. 557.

¶ 565. Where a contract of agency for the sale of agricultural implements provided that the principal would accept, without indorsement, good notes taken for the sale of such implements, the agent in an action to recover a balance alleged to be due from him may show that, under contracts containing similar provisions, plaintiff had on previous occasions settled with defendant by taking notes not given for goods of plaintiff sold by defendant, as bearing upon the authority of a state agent to accept such notes in settlement, and as bearing upon the question of the truthfulness of his statements.—Superior Drill Co. v. Carpenter, 150 Mich. 262.

¶ 566. In an action by an agent of a lessee against sublessees to recover a balance of rent claimed to be due him individually where defendants claimed that payments were made pursuant to an agreement with the principal, it was not error to admit testimony offered by defendants to sustain their claim, they having already given evidence making plaintiff's agency a question for the jury.—Gleason v. Stone, 200 Mich. 187.

ers' rates to be procured for him by plaintiff from wholesale dealers, testimony was given to the effect that plaintiff, in the customer's presence, requested the head salesman of a wholesale dealer to let the customer have the goods at the prices that they would be sold to plaintiff, which were the same as wholesale or dealers' rates, that the salesman said he would do so, and that he did so sell. Held, that the jury was justified in finding that the furniture was furnished at dealers' rates, and that it was for the jury to determine whether the testimony—which was disputed—was true or not, and also to find from all the testimony what the agreement between the parties was.—Tompkins v. Hitchcock, 69 Mich. 123.

¶ 568. Plaintiff entered into a contract to act as the agent of the defendant automobile company in conducting a sales garage, and agreed to run the business to the satisfaction of defendant. The evidence of plaintiff indicated that he entered upon the discharge of the contract according to mutual plans of endeavor approved by defendant; that he held almost daily consultations with defendant's manager; and that said manager expressed from time to time entire satisfaction with plaintiff's work until defendant entered into surreptitious negotiations with another agent to handle its machines on commissions more advantageous to defendant; and that plaintiff occupied his time in demonstrating the cars, interviewing prospective customers, advertising, etc. Held, there was sufficient evidence to submit to the jury the question of bad faith of defendant in canceling the contract.—Isbell v. Anderson Carriage Co., 170 Mich. 304.

¶ 569. Defendant, having the confidence of plaintiff, induced him to transfer the collection of his insurance to certain adjusters and to turn over the whole conduct of his affairs to defendant. Defendant knowing that plaintiff had no agreement with said adjusters as to their compensation, and in contravention of an agreement as to the deposit of the money collected in a bank to plaintiff's credit, and without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, authorized said adjusters to receive as compensation a grossly excessive sum. In a suit to recover from defendant for the loss of said money, held, the trial court erred in directing a verdict for defendant.—Dillon v. Craig, 168 Mich. 216.

¶ 570. In an action for commissions earned under a contract of employment, where plaintiff claims that defendant waived the rendering of weekly itemized accounts and thereafter sent money to plaintiff to disburse, with the understanding that no account should be rendered, the court properly refused to direct a verdict for defendant on the ground that plaintiff had failed to prove the amount of his disbursements.—Muir v. Kalamazoo Corset Co., 155 Mich. 441.

¶ 571. In an action against an agent to recover the amount received for sheep of plaintiff sold by defendant and not accounted for, where plaintiff claimed that a certain number of sheep were intrusted to claimant under an arrangement whereby they were to be let out to double in a term of four years, and, upon return, the increased flock was let out for a similar period and, with further increase, was sold at the end of the second period by defendant, held, on conflicting evidence, that it was a question for jury whether plaintiff had any interest in the flock.—Miller v. Young, 196 Mich. 276.

¶ 573. Where the court instructs that if the jury finds that a contract to pay commissions was made, and work was done under it by the plaintiff, it is binding on the defendant, the instruction does not imply that defendant is liable irrespective of the terms of the contract.—Dufford v. Parliament of the Prudent Patricians of Pompeii, 152 Mich. 151.

¶ 574. An instruction as to the exercise of discretion given to a plaintiff under a contract, whereby such plaintiff was to receive a certain sum of money for services and was to expend a stipulated amount every month for advertising, as he deemed advantageous to the sale of fiber-cloth blankets, such instruction stating that the plaintiff was bound to exercise reasonable discretion in advertising and to use his best efforts in introducing the goods as required by the contract, and submitting the question as to whether the plaintiff complied with the contract, where a small amount was expended for advertising in the spring months, is correct.—Kaempfer v. Lindsay, 121 Mich. 425.

¶ 575. In an action upon a claim against the estate of a deceased agent who had been employed by plaintiff to loan and collect money where a memorandum book kept by the agent showing the business done for the principal, both before and after the date of a settlement between them, is admitted in evidence, instructions that it was for the jury to pass upon its completeness, and that they could consider none of the entries prior to the settlement on the question of liability, is proper.—Jewell v. Jewell's Estate, 139 Mich. 578.

¶ 576. On a question whether interest should be paid by defendant to plaintiff, whose agent he was, an instruction describing defendant as "agent or trustee" could not be prejudicial where it was immaterial, as far as interest was concerned, in which capacity he acted.—Schisler v. Null, 91 Mich. 321.

¶ 577. An instruction in an action by a principal against an agent that defendant claiming a settlement had the burden of proving that there had been a "fair and full settlement" is not misleading, where the court has already charged that in finding such settlement they would only have to consider the transactions and dealings had after its date.—Schisler v. Null, 91 Mich. 321.

¶ 578. In an action by the agent of lessees against sublessees to recover a balance of rent which plaintiff claimed was due him individually because he had paid the rent to the landlord in reliance upon the sublessees' agreement to pay the rent to him, an instruction that if the jury found that when the last month's rent was due the defendants promised to pay the rent for that month to him, knowing that he would pay that amount to the landlord, and, if plaintiff, relying upon such promise, paid the amount due as part of the rent due the landlord plaintiff was entitled to recover, and that in such an event there would be a sufficient consideration for the promise, and defendants, after such payment under the agreement would be estopped to deny liability to plaintiff, was as favorable to plaintiff as was permitted by the evidence.—Gleason v. Stone, 200 Mich. 187.

¶ 1. The legislature cannot appropriate public funds in aid of a voluntary private association of persons "actively interested in the improvement" of a given crop, since it would amount to a use of public funds for private purposes although indirectly beneficial to the state at large in the betterment of crops.—Michigan Corn Improvement Ass'n v. Auditor General, 150 Mich. 69.

¶ 2. Where a mere intruder upon the land of another plants crops thereon, such crops, so long as they remain unsevered, are the property of the owner of the land.—Heilwig v. Nybeck, 179 Mich. 292.

¶ 3. One contracting to sow wheat on the land of another on shares acquires only the right to sow and harvest the wheat, and an entrance to plough up the wheat and sow and harvest another substitute crop is a trespass.—Stebbins v. Demorest, 138 Mich. 297.

¶ 4. Plaintiff rented a farm of defendant under a lease to be terminated in case of sale of the farm by defendant, and placed his uncle in possession, who planted with his own seeds, using his own tools, a portion of the land. The uncle testified and the evidence clearly showed that the growing crops belonged to the uncle, and that he was not the plaintiff's hired man. In a suit for the value of said growing crop, held, the action was clearly one for the value of emblements, and plaintiff not being the owner of the crop was not entitled to recover.—Van Dyke v. McCormick, 165 Mich. 368.

Corporate matters, such as meetings, records, contracts, conveyances, mortgages, acts of officers and responsibility for them, in which the society stands on a parity with other corporations, are treated in Corporations.

Taxes in aid of agricultural societies, see Taxes.

¶ 5. Comp. L. 1857, chap. 54, authorizing agricultural societies to hold fairs and "distribute premiums for the best and most meritorious animals," is not a "special law" authorizing horse racing, within the meaning of R. S., chap. 40, § 1 (Comp. L. 1857, chap. 189); and prior to the amendment made in 1877 to section 1 no action could be maintained for the nonpayment of an order upon the treasurer of an agricultural association for the premium won in a "trial of speed" at a horse fair.—Bronson Agricultural & Breeders' Ass'n v. Ramsdell, 24 Mich. 441.

¶ 6. County agricultural societies organized under How. St., §§ 2303-2312, being quasi-public in character, may be incorporated for a period longer than thirty years, and may be authorized by special act to dispose of grounds and invest proceeds.—Kent County Agric. Soc. v. Houseman, 81 Mich. 609.

¶ 7. The doctrine of nonuser is not applicable to a county agricultural society, the lessee of which has held annual fairs and carried out all purposes of the organization, its directors and officers meanwhile continuing to perform their duties.—Kent County Agric. Soc. v. Houseman, 81 Mich. 609.

¶ 8. The president and secretary of a county agricultural society, organized under How. St., §§ 2303-2312, are ex officio directors, and entitled to vote on all matters the same as those who are specifically called "directors."—Kent County Agric. Soc. v. Housemen, 81 Mich. 609.

While its object was not primarily to enrich its stockholders, but to foster agriculture, it still was engaged in making sufficient money to carry on its enterprise. Held, it owed the same duty as a private corporation to provide safe seats in its grand stand, and was liable for injuries resulting to a visitor from a breach of such duty.—Logan v. Agricultural Society Lenawee County, 156 Mich. 537.

¶ 11. An agricultural society's duty to inspect its grand stand is not fulfilled by the mere employment of efficient inspectors; it must see that these inspectors actually do their work with reasonable care.—Logan v. Agricultural Society Lenawee County, 156 Mich. 537.

¶ 12. Plaintiff bought a seat in defendant society's grand stand to witness the races, and was injured by the breaking of the seat board, whereby plaintiff fell to the ground. The declaration stated that the defendant was in duty bound to use care in erecting a safe seat; that the seat board on the under side was rotten and defective; that a proper discharge of defendant's duty to inspect would have revealed its condition; and that such defects were not apparent to plaintiff. It also alleged facts showing defendant failed so to inspect, and it set out plaintiff's injury. Defendant put in no demurrer, but pleaded the general issue. Held, the declaration sufficiently stated a cause of action to support a verdict rendered in plaintiff's favor.—Logan v. Agricultural Society Lenawee County, 156 Mich. 537.

¶ 14. Plaintiff was injured by the breaking of a seat board in defendant's grand stand whereby she fell to the ground. The evidence showed that defendant employed competent inspectors; that one of them walked about under the structure in the effort to see defects; that another tested the seats by walking and stamping on them on top; that plaintiff weighed only 143 pounds; that the rottenness of the planks was visible from the under side; and that the nails pulled out of the board, which broke. Held, the question whether defendant properly inspected was for the jury.—Logan v. Agricultural Society Lenawee County, 156 Mich. 537.

ALIENS AND CITIZENS.

TREATS of the status and disabilities of aliens and the condition and status of citizens and of acquisition and loss of citizenship.

Analysis.

§ 2. ——Descent to, through or from aliens.
§ 3. Naturalization.
§ 4. Citizenship, expatriation and repatriation.

Eligibility for certain rights and duties, see also such specific topics as Jury, II; Elections, III.

Administration of estates of aliens, see Estates of Decedents; and as to intervention of consuls or foreign ministers therein, see Ambassadors.

Numerous rights and disabilities depend on residence or nonresidence, and as far as nonresident aliens are involved, such topics as treat of the specific right should be consulted, e. g., Limitations of Actions; Homesteads; Process; Depositions.

¶ 1. The laws and treaties of the United States manifest no policy to put aliens on as good a footing as citizens.—Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24.

§ 2. ——Descent to, through or from aliens.

¶ 3. Article 9 of Jay's treaty of 1794 (8 U. S. Stat. at L., p. 122), securing to British subjects the right to grant, sell or devise the estates they held at the date of the treaty, in like manner as if they were natives, protects none but valid titles, and its provisions against the effect of the alienage of the heirs or assignees of alien grantors do not apply to mere possessory rights, without any title in fact, which by a subsequent act of congress were enlarged into freeholds, where there had been continuous occupancy and improvement.—Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24.

¶ 6. From May 8, 1821, to the time—Jan. 1, 1828—when the statute of March 31, 1827, took effect, there was no law in force in the territory of Michigan authorizing aliens to hold or inherit lands.—Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24.

¶ 7. A British subject residing at Detroit before and at the time of the evacuation of the territory of Michigan under the provisions of Jay's treaty, and who continued to reside there afterwards, without at any time prior to June 1, 1797 (i. e., one year from the evacuation), declaring his intention to remain a British subject, became ipso facto for all purposes an American citizen.—Crane v. Reeder, 25 Mich. 303.

¶ 8. That clause of the act of congress of April 14, 1802 (2 U. S. Stat. at L., p. 155, § 4), which provides that "the children of persons duly naturalized under any of the laws of the United States, etc., being under the age of twenty-one years at the time of their parents being so naturalized, etc., shall, if dwelling in the United States, be considered as citizens of the United States," applies to the minor children of those who became citizens under Jay's treaty, a treaty being just as much a "law of the United States" as an act of congress is. The second clause of this section, providing that "the children of persons who now are, or have been, citizens of the United States, shall, though born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, be considered as citizens of the United States," does not apply to those whose parents were aliens at the time of the birth of the children, nor is it restricted to the cases only of natural-born citizens and citizens who were original actors in the revolution; but it embraces also the children of naturalized citizens.—Crane v. Reeder, 25 Mich. 303.

¶ 9. Under U. S. Rev. St., § 2165, an alien's declaration of an intention to become a citizen may be made before the clerk of a court elsewhere than in his office or in open court.—Andres v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 77 Mich. 85.

¶ 10. The Candian-born offspring of fugitive slaves do not, in removing to the United States, become citizens.—People ex rel. Hedgman v. Detroit Board of Registration, 26 Mich. 51.

and the treaty of peace between the United States and Great Britain, which was signed September 3, 1783, was, by virtue thereof, a citizen of the United States, as was his son who was born in the United States while his father was a citizen, and whose citizenship would not be affected by the after-renunciation of allegiance by the father.—Lamoreaux v. Attorney-General, 89 Mich. 146.

¶ 5. The indorsement of a note subsequent to the indorsement thereof in blank by the payee named therein is not a material alteration as contemplated by the Negotiable Instruments Law, Pub. Acts 1905, Act 265, sec. 127, subd. 4, How. 2nd Ed., § 2798.—Ensign v. Fogg, 177 Mich. 317.

§ 5. Intent and purpose of alteration.

Alterations by third persons and agents, see ante § 3.

¶ 6. Where a note given for a debt was incorrectly dated by mistake, and the payee, without fraudulent intent, corrected the mistake, and after such change the maker made two payments on the note, and was not deceived by the alteration, the subsequent payments removed the presumptive effect of the alteration.—Johnson v. Johnson's Estate, 66 Mich. 525.

What constitute material alterations in negotiable instruments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6166.

¶ 7. An alteration which does not change the effect of a written contract is immaterial, and will not preclude recovery in a suit upon the contract.—Prudden v. Nester, 103 Mich. 540.

¶ 8. The signing of an extension note by the debtor, for whose benefit the instrument was given, after it comes into the possession of the payee, is not a material alteration.—Union Banking Co. v. Martin's Estate, 113 Mich. 521.

Adding indorsements, see also ante ¶ 5.

¶ 9. A note was indorsed by the payee and by another person. The maker, in good faith, but without the knowledge or consent of the indorsers, inserted the name of the second indorser as payee in the body of the note, and discounted it. Held, that the alteration released both indorsers.—Aldrich v. Smith, 37 Mich. 468.

¶ 10. The insertion of the words "or bearer" in a promissory note expressly made subject to the conditions of a mortgage that is payable only on certain contingencies is an immaterial alteration; it does not change the note's legal effect.—Goodenow v. Curtis, 33 Mich. 505.

¶ 11. The insertion in a promissory note after the note has been signed and delivered of the words "or bearer" is not a material alteration, and does not avoid an indorser's liability.—Weaver v. Bromley, 65 Mich. 212.

¶ 12. The principal maker of a note is not injured by having the name of a surety added without his consent, and such addition does not invalidate the note.—Miller v. Finley, 26 Mich. 249; Gano v. Heath, 36 Mich. 441.

¶ 13. The insertion in the formal part of a bond, the penalty and conditions of which are fixed by its terms, of a promise to pay ten per cent attorney's fees in case of suit on the bond, is an immaterial alteration, such promise being no part of the penalty and not affecting the judgment to be rendered in case of suit, or the amount of damages to be assessed.—White Sewing Machine Co. v. Dakin, 86 Mich. 581.

¶ 14. Where a promissory note is drawn upon a printed blank, the payee or subsequent holder, without the knowledge or consent of the maker, adds the written words and figures "10 per cent" after the printed words "with interest at" at the end of the instrument, this act renders the note void, and constitutes a valid defense in favor of the maker, even against a bona fide purchaser of the note. In an action brought upon such altered note the maker cannot be held liable to pay the amount of the note as originally drawn.—Holmes v. Trumper, 22 Mich. 427.

¶ 15. The addition of the word "annually" to the interest clause of a note, made payable in less than two years, is not a material alteration, and does not change the liability. It only shows that the interest is to be earned at the stipulated rate by the year, and does not require an instalment of it to be paid at the end of the year from the date of the note.—Leonard v. Phillips, 39 Mich. 182.

¶ 17. Where there is no evidence in an action on a promissory note that plaintiff made an alteration and was not a holder, in due course, for value before maturity, under the Negotiable Instruments Act, Pub. Act 1905, Act 265, sec. 126, How. 2nd Ed., § 2797, an alteration in the date will not defeat recovery.—Ensign v. Fogg, 177 Mich. 317.

¶ 18. In an action on a note where it is alleged that plaintiff, the payee, raised the amount thereof after its execution and changed the time of payment an instruction that no recovery can be had if either change was made is warranted.—Baird v. Salnave, 174 Mich. 409.

¶ 20. Where, contemporaneously with the assignment of a contract upon which the assignor claimed the sum of $5,000 was due to him, he executed to the assignee a writing to the effect that he anticipated the debt would be paid at once upon the happening of a certain event, and that in case it were not paid he could, and if called upon by the assignee, would show good cause for payment, but that he did not guarantee it, held that as the clause negativing guaranty did not relieve the assignor from any obligation to be deduced from the writing, the removal of it was an immaterial alteration.—Prudden v. Nester, 103 Mich. 540.

¶ 22. The detachment by the vendor of a portion of a conditional sale contract so as to make it a negotiable promissory note, is a material alteration which will avoid the entire contract.—Toledo Scale Co. v. Gogo, 186 Mich. 442.

¶ 23. The writing of a word over an erasure in a deed may or may not be suspicious. Where the circuit judge, with the deed before him, has proceeded on the assumption that the erasure was not suspicious, a court of review will not say, without inspection, that he has erred.—Munroe v. Eastman, 31 Mich. 283.

¶ 24. Where a note is fraudulently altered by the payee the maker is no longer charged even as against a bona fide holder for value. —Holmes v. Trumper, 22 Mich. 427.

¶ 25. Any material alteration in a note without the consent of the party responsible on it and affected by it will destroy it as to him.—Miller v. Finley, 26 Mich. 249.

¶ 26. The addition of an interest clause to a promissory note without the consent of the indorser releases the latter even as against a bona fide holder for value. And this applies to accommodation notes indorsed in blank.—Bradley v. Mann, 37 Mich. 1.

¶ 27. Forgery of a negotiable instrument or the indorsement thereon, except in case of ratification or estoppel, nullifies such instrument as to all parties against whom the forgery is committed; and this is true of paper which is altered in a material part. —First Nat. Bank of Durand v. Shaw, 149 Mich. 362.

¶ 29. An indorser's consent to the alteration of paper need not be in writing.—Stewart v. First Nat. Bank, 40 Mich. 348.

¶ 30. Three notes drawn to the same payees were indorsed by all of them, but, after one had been negotiated, two of the indorsers were allowed to have their names erased. This was done with the consent of all the indorsers but one, and he, on being informed of it, recognized his liability on the paper. Held, that he thereby ratified the alteration of the first note and authorized the negotiation of the other two with the same change.—Stewart v. First Nat. Bank, 40 Mich. 348.

¶ 32. Since the statement under the circumstances did not amount to a misrepresentation of fact, there is no estoppel to assert that a note was raised from $500 to $3,500, where the purchaser informed an indorser that he had taken a certain person's note so indorsed and of that amount, to which the indorser replied that he did not remember indorsing a note for that amount, but that if his name is on the back it is good, and will be paid, and asked when it would mature, which the holder told him subsequently, on which occasion the indorser stated he was glad the purchaser had it, and asked him to take other paper.—Pearson v. Hardin, 95 Mich. 360.

¶ 33. Where there are alterations and interlineations on a deed it is presumed they were made before execution and the party attacking the instrument has the burden of showing otherwise.—Arnold v. Brechtel, 174 Mich. 147.

¶ 34. Where there is nothing suspicious on the face of an instrument, such as a deed or note, beyond the fact that an erasure is manifest, the presumption is that the alteration was made before execution.—Connery v. Connery, 175 Mich. 544; Newland v. First Baptist Church Soc. of Bellevue, 137 Mich. 335; Ensign v. Fogg, 177 Mich. 317.

¶ 35. Alterations are suspicious, upon the face of an instrument, when they appear to be beneficial to the person claiming rights under it.—Wilson v. Hotchkiss' Estate, 81 Mich. 172.

¶ 36. An agreement indorsed upon a note and changing the rate of interest thereon, if made while the note is in the owner's possession, and stamped with an internal revenue stamp, is presumed to have been made by the owner or by his authority, even if not signed.—Baent v. Kennicutt, 57 Mich. 268.

¶ 37. Defendant in an action on a note does not have the burden of showing whether the printed words "after due" were erased before or after its execution; it is for plaintiff to show that defendant executed and delivered the note in the shape in which he had produced it and declared upon it.—Willett v. Shepard, 34 Mich. 106.

it is proper for the court sitting without a jury to subject the note to a critical examination, and to use magnifying glasses for the purpose.—Morse v. Blanchard, 117 Mich. 87.

¶ 39. Where the defense to an action on a promissory note is that the note has been altered, some of the alleged alterations being printed words standing in the note as produced, the testimony of the printer at whose office the blank was printed is relevant to show that it was originally printed as it then appeared.—Hunter v. Parsons, 22 Mich. 95.

¶ 40. In action against defendant bankers for recovery of a deposit, where the issue was whether an indorsement of a deposited certificate was for the account of a firm or was in blank and the deposit for plaintiff's individual account, plaintiff claiming that it had been altered without her consent so as to be for account of the firm; one of the defendants having testified that, when plaintiff indorsed the certificate, she told him that her husband had sent word that he wanted the money placed to the credit of the firm of which he had been a member, plaintiff called her husband, and he was asked if he had sent such word to his wife, and replied that he had not. Held, that this testimony was admissible as bearing upon the probabilities of defendant's claim that it belonged to the firm.—Eherenkrook v. Webber, 100 Mich. 314.

¶ 41. Where, upon the question whether the note in suit had been raised from $500 to $3,500 by one defendant after the other defendant had indorsed it, the indorser testified that at the time he indorsed it he also indorsed two other notes, and that each of the three was for $500, evidence that the other two notes were raised to $3,500 and $4,500 respectively was inadmissible, it being an attempt to prove one forgery by other forgeries.—Pearson v. Hardin, 95 Mich. 360.

Use of microscope, see ante ¶ 38.
Instruction as to explanation, see post ¶ 54.

¶ 42. When there are circumstances and appearances rendering an alteration in a written contract suspicious the party relying upon the contract as altered is bound to explain it before he can recover.—Sheldon v. Hawes, 15 Mich. 519.

¶ 43. Alterations of negotiable paper in a material part, made by the holder in the absence and without the knowledge of the maker, ought not to be sustained except upon very clear proof that, when actually made, they had the assent of the party to be charged.—Swift v. Barber, 26 Mich. 503.

¶ 46. Where, upon the question whether the note in suit had been altered by defendant maker, after defendant H. had indorsed it, there was evidence that it had been written by the maker and signed by both defendants, and an expert had testified that such note had the appearance of having been all written at one time and by the same pen, ink and hand, and that in his opinion it was so written, it was admissible to be scrutinized by the jury, and to form the basis of a verdict if found genuine.—Pearson v. Hardin, 95 Mich. 360.

¶ 47. After an instrument is admitted in evidence, the question whether alterations or erasures were made before or after its execution is for the jury.—Wilson v. Hotchkiss' Estate, 81 Mich. 172.

¶ 48. Evidence that a note when signed was payable in two years, but when produced in court appeared to be payable in four months, tends to show an alteration, and the defendant has a right to have the question submitted to the jury; it is not to be assumed that the question of alteration can always be determined by inspection.—Jourden v. Boyce, 33 Mich. 302.

¶ 50. A directed verdict in an action upon a note, the defense being that the note had been altered after it was signed, is improper where there is evidence from which the jury might find that the note had not been altered.—Weidman v. Symes, 120 Mich. 657.

¶ 51. In action on a promissory note which had been altered after execution by the erasure of the words "after maturity" in the clause providing the payment of interest, which alteration the defendant denied having authorized, testimony of the payee's wife that she was in and out of the room while the maker and payee were discussing certain notes, and that she heard their conversation, but that she could not identify the note in issue, held, not to warrant submitting a case to the jury on the theory that the maker of the note sued on told the payee to alter it or that he approved of his doing so after the fact.—Nelson v. Dutton, 51 Mich. 416.

¶ 52. Where an accommodation maker sued upon a note testifies that it was altered after he signed it, the question whether an alteration had been made was for the jury, not for the court.—Weidman v. Symes, 116 Mich. 619.

¶ 53. Plaintiff, John S. Fors, Jr., and his father, the defendant, John S. Fors, went to a scrivener to have a deed executed. The deed as to the name of the grantee, contained two interlineations, an "S" between the words "John" and "Fors," and the word "Jr." after the word "Fors." The evidence was conflicting whether the insertions were made before or after the execution of the deed. In an action of ejectment, held, that the question was for the jury.—Fors v. Fors, 159 Mich. 156.

¶ 54. A charge to the jury stating that every alteration on the face of a written instrument detracts from its credit, and concluding "that if the plaintiff, claiming under a deed that had apparently been altered, failed to explain this appearance to the satisfaction of the jury so as to remove the suspicion, they are to take this into consideration as evidence tending to show that the deed in its present form is not genuine," is erroneous as implying that, after all the facts were submitted and were insufficient to satisfy the jury that the writing was genuine, the plaintiff's failure to satisfy them would merely "tend" to show that it was so erroneous.—Comstock v. Smith, 26 Mich. 306.

¶ 56. In an ejectment suit, the question was whether the scrivener who drew a certain deed made alterations in the name of the grantee after its execution. The court instructed the jury that for them to find that the scrivener made such alterations would implicate him for forgery. Held, this instruction was an expression of the opinion of the court prejudicial to the claim of the defendant, who contended that such alterations had been made subsequent to the execution.—Fors v. Fors, 159 Mich. 156.

¶ 57. On an issue as to whether an agent of the payee of a note was authorized to consent to an indorsement of receipt in full from two of the several makers, on their paying a portion of the face of the note, evidence showing such indorsement in the presence of the agent, that he thereafter took the note to his principal, that the latter brought the note back to such makers, without repudiating the authority of the agent, but to request an alteration of the form of the indorsement so as to make the note negotiable, was sufficient to authorize an instruction on the effect of such alteration made by one of such makers without the consent of the other.—Custard v. Hodges, 155 Mich. 361.

¶ 4. In consequence of their liability to break through all discipline and act according to their original savage nature, and because also of their liability to madness, it has been customary always to make dogs the subject of special and peculiar legislation. —Van Horn v. People, 46 Mich. 183.

¶ 5. By the common law every person must keep his animals upon his own premises; he may use the public highway for passage, but not for pasturage, except opposite his own premises.—Robinson v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 79 Mich. 323.

¶ 7. Laws 1867, Act No. 185, § 1 (How. St., § 2106), prohibits the running at large of cattle, etc., in public highways, and provides that the act "shall be inoperative only in those counties . . . in which it shall be so determined by the board of supervisors," and How. St., § 2113, provides that the act "shall not apply to that portion of the state lying north of the tier of townships twelve north, unless ordered by the board of supervisors"; hence in townships north of that tier the common-law rule prevails. —Robinson v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 79 Mich. 323.

¶ 8. The term "running at large" in the statute as to cattle running at large in highways means "strolling without restraint or confinement; rambling at will," and does not apply when cows are eating in the view of their owner.—Eklund v. Toner, 121 Mich. 687.

¶ 9. The vote of a township making cattle, etc., free commoners, cannot confer upon individuals the right to graze horses, cattle, etc., on the road of a railway company in said township, the road being in law neither a public common nor an ordinary public highway.—Williams v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 2 Mich. 259.

¶ 10. If any owner has complied with the provisions of the statute by having his dog properly licensed and collared, and by accident the collar is lost, he is entitled to a reasonable time to discover and make good the loss.—Heisrodt v. Hackett, 34 Mich. 283.

¶ 11. Comp. L. 1871, §§ 2066, 2067, How. St., §§ 2120, 2121, authorizing a supervisor to sue in the name of the township for the penalty imposed upon the owner of a dog for not killing it after he had been notified that it had bitten a person, does not empower a ward supervisor to bring such an action, where, under the city charter, the ward is a mere territorial division of the municipal corporation, with no treasury of its own and no capacity of suit.—Bixby v. ¶ 12. Cattle in anybody's charge are not "running at large," and, if on the highway, they are not trespassing on the premises of the adjacent owner; and so in neither case is he warranted in impounding them.—Bertwhistle v. Goodrich, 53 Mich. 457; Blanck v. Hirth, 56 Mich. 330.

¶ 13. The presence of cattle in the highway depasturing the herbage of adjacent owners is a grievance for which there may be a legal remedy; but it is not a nuisance that will warrant him in summarily impounding them on his premises.—Bertwhistle v. Goodrich, 53 Mich. 457.

¶ 14. It cannot be said as matter of law that cattle were "strolling without restraint or confinement, as wandering, roving, or rambling at will, unrestrained" within the meaning of the statute. where the corroborated testimony of the person last in charge of them was that she told her boy to turn them out, adding that she would drive them to pasture, that the boy did so and reported that she was detained momentarily and the cattle followed a road towards their pasture stopping to drink in a stream, but that they were in her sight all the time except while drinking, and were not on defendant's land, and that when they came up from drinking defendant was seen driving them off along the road.—Donley v. Fowler, 147 Mich. 288, affirming by divided court the ruling of the trial court on this point.

¶ 16a. An owner and occupant of land having the right to distrain animals in the highway opposite his premises may do so either by his own act or that of his authorized agent.—Spiegel v. Straw, 196 Mich. 581.

¶ 17. No one but a resident freeholder of the township being authorized by Comp. L. 1857, § 1605, How. St., § 2063, to take up stray beasts, the act by any one else is a trespass which cannot afterwards be assumed and made lawful by a freeholder. Accordingly, where a minor son of a resident freeholder took up a stray beast without authority, and the father subsequently adopted the act, but stated that he should not himself have taken up the beast, it was held that the proceedings were unauthorized and the subsequent sale of the estray under the statute void.—Newsom v. Hart, 14 Mich. 233.

¶ 18. One assuming possession of an estray, the taking up of which was a trespass because the taker was not a freeholder entitled to do so, cannot justify the possession and subsequent acts, though, being a freeholder, the taking up would have been legal had he done it himself.—Newsom v. Hart, 14 Mich. 233.

¶ 19. It is immaterial whether a wife occupying land with her husband is an occupant of land within Comp. Laws 1897, § 5608. How. 2nd Ed., § 4351, so as to be authorized to personally distrain animals running at large in the highway opposite such land where she distrains such animals as an authorized agent of her husband.—Spiegel v. Straw, 196 Mich. 581.

¶ 20. Under How. St., § 8362, a written notice must be given by the person impounding beasts to the owner or person in charge of them if known and living within six miles from the place of impounding.—Jones v. Dashner, 89 Mich. 246.

Sale of distrained animals, see post § 8.

¶ 21. A city ordinance prohibiting animals from running at large anywhere within the city limits is repealed by an amendatory ordinance that prohibits their running at large within such limits as the council may designate by resolutions, and provides for the repeal of all ordinances inconsistent therewith. Between the taking effect of the amendatory ordinance and the designation of the limits there is nothing to prohibit cattle from running at large anywhere in the city, and proceedings to take up and sell a horse found running at large in the city during that interval have no force to transfer title. —Lenz v. Sherrott, 26 Mich. 139.

¶ 22. Where a village charter authorizes the council to provide for the sale of estrays "for the penalty incurred, and the costs of keeping and impounding," the omission of the council to impose a penalty for the nuisance of stray beasts does not invalidate the pound ordinance; the costs here are not for enforcing the penalty, and in such a case the omission of some severable part of a legal penalty, in punishing a breach of the penal laws, cannot, generally, be a ground of complaint. Whether such costs and expenses are not properly a penalty imposed upon the owner of estrays for rendering necessary these proceedings in the abatement of a nuisance, quere.—Grover v. Huckins, 26 Mich. 476.

¶ 23. A provision in a village ordinance for the sale of estrays which the owner fails to reclaim, the purpose of the sale being to cover the costs and charges of impounding and keeping them, the surplus to belong to the owner, is not a forfeiture. For illegal seizure the owner may bring replevin.—Grover v. Huckins, 26 Mich. 476; and see Campau v. Langley, 39 Mich. 451.

¶ 24. Under a village ordinance requiring the pound-master to sell at public auction animals which have been impounded for a period of eight days and are unclaimed, and to give six days' notice of such sale, such notice cannot be given until the expiration of the eight days of impounding.—Barrett v. Rowe, 78 Mich. 648.

Right to distrain for trespass without damages, see post ¶ 33.

Impounding of estray animals, see ante § 4.

¶ 25. The act of 1847—Comp. L. 1857, § 628, as amended, How. St., § 817—gave no right or privilege to the owner of cattle to have them go upon another's unfenced lands, though it denied liability for damages by cattle on such lands.—Wood v. La Rue, 9 Mich. 158.

¶ 26. The cattle of other persons going upon another's unfenced lands are wrongfully there, and the owner of the land may drive them off by any of the ordinary means to which a prudent man would ordinarily resort.—Wood v. La Rue, 9 Mich. 158.

¶ 27. The act of 1847 had reference only to exterior fences. Where, therefore, one of two owners of adjoining lands put cattle upon his own lands, from which they entered upon the other's land—there being no partition fence—he was liable to an action therefor.—Johnson v. Wing, 3 Mich. 163.

¶ 28. Nonadjoining owners of lands are liable in all cases if their animals cross the land of another and go thence upon the adjacent lands of his neighbor, whether there is any partition fence or assignment thereof between the lands of the latter or not.—Aylesworth v. Herrington, 17 Mich. 417.

¶ 30. The right of distress damage feasant existed at common law, and cannot, therefore, be called merely statutory and in derogation of the common-law rights of property.—Hamlin v. Mack, 33 Mich. 103.

¶ 31. Laws 1879, Act No. 248, How. St., § 3068, "to prevent animals from running at large in certain cities and villages," provides that they may be impounded if they do so "in any public street, lane, alley, park, place or highway," etc. Held, that when estrays have been caught trespassing on private property without having escaped thereto from some public place, they cannot be impounded under this act, which is distinct from the general law for distraining beasts doing damage.—Bates v. Nelson, 49 Mich. 459.

¶ 33. The mere fact that the occupant of land upon which a hog was trespassing told the wife of the owner of the animal at the time he notified her, in the absence of the husband, of its presence on his land, that the damage was nothing, has no tendency to establish that his claim of his rights under Rev. Stats. 1846, chap. 125, How. 2nd Ed., § 13744 et seq., relative to distraining of animals and payment for damage is a subterfuge and afterthought, and not made in good faith.—Spiegel v. Straw, 196 Mich. 576.

¶ 35. The power to divest another of his property by a summary and ex parte proceeding—e. g., distraint—must be strictly pursued.—Newsom v. Hart, 14 Mich. 233; Hasceig v. Tripp, 20 Mich. 216.

¶ 37. Entering cattle upon the town book and notifying a justice as required in the statute relating to estrays are unnecessary acts when cattle are taken damage feasant, and do not convert the latter proceeding into the former nor estop one from claiming that he sought the statutory remedy of distraining the cattle.—Blair v. Small, 55 Mich. 126.

¶ 38. Where one seizes an animal damage feasant and confines it immediately in his own barn, there being no pound, he takes it out of the owner's possession and into his own custody, and this is enough to constitute a distress damage feasant.—Hamlin v. Mack, 33 Mich. 103.

¶ 39. Where there is no township pound the person taking any animal doing damage may lawfully impound it by keeping it in some suitable place in his premises.—Hamlin v. Mack, 33 Mich. 103.

¶ 40. Notice to the owner of an animal that it has been taken damage feasant and impounded is waived by the owner if he discovers the facts within the time allowed for giving notice and refuses to pay lawful damages.—Norton v. Rockey, 46 Mich. 460.

¶ 42. In an action of replevin for sheep where the defense claimed that the sheep had been lawfully impounded, held that the fact that the defendant had sent his son, a school boy, to tell the wife of plaintiff that he had shut up the sheep, and the boy had told the son of the plaintiff of the fact, did not constitute such a notice as is implied by How. St. § 8362, to be written.—Jones v. Dashner, 89 Mich. 246.

Notice of distraint, see ante § 7.

¶ 44. The nephew of a distrainer is not a "disinterested person" to whom a warrant of appraisement may issue to appraise beasts taken damage feasant; and an appraisement by him would be void. Whether a justice may issue such warrant to his step-son, quere. —Hasceig v. Tripp, 20 Mich. 216.

¶ 45. One who takes no part in proceedings to appraise his beasts taken damage feasant does not waive any objection that may exist to appraisers summoned.—Hasceig v. Tripp, 20 Mich. 216.

Admissions of no damages as affecting right to distrain, see ante ¶ 33.

¶ 46. Even if one who distrained hogs, which having been at large in the public highway trespassed upon his land, was entitled to the penalty of ten cents per head provided by Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10688, 10689 (a point not determined), he waived his claim by failing to state in his notice that he claimed that he impounded the hogs because they had been in the highway (Comp. L. 1897, § 10695).—Miller v. Hoffman, 135 Mich. 319.

¶ 47. One who distrained hogs because they trespassed upon his lands, acted upon the authority contained in Comp. L. 1897, § 10691, and was not entitled to the penalty of ten cents a head provided under sections 10688 and 10689 for distraining cattle for going at large contrary to law, or contrary to any by-law of a township.—Miller v. Hoffman, 135 Mich. 319.

¶ 48. Positive violence or menacing words are not necessary elements to a rescue of an impounded beast. It is sufficient to take away the animal and set it at liberty contrary to law.—Hamlin v. Mack, 33 Mich. 103.

¶ 49. One who is sued for rescuing an impounded animal cannot, under Comp. L. 1871, § 6782, How. St., § 8371, call in question the statutory regularity of the distrainer's proceedings, but is remitted to his action of replevin.—Hamlin v. Mack, 33 Mich. 103.

Replevin for animals, whether the statutory replevin for beasts distrained or the general action of replevin, will be treated in Replevin.
Remedy for distraint, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14795.

¶ 50. Trover will not lie for an animal taken damage feasant and detained by the injured party—there being no pound in the township—if the owner is notified, or otherwise ascertains the animal's whereabouts and the cause of its detention, within twenty-four hours, and refuses to pay reasonable damages.—How. St., ch. 289; Norton v. Rockey, 46 Mich. 460.

¶ 51. The special proceeding in replevin to test the validity of the restraint of a trespassing animal provided in Revised Statutes 1846, chap. 125, How. 2nd Ed., § 13744 et seq., is exclusive, and trover for property taken damage feasant does not lie.—Spiegel v. Straw, 196 Mich. 576.

¶ 52. In an action of trover for the conversion of a hog, which defendant claimed that he had restrained under the statute, held that the question of irregularities in the distraint proceedings could not be considered, as the question was whether his claim was made in good faith.—Spiegel v. Straw, 196 Mich. 576.

¶ 54. Laws 18973, Act No. 195, permitting "any person" and requiring police officers to kill dogs not licensed and collared, did not operate so as to exempt from liability one whose dog killed another's.—Heisrodt v. Hackett, 34 Mich. 283.

Estoppel to deny ownership of vicious dog, see Estoppel, III.

¶ 55. When it appears that a dog is vicious, and has a propensity to do mischief, and the owner or keeper has notice thereof, either express or implied, the law imposes the duty upon such owner or keeper of keeping such animal secure, from which duty a liability arises in favor of any person who without fault on his part is injured by such animal either in person or property.—Knowles v. Mulder, 74 Mich. 202.

¶ 56. Comp. L. 1897, § 5593, making the owner or keeper of a dog liable if the dog "shall assault or bite or otherwise injure any person traveling," does not indicate that it is essential to recovery that the person must be bitten by the dog, and therefore a person injured through the kick of a horse which was attacked by a dog, is entitled to recover against the keeper of the dog.—Jenkinson v. Coggins, 123 Mich. 7.

¶ 58. One who keeps an untamed and savage bear in hotel grounds frequented by the public is chargeable with a higher duty than if the locality were more private; and evidence as to how the grounds are occupied and used is admissible in a suit to recover for injuries from plaintiff's being bitten by the bear both to show negligence and to show the public character of the place.—Marquet v. LaDuke, 96 Mich. 506.

¶ 59. Where, in an action brought to recover for injuries received from the bite of a dog, the facts concur of previous manifestations of malicious disposition by the dog, and knowledge or notice of this fact in the keeper, the general peaceable disposition of the animal from thence on becomes immaterial.—Kennett v. Engle, 105 Mich. 693.

¶ 60. The injury from the bite of a rabid dog is one of inevitable accident for which the owner is not liable unless, having reason to know of the dog's condition, he neglected to restrain or destroy him.—Elliott v. Herz, 29 Mich. 202.

¶ 61. In an action under How. St., § 2119, against the owner of a vicious dog to recover double damages for its biting a child, the declaration alleged that defendant was "the keeper" of the dog, but it appeared that the dog had been enticed away from defendant, who owned it, by plaintiff's father, and was living on his premises at the time of the injury. Held, that plaintiff's father was the "keeper" and defendant was not liable.—Burnham v. Strother, 66 Mich. 519.

¶ 62. A keeper of a vicious dog is not relieved from liability, where a child is attacked, because of the fact that servant girls disobeyed his instructions in taking the dog into the home of the child, as the statute (Laws 1850, No. 161, § 2; Comp. L. 1897, § 5593) imposing liability, extends the common law so as to include all keepers of dogs, and dispenses with proof of previous knowledge of their vicious character, and the negligence of a third person cannot be held to relieve the keeper.—Fye v. Chapin, 121 Mich. 675. Writ of error dismissed in 179 U. S. 127, 45 L. ed., 119, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71.

¶ 63. Plaintiff was bitten by a dog belonging to defendant, but which at the time was in the keeping of one Bock. Plaintiff's attorney visited defendant prior to starting a suit with a view to obtaining a settlement. Plaintiff knew at that time that defendant was the owner of the dog. Defendant stated that he did not wish Bock to have any trouble in the matter and that he assumed all the responsibility. Plaintiff in his declaration sued on the theory that defendant was the owner and keeper of the dog. Held, plaintiff could not recover against defendant on the theory that the latter was estopped to deny liability.—Wetzel v. Bolster, 169 Mich. 43.

¶ 65. A declaration in an action under Comp. L. 1871, § 2065, How. St., § 2119, for an injury caused by a dog must aver that it was so caused and must set it forth under the statute.—Monroe v. Rose, 38 Mich. 347.

¶ 67. Whoever keeps an animal accustomed to attack and injure mankind, with knowledge that it is so accustomed, is prima facie liable in an action on the case at the suit of any person attacked and injured, without any averment of negligence or default in the securing and taking care of it; and the place of keeping need not be alleged.—Brooks v. Taylor, 65 Mich. 208.

¶ 68. A man was traveling the public highway in a sulky, driving with one hand, and with the other leading a mare that was followed by its colt. A dog rushed out of a house by the roadside and bit the colt, which jumped towards the sulky, put one leg through a wheel and upset it, whereby the man was injured. Held, that whether, under Comp. L. 1871, § 2065, How. St., § 2119, the man could have recovered at all for his personal injury, he could not do so without distinctly averring that the injury was caused by the dog, and setting it forth as a cause of action under the statute, and without such claim in his declaration evidence of his personal injury is inadmissible.—Monroe v. Rose, 38 Mich. 347.

¶ 69. In an action for damages for personal injuries resulting from being bitten by the defendant's dog the declaration is sufficient if it alleges the vicious character of the dog by which plaintiff was bitten, its liability to bite persons and defendant's knowledge as to such disposition.—French v. Wilkinson, 93 Mich. 322.

¶ 70. In a suit for personal injuries suffered from the bite of a dog, a declaration which states that defendant kept vicious and ferocious dogs, knowing said dogs were accustomed to attack and bite mankind, sufficiently alleges that the dog in question had a propensity to bite mankind.—Slater v. Sorge, 166 Mich. 173.

¶ 71. A declaration for the value of chickens alleged to have been killed by defendant's dog need not allege that defendant negligently allowed the dog to run at large: averments that defendant was the dog's "owner or possessor," and that he well knew it to be mischievous and in the habit of killing fowls, are sufficient.—Snow v. McCracken, 107 Mich. 49.

¶ 73. In an action for injuries to plaintiff, a child, from being bitten by a bear kept by defendant in grounds contiguous to defendant's hotel through which ran a driveway opened to and used by the public, where the declaration alleged that there were public grounds surrounding the hotel through the public was freely allowed to pass, and that plaintiff was passing through such grounds when bitten, it was immaterial that there was no evidence to support the superfluous allegation that the bears could seize persons within the driveway.—Marquet v. LaDuke, 96 Mich. 596.

¶ 74. One who keeps an untamed and savage bear in grounds frequented, with his acquiescence, by citizens, is charged with a greater degree of care than if the locality were more private; and evidence as to how the grounds are occupied and used is admissible in a suit to recover injuries received from being bitten by the bear, as bearing upon the question of defendant's negligence, and the alleged public character of the place. Marquet v. LaDuke, 96 Mich. 596.

¶ 75. In a suit for the injury of some colts by a dog, evidence to prove that plaintiff went to see the dog, and was denied the opportunity by defendant's wife, is admissible to show that plaintiff made efforts to find out whether the dog in question did the injury.—Meilke v. Schabble, 159 Mich. 163.

¶ 76. In an action for injuries to a child which was bitten by a bear alleged to have been kept by defendant upon premises occupied and controlled by him, evidence as to dealings with defendant for supplies for a hotel on such premises is admissible as tending to show his proprietorship.—Marquet v. LaDuke, 96 Mich. 596.

¶ 77. In a suit for the injury of some colts by defendant's dog, evidence to prove that no other dog in the township looked like the dog in question was admissible to establish defendant's dog as the one doing the mischief.—Meilke v. Schabble, 159 Mich. 163, 165.

¶ 79. In an action for injuries to a child which was bitten by a bear owned by defendant, and alleged to have been kept on grounds frequented by the public, evidence was properly admitted to show how the grounds where the bear was kept were occupied and used, as bearing on the question of defendant's negligence and the publicity of the place.—Marquet v. LaDuke, 96 Mich. 596.

¶ 80. That a driveway used by the public passed through defendant's grounds as is alleged in the declaration in an action for injuries to a child from being bitten by a bear kept by defendant in grounds contiguous to such driveway, was sufficiently supported by evidence that a driveway having the gate at one end had been put through the grounds for the convenience of people passing through who wanted to go to a hotel upon such grounds, which driveway was frequently used by persons, especially footmen, going from one street to the other.—Marquet v. LaDuke, 96 Mich. 596.

¶ 81. In an action for damages from being bitten by a dog an instruction that there was no evidence to show that defendant kept the dog, but that on the contrary it belonged to her husband, or at all events that he was the keeper of it, would preclude any finding that the defendant was the keeper of the dog.—Robb v. Shephard, 50 Mich. 189.

See also ante ¶¶ 58, 59.

Declaration by former owner as to viciousness of dog, admissibility, see Evidence, VII, C.

¶ 82. In a suit for personal injuries from the bite of a dog, it is not necessary in order to establish the vicious character of the animal to prove that it had previously bitten some person, since it is sufficient to show that the dog on previous occasions had manifested, to the knowledge of defendant, a disposition to bite mankind.—Slater v. Sorge, 166 Mich. 173.

¶ 83. If a person has a dog in his possession for a considerable length of time, during all which time the dog has been in the habit of rushing into the highway in front of the owner's residence, and barking at, chasing, worrying or attacking passing teams in a ferocious manner, it is for the jury to find whether the owner was aware of such habit, or, if not, whether he was negligent in not being so aware; and the facts may be such that they may well find that he ought to have known it, and from such facts imply notice to him; and the length of time such habit is shown to have existed has an important bearing upon the decision of this question.—Knowles v. Mulder, 74 Mich. 202.

¶ 84. In a suit for the injury of some colts by a dog, where plaintiff must prove the scienter, evidence is admissible to prove that shortly after the injury plaintiff went to see the dog, and was denied the opportunity by defendant's servant, in defendant's hearing.—Meilke v. Schabble, 159 Mich. 163.

¶ 86. In an action for damages on account of the death of a servant alleged to have been caused by the kick of a vicious mule, evidence on the part of those familiar with horses and mules as to the demeanor, appearance of the eyes and their movements is admissible to show that the mule is vicious and the knowledge thereof among defendant's servants.—Robbins v. Magoon & Kimball Co., 193 Mich. 200.

¶ 88. A witness testified to having visited defendant's store on one occasion, and that the dog, without provocation, set upon witness and chased him about the store, until defendant spoke to the dog and quieted him. Held, that it was competent for defendant, for the purpose of showing that this attack of the dog was playful, and not vicious, to show that boys were accustomed to come into the store and play with the dog.—Kennett v. Engle, 105 Mich. 693.

¶ 89. In an action before a justice against the owner of a dog for injury done by the dog to a quantity of meat, it was not improper to receive testimony as to the dog's vicious character and roving propensities as having some bearing on the probabilities.—Cheney v. Russell, 44 Mich. 620.

¶ 90. In an action for personal injuries against the owner of a dog which ran into a road and caused the plaintiff to be thrown from his buggy, testimony of the general peaceable disposition of the dog is inadmissible where the plaintiff testified concerning previous specific acts and scienter.—Willet v. Goetz, 125 Mich. 581.

See also generally Instructions; Trial, VI.

¶ 91. An instruction that the defendant was the keeper of a dog which bit plaintiff is proper, where, although plaintiff claimed that her adult son owned the dog, it appeared that the son lived with plaintiff upon premises entirely controlled by her, and that the only home which the dog had was upon such premises.—Jenkinson v. Coggins, 123 Mich. 7.

¶ 92. An instruction in an action for damages resulting from cattle running at large, that "if you find as a matter of fact that . . . the defendant, drove his cattle from a field upon his farm into the highway for the purpose of having them enter another field on the opposite side of the highway, where he had a pasture, the question then for you to consider would be, whether in doing that act he exercised reasonable care in taking the cattle from one field to the other. In determining that question you will consider the number of cattle that he had in charge that morning (if you find that he was in charge of the cattle), the character of the cattle, and the time when they were driven into the road by him, the time in the morning, the extent of the travel in the cross-road, in determining the question of reasonable care on his part," was as favorable to defendant as he was entitled.—Shipley v. Colclough, 81 Mich. 624.

¶ 93. In a suit for the injury of some colts by defendant's dog, an instruction is correct which states that defendant must be held to have had notice of the vicious habits of the dog if, by reasonable care and attention, he might have discovered them.—Meilke v. Schabble, 159 Mich. 163.

Killing of dogs for the protection of domestic animals, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 7269-7273.

¶ 95. One is justified in protecting himself from a nuisance occasioned by dogs congregating on his lawn at night and annoying him by barking, etc.—Hubbard v. Preston, 90 Mich. 221.

¶ 96. Killing a valuable dog is not justified merely because the dog barks around one's house at night, leaves tracks on a freshly-painted porch, chases cats into trees and has been found in a hen-house, where, however, it did no damage.—Bowers v. Horen, 93 Mich. 420.

¶ 97. One upon whose uninclosed land a dog goes from the highway is not justified in killing such dog, even though he believes it is about to destroy growing plants, and though he has been subjected to similar annoyances from other dogs.—Ten Hopen v. Walker, 96 Mich. 236.

¶ 98. Where a cow, going on unfenced lands, was injured by being driven off by a dog set on by the owner of the land it was held the owner was not liable for the injury, unless there was something in the size, character or habits of the dog, or in the mode of setting him on or pursuing which would negative the idea of ordinary care and prudence.—Wood v. La Rue, 9 Mich. 158.

¶ 99. An owner of sheep has the right without incurring liability, to have a dog killed which he was informed was on his premises unaccompanied by any person, and which he had been told had killed sheep belonging to others, and which he had also, some days prior to the killing, seen chasing his own sheep.—Throne v. Mead, 122 Mich. 278.

¶ 101. The fact that the declaration in an action for the killing of a dog, described him as "a certain beagle hound" while the proof showed the killing of a cross between a beagle and a common hound, is not such variance as will require that the case be taken from the jury, since there is nothing to show that such dog is not properly described as a "beagle hound."—O'Neil v. Newman, 132 Mich. 489.

¶ 102. It is for the jury to determine whether one is justified in killing a dog while protecting himself from a nuisance occasioned by such and other dogs congregating on his lawn at night and annoying him by barking, etc.—Hubbard v. Preston, 90 Mich. 221.

¶ 104. In an action for the killing of a dog, the defense being that the dog was a trespasser and was chasing defendant's sheep, where one of plaintiff's witnesses testified that he saw the killing and that there were no sheep in the inclosure where the dog was killed but that they were in an adjoining field and were feeding, the question is one for the jury.—O'Neil v. Newman, 132 Mich. 489.

¶ 105. As to the validity and effect of that provision of Pub. L. 1885, Act No. 182, which authorizes the destruction of sound animals because of their exposure to contagious disease, quere.—Shipman v. State Live-Stock Sanitary Commission, 115 Mich. 488.

¶ 106. The state live-stock sanitary commission, by the terms of the act under which it is organized (Pub. Acts 1885, No. 182; How St., chap. 61a), has the exclusive right to determine whether animals are so diseased as to require their destruction, and to ascertain, for the purpose of compensation to the owner, the value of animals condemned, subject only to the governor's approval; and its findings will not be reviewed by the courts.—Shipman v. State Live-Stock Sanitary Commission, 115 Mich. 488.

¶ 107. Where live stock is condemned as diseased under Pub. Acts 1885, No. 182, § 9, and appraised to be killed, the value of the animals in their diseased condition is the measure of the owner's right to compensation.—Shipman v. State Live-Stock Sanitary Commission, 115 Mich. 488.

Liability for spread of disease among domestic animals, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 138, §§ 7307-7365.

¶ 110. The sale of hogs known to be infected with a dangerous and infectious disease constituted a wrong imminently dangerous to human life, and the principle extended the liability of the seller to damages for the loss of the hogs in question which were purchased by plaintiff from the firm to whom the hogs were sold, and to damages for the loss of plaintiff's sound swine which became infected and died.—Skinn v. Reutter, 135 Mich. 57.

¶ 111. The rule that one is not responsible for consequences resulting from the wrongful act of another, had no application to an action for damages for the loss of swine, where plaintiff claimed that defendants sold certain hogs to a firm of live-stock dealers knowing that they were afflicted with a dangerous and infectious disease, without notifying such firm of the fact, and that said firm in ignorance of the fact that the hogs were infected, sold them to plaintiffs, who without negligence placed such hogs with their sound swine.—Skinn v. Reutter, 135 Mich. 57.

¶ 112. Under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 191, §§ 2 and 3, requiring the State Veterinary Board to issue certificates to graduates of regular veterinary colleges, the board has no discretion to determine the standing of a veterinary school organized under Comp. L. 1897, § 8143, which provides that every diploma granted by such college shall entitle the possessor to all immunities allowed by statute or usage to any such institution.—Wise v. State Veterinary Board, 138 Mich. 428.

¶ 113. One holding himself out as a veterinary surgeon undertakes that he possesses ordinary professional skill, and therefore, in an action for services rendered in such capacity, it devolves upon him to prove his qualification, at least so long as his right to practice is not regulated by statute.—Conkey v. Carpenter, 106 Mich. 1.

¶ 114. In an action for professional veterinary services, where there are no statutory regulations, the burden resting upon plaintiff of establishing his qualification to practice may be discharged by showing his graduation from some reputable college or school, whereby a presumption of competency is created, or by proving his study and experience. There is a like presumption of qualification where one has been admitted to practice under the laws of the state; but whether such a statute existing plaintiff will be presumed to have been authorized to practice thereunder or must prove the fact, quere.—Conkey v. Carpenter, 106 Mich. 1.

¶ 116. A horse, left at a livery-stable over night, got untied and ate from a convenient bag of corn. In the morning his owner did not water him, but drove him eighteen miles in the heat, and the horse became injured. Held, that the stable-keeper could be held responsible in case, only if it was found that he was guilty of negligence, and that the owner of the horse had not contributed to the injury, either in fastening the horse or in improperly driving him.—Dennis v. Huyck, 48 Mich. 620.

¶ 117. Under How. St., § 8399, providing that whenever any person shall deliver to any person any horse, etc., to be kept or cared for, such person shall have a lien thereon for the keeping and care of such animal, and may retain possession of the same until such charges are paid, it is a jury question whether there was such authority from the owner that a lien will attach, where one not the owner delivers a horse under an express agreement for its board, having had possession of the horse from the owner under a like agreement.—Elliott v. Martin, 105 Mich. 506.

¶ 118. Where an owner of a barn allowed another to keep his horses in such barn and furnished feed for them on the promise that he should be paid for it, but did not care for or feed the horses except on certain Sundays when the teamster employed to feed and care for them regularly was absent, no lien was created in favor of the owner of the barn, under section 10746, 3 Comp. L. 1897, for stable rent and the value of the feed furnished, for the reason that there was no delivery of the horses to him to be kept and cared for.—Erickson v. Lampi, 150 Mich. 92.

¶ 120. Plaintiff is entitled to recover as against defendant his interest in a colt the foal of a mare purchased by defendant five weeks before the colt was dropped; where the evidence shows that plaintiff's claim rested upon an executed agreement with the former owner of the mare, whereby plaintiff was to pay for the breeding of the mare and receive in return therefor a one-half interest in the colt when old enough to wean, and that defendant purchased the mare with full knowledge of such agreement.—Dorris v. Rice, 45 Mich. 216.

¶ 121. The owner of a stallion was sued for the value of a mare that was ruined by service per rectum. Held error to require plaintiff to show that such service was due to defendant's negligence; the inference would be that it was.—Peer v. Ryan, 54 Mich. 224.

ANNUITIES.

TREATS of stipulated sums to be paid yearly or periodically as a personal charge and not as rent or as the income of a trust or an estate, excluding interpretation of wills creative of annuities (see Wills, VI, D).

¶ 1. An "annual annuity" so called means the same as annuity defined by How. St., § 2, subd. 1, and is not apportionable, and if the annuitant dies before the time for a payment no part of such payment can be recovered even though the annuitant was indebted, when he died, for former years.—Chase v. Darby, 110 Mich. 314.

¶ 2. Where a devisee accepts property charged with the payment of an annuity, he becomes liable for the payment of such annuity and an action may be maintained for the same.—Stringer v. Stevens' Estate, 146 Mich. 181.

¶ 3. Interest upon arrearages of annuities is allowable only where the annuity is for the support of a wife or child and a lien upon the land, and will be allowed upon the unpaid instalments made for the support of the testator's widow.—Stringer v. Stevens' Estate, 146 Mich. 181.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

TREATS of the general law of civil appellate procedure by appeal and on writ of error, except the doctrine of Harmless Error, which see, and the practice and procedure in the trial court to save the objection for review by objecting, procuring a ruling, and excepting thereto (see Saving Questions for Review), and except appeals from minor courts to the circuit court (see Justices of the Peace; Probate Courts) and statutory appeals from special proceedings and proceedings of nonjudicial officers (see Eminent Domain; Highways; Local Improvements; Drains; Schools). Review by Certiorari and Mandamus is treated in those topics and writs of error to sentences for crime are treated in Indictment and Prosecution, XVI.

[Note. In many respects the nature of the review on appeal and the principles applicable are the same in appeal as in error. Because of this both modes of review have been treated in this topic, but care has been taken to differentiate them throughout the topic by means of appropriate wording of the division lines and section lines, so that matter peculiar to either mode may easily be identified in the analytical index which follows, as well as in the body of the paragraphs.]

I. THE RIGHT AND THE REMEDY TO OBTAIN REVIEW.

§ 1. Right to review; policy of the law.

Party entitled to writ of error or appeal, see post IV.
Waiver or loss of right, see post V.
The right to assign or urge an error when the cause is before the court depends on the relation of the party to the appeal or writ of error. Generally the plaintiff in error or the appellant alone can do so. See post XI, D.
General procedure to obtain appeal or writ of error, see post VI.
Filing bond and payment of fees as condition, see post VI, C.

¶ 1. Any proceeding, however called, whereby private rights are seriously affected or wrongfully divested is reviewable in some form.—First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. E. T. Barnum Wire & Iron Works, 58 Mich. 315.

¶ 2. The right to appeal from one court to another is not a constitutional one.—Kundinger v. City of Saginaw, 59 Mich. 335.

¶ 3. The right to an appeal is statutory, and the legislature may prescribe in what cases, and under what circumstances, and from what courts, appeals may be taken; and unless the statute expressly or by plain implication provides for an appeal, none can be taken.—Sullivan v. Haug, 82 Mich. 548.

¶ 4. The authority for an appeal from one court to another must be found either in the constitution or in a statute.—Sparrow v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 272.

¶ 8. The right of appeal is purely statutory, and it is within the power of the legislature to determine to what extent that right shall exist and under what restrictions.—J. F. Hartz Co. v. Lukaszcewski, 200 Mich. 230.

¶ 10. Where a special and extraordinary jurisdiction not following the common law is created by statute, no appeal can be taken therefrom unless expressly provided by statute.—Lorimer v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 116 Mich. 682.

¶ 11. The right of appeal is absolute, and the case must be so disposed of below as to permit a complete disposition of it on appeal.—Hewlett v. Shaw, 9 Mich. 346.

¶ 13. The provisions of Comp. Laws 1915, § 13736, as amended by Pub. Acts 1917, No. 172, providing that writs of error upon any final judgment or determination where the judgment exceeds $500 may issue of course out of the supreme court, and in all other cases may issue in the discretion of the court, upon application, applies as to the right of review where a judgment was rendered before the amendment took effect, but appellate proceedings had not been instituted in the supreme court before it took effect, since the previous statutory right of review in such cases was but a mere privilege not amounting to a vested right beyond legislative control.—J. F. Hartz Co. v. Lukaszcewski, 200 Mich. 230.

¶ 14. A judgment of no cause of action against plaintiff in an action to recover the sum of $500 is not a case "where the judgment exceeds in amount five hundred dollars," warranting a writ of error as a matter of right on a final judgment of the trial court within Comp. Laws 1915, § 13736, as amended by Pub. Acts 1917, No. 172.—J. F. Hartz Co. v. Lukaszcewksi, 200 Mich. 230.

¶ 15. Although it is regrettable that parties should resort to expensive litigation over the trivial matter of 50 cents a head damages for impounding trespasser's 16 hogs, yet where the defendant brought his appeal to the supreme court, his claim to have the controversy decided by the appropriate rules of law could not be denied.—Miller v. Hoffman, 135 Mich. 319.

¶ 16. On the grounds of public policy litigants should be encouraged to accept as final the decisions of courts of original jurisdiction.—Hoste v. Dalton, 137 Mich. 522.

§ 2. Appeal or error as proper remedy.

Statutory source of appellate jurisdiction, see post § 9.
When case made rather than error is proper, see post § 5.
When mandamus or other extraordinary remedy or motion should be resorted to, see post § 3.
For judgments reviewable by writ of error, see also generally post III.
Probate proceedings in circuit on appeal from probate court, see post §§ 27-30.
Character of errors reviewable and practice on and scope of review, see post XII.
General provisions as to writs of error and appeals, see Jud. Act, Chap. L; Comp. L. 1915, § 13736 et seq.

¶ 17. Where a common-law form of reviewing statutory proceedings does not exist, or is not resorted to, the conditions and form of appeal depend entirely upon statute, and cannot be changed or aided by judicial action.—People's Ice Co. v. The Excelsior, 43 Mich. 336.

¶ 18. All questions in probate proceedings that are reviewable by the supreme court are removable thereto on writ of error, there being no provision for appealing such proceedings to that court, as in chancery.—In re Mower's Appeal, 48 Mich. 441.

¶ 19. The proceeding under How. St., §§ 8742-8747, to establish a claim against an assignor, is put by the statute on the footing of a common-law suit and on review the supreme court is not authorized to find or determine facts.—Forncrook Mfg. Co. v. Barnum Wire & Iron Works, 63 Mich. 195.

chanic's lien under Comp. L. 1871, chap. 215, How. St., chap. 290, except by virtue of Laws 1873, p. 119, How. St., §§ 8409-8411, which excludes any other mode of review, or rule or course of proceeding on appeal, than is provided by law in relation to appeals in ordinary chancery cases; the finding of a jury, therefore, in such proceedings, instead of being decisive as at common law, is a mere provisional and assistant inquisition analogous to a verdict or a feigned issued in chancery, and, as the court may ignore it, points raised upon the charge to the jury, rulings, etc., will not be considered.—Willard v. Magoon, 30 Mich. 273.

§ 3. Mandamus, certiorari, motion or petition as remedy.

To review judgments based on appeal from justice, see also post § 25.

Since appeal or writ of error lies only to final decrees and judgments and such orders or decrees as have been made reviewable by statute through one of those remedies, it follows that there are numerous rulings and orders which must be reached by the compulsory process of mandamus or by motion or petition in the trial court for their correction. As to these, see generally Mandamus; New Trial; Motions and Orders; Equity, XI (revivor and supplement, etc.); Judgments, V, VI (amendments and proceedings for relief); Pleading, IV, VI.

In mandamus cases the rule that the writ will not issue if the remedy by appeal or writ of error is available and adequate has evoked numerous decisions that mandamus will not lie because in the given case there is a remedy by appeal or error. These decisions are to be found in Mandamus, I, and a similar class of cases may be found in Certiorari.

For proceedings not according to the course of common law and lacking or exceeding the jurisdiction asserted the remedy is ordinarily Certiorari or Prohibition, which see. A statutory certiorari may also be given where a common-law certiorari would not issue. See Certiorari and also specific topics, such as Drains; Justices of the Peace; etc., treating of the proceedings made reviewable by statutory certiorari.

Prohibition will issue where it appears that action may be taken for which appeal will not afford an adequate remedy. See Prohibition.

Dismissal or error because wrong party was brought in instead of deceased party, see also Abatement, ¶ 96.

¶ 21. Error does not lie to review proceedings that are not according to the course of the common law, or substantially analogous thereto.—Holbrook v. Cook, 5 Mich. 225; Cross v. People, 8 Mich. 113; Conrad v. Button, 28 Mich. 365; Cameron v. Bentley, 28 Mich. 520; Faust v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 30 Mich. 266; Churchill v. Burt, 32 Mich. 490; Smith v. Lapeer County Superintendents of Poor, 34 Mich. 58; Fletcher v. Clark, 39 Mich. 374; In re Brinsmade's Appeal, 52 Mich. 537; Knorr v. Millard, 52 Mich. 542; Gore v. Ray, 69 Mich. 114.

¶ 22. It is not enough that the proceedings were had in a court that ordinarily and primarily exercises common-law jurisdiction.—Holbrook v. Cook, 5 Mich. 225.

¶ 23. Error lies rather than mandamus where the error is disclosed on the record, as where the grounds for dimissing an appeal are stated in the order.—Stall v. Diamond, 37 Mich. 429.

¶ 24. An erroneous judgment that a party recover his costs to be taxed, should be reviewed on error, and in no other way, whatever be the rule as to reviewing retaxation by mandamus.—Luther v. Kent Circuit Judge, 151 Mich. 71; Schmidt v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 136 Mich. 658.

¶ 25. A defeated party in the circuit court on appeal from a justice who complains of the amount of costs taxed against him must seek relief by mandamus and not writ of error.—Marr v. Cook, 147 Mich. 425.

¶ 26. An order overruling a plea in abatement should be reviewed by certiorari under Act No. 310, Pub. Acts 1905, How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 12737, 12738, instead of by writ of error.—City of Sault Ste. Marie v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 184 Mich. 681.

¶ 28. Refusal by the circuit court of leave to appeal from a justice's judgment, under How. St., § 7005, is not reviewable by the supreme court except upon mandamus and in case of abuse of discretion.—Vincent v. Bowes, 78 Mich. 315.

¶ 29. Where the circuit court in its discretion refuses to assume jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice court after the lapse of five days from the entry of the judgment, mandamus and not error is the proper method for review.—Huddleston v. Charles Amos & Co., 180 Mich. 253.

¶ 30. Where testamentary trustees failed to qualify, and the probate court appointed others in their stead, proceeding does not arise after the course of the common law, and hence certiorari and not error is the proper remedy for review of the judgment of the circuit on appeal from the probate court.—In re Erdman's Estate, 179 Mich. 567.

¶ 31. Proceedings in the probate court for the discharge of the guardian of an incompetent person and on appeal to the circuit court, where, in both instances, issues of fact are tried by a jury, are in conformity with the rules of common law and may be reviewed by the supreme court by writ of error instead of by writ of certiorari.—In re Stroebel, 194 Mich. 634; appeal of Runge, Id.

¶ 32. The distinction between the common writs of error, writs of error coram nobis, and writs of error coram vobis, explained.—Teller v. Wetherell, 6 Mich. 46.

§ 5. Case made or writ of error and exceptions.

Character of review and questions reviewable, see post §§ 254, 276, 463.

Contents and sufficiency of case made, see post §§ 105, 196.

Dimissal for defects in case made, see post § 163.

Nature of judgment, and propriety of final judgment, remand, or modification, see post XIII.

Waiver of case made by resort to bill, see post § 8.

Case made, see Jud. Act, chap. I, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 12014.

¶ 34. A party has his election to rely upon his exceptions or to make and settle a case.—Richardson v. Yawkey, 9 Mich. 139.

¶ 35. The practice of resorting to "case made" is quite as appropriate as that by writ of error to review the action of a circuit judge.—Wheeler v. Wilkins, 19 Mich. 78.

¶ 36. A case may be made to review the error of permitting a plaintiff to take an inquest under Circuit Court Rule 99 when he had no right to do so, a proper affidavit of merits having been filed and served.—Wells v. Booth, 35 Mich. 424.

¶ 37. Case made will lie to bring up an order setting aside a capias ad respondendum and directing judgment for defendant.—Watson v. Watson, 47 Mich. 427.

¶ 38. Exceptions to rulings on the admission of evidence can be reviewed on case made as well as on bill of exceptions.—Soper v. Fry, 37 Mich. 236.

¶ 39. Case made does not lie to review the proceedings in taking judgment on default and an assessment of damages by the clerk.—Beeson v. Hollister, 11 Mich. 193.

§ 6. Cases and questions reservable or certifiable.

Certificates of question, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 12014.

¶ 40. The circuit court could reserve for the opinion of the supreme court questions of law only, and not questions of fact, or questions involving both law and fact.—People v. Adwards, 5 Mich. 22; Bagg v. City of Detroit, 5 Mich. 66; English v. Fairchild, 5 Mich. 141; Clark v. Dorr, 5 Mich. 143.

¶ 41. Questions of law could be reserved in equity cases.—Bagg v. City of Detroit, 5 Mich. 66.

¶ 42. The questions reserved for the opinion of the supreme court had to be purely legal ones, and were required to be presented directly and definitely.—Bagg v. City of Detroit, 5 Mich. 66; English v. Fairchild, 5 Mich. 141; Clark v. Dorr, 5 Mich. 143.

¶ 43. Where trial was had by jury, and various objections were raised as to the admissibility of evidence and to its sufficiency, and the party objecting conceded that the opposite party was entitled to judgment if the objections were not well taken, and the whole case was thereupon reserved for the opinion of the supreme court upon the objections so taken, it was held that the court had no jurisdiction.—English v. Fairchild, 5 Mich. 141; Clark v. Dorr, 5 Mich. 143.

¶ 44. The statute did not intend that questions should be reserved unless the judge below had well-founded doubts upon them, save where they were new and of public importance.—Bagg v. City of Detroit, 5 Mich. 66.

¶ 45. It was no objection to the jurisdiction of the supreme court, on questions reserved, that the same questions could afterwards come up on exceptions or appeal.—Bagg v. City of Detroit, 5 Mich. 66.

§ 7. Nature of remedy; new suit or continuation of old.

Nature of the review afforded by the several remedies, see generally post XII.

Nature of the procedure to obtain review and to preserve questions and record for review, see generally post, VI, XI.

Nature of the decision on review, see post XIII.

Trial de novo of chancery cases, see post XII, H.

¶ 46. In Michigan a writ of error is not the institution of a new suit, but is a carrying on of the original proceeding.—Baumgarth v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 159 Mich. 207.

§ 8. Election and waiver of methods.

Waiver and estoppel to urge errors, see post XI, D.

Right to reserve questions that might come up otherwise, see ante ¶ 45.

¶ 47. By procuring and filing a bill of exceptions one precludes himself from having a review by case made.—Richardson v. Yawkey, 9 Mich. 139.

¶ 48. A writ of error sued out after case is settled is a waiver of the case.—Hatch v. White, 18 Mich. 194.

II. APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

§ 9. In general; statutory source.

Transfer from lower to supreme court by appeal or error, see post IX.

Jurisdiction of courts in general, see Courts, V.

Jurisdiction of supreme court generally, and supervisory control over lower courts, see Jud. Act, chap. I. § 9. Comp. L. 1915, § 12014.

¶ 49. The jurisdiction over appeals is entirely statutory.—Weed v. Lyon, W. 77; Demaray v. Little, 17 Mich. 386; Maxfield v. Freeman, 39 Mich. 64; Cady v. Centreville Knit Goods Mfg. Co., 48 Mich. 133.

§ 10. Over what courts, cases or errors.

Presumption as to jurisdiction below, see post § 361.

Review of facts and conclusions thereon in chancery and in law cases, see post XII, E.

Reserved questions, see also ante ¶ 43.

¶ 50. The Supreme Court has jurisdiction of errors of fact as well as of errors of law.—Teller v. Wetherell, 6 Mich. 46.

¶ 51. A writ of error did not lie from the Supreme to a county court in civil cases.—Hiney v. Cade, 1 Mich. 163.

¶ 52. The jurisdiction to entertain an appeal is not affected by the question whether or not the charges made turn out on hearing to need redress, or the particular redress asked for.—First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. E. T. Barnum Wire & Iron Works, 58 Mich. 315.

§ 11. Timeliness and requisite procedure.

General procedure to take appeal or error, see post VI.

Necessity that judgment be entered, see post § 34.

Time for filing bond, see post § 81.

Payment of fees, see post § 89.

Return and filings in Supreme Court, see post VII.

Dismissal for delay in proceedings, see post X.

Time for moving dismissal where jurisdiction of appeal did not attach, see post § 145, §625, § 146, § 636.

Appellate jurisdiction as restricted to review on the record, see post XII, B, 1.

¶ 53. When an appeal is not taken within the statutory time, and there is no provision for enlarging the time, there is no jurisdiction to hear it.—Portage Lake & L. S. Ship Canal Co. v. Haas, 20 Mich. 328.

¶ 54. Where a statute provides that a bond must be given within a certain number of days after entering a claim of appeal, a compliance with the statute, within the time specified, is necessary to give the appellate court jurisdiction of the appeal.—Canfield v. The City of Erie, 21 Mich. 160.

¶ 55. The Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to consider an appeal in a cause wherein the settlement of the case was delayed, without the fault of the circuit court or its officers, until the statutory time for settlement, including extensions, had expired, even though the delay was with the appellee's acquiescence.—Waterman v. Bailey, 111 Mich. 571.

¶ 56. The right of appeal is statutory and unless taken within the time fixed by statute the appellate court does not acquire jurisdiction.—Bolton v. Cummings, 200 Mich. 234.

¶ 57. Where a chancery appeal is not taken within the time prescribed by Act 299. Pub. Acts 1909, How. 2nd Ed., § 12071, the Supreme Court is without jurisdiction, and the appeal should be dismissed.—Foster v. Foster, 176 Mich. 379.

Making questions by consent, see post § 260.

Consent to ruling on demurrer for purpose of appeal, see post ¶¶ 136, 155.

Default or consent decree, see post § 37.

Consent to appeal after time, see also ante ¶ 58.

Consent to extension of time for settling case or bill, see post § 95.

Consent to hearing of particular objection, see post § 260.

Nonwaiver of jurisdictional error, see post § 225.

¶ 59. As the right to an appeal depends upon the statute, jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent of parties, and the requirements of the statute must be complied with.—Waterman v. Bailey, 111 Mich. 571.

¶ 60. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court on error cannot be abridged by any stipulation whereby the parties seek to limit the principle of decision and exclude legal considerations.—Watts v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 47 Mich. 540.

III. JUDGMENTS OR DECREES ON WHICH REMEDIES LIE.

A. CHARACTER OF SUIT, ACTION OR PROCEEDING.

§ 13. In general; ex parte proceedings.

The action or proceeding must not only be such as is reviewable by writ of error or by appeal, but also it must have passed into a "final" judgment disposing of the cause in the lower court. As to this principle, see post III, B.

If the proceeding is not according to the course of common law, writ of error does not lie, and recourse must be had to certiorari, mandamus, motion, petition, etc. See ante § 3.

What are proceedings "according to the course of common law," see generally post this division §§ 16-30.

Dismissal or affirmance on hearing for want of reviewable question, see post § 480.

Interpleader proceedings, see also post ¶ 145.

Restriction of the questions reviewed by the judgment and matters involved in it or accompanying it, see post XII, B, 2.

¶ 61. An appeal in equity cannot be taken unless someone appears on the record as responsible to the adverse party for costs.—Attorney General v. Hane, 50 Mich. 447.

¶ 61a. A proceeding not litigious in character, such as one for the dissolution of a corporation, is not a "cause" in chancery which is appealable.—Cady v. Centreville Knit Goods Co., 48 Mich. 133.

¶ 62. Although not specially given by statute, there is a right of appeal from an order of sale which, in effect, ends proceedings under the statute regulating assignments for creditors.—First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. E. T. Barnum Wire & Iron Works, 58 Mich. 315.

¶ 63. Under Comp. L. 1871, chap. 215, no appeal lies from statutory proceedings to enforce the liens of mechanics, etc., who, by contract with the owner, etc., of lands, had furnished labor or materials for constructing or repairing any building, etc., upon such lands.—Clark v. Raymond, 26 Mich. 415.

Review on appeal from judgment, see post § 288.

¶ 64. An order of the circuit court granting the prayer of a petition for the transfer of a cause pending therein to the federal court is reviewable on writ of error.—Crane v. Reeder, 28 Mich. 527.

Finality of orders, see post § 32.

Scope of questions open on error, see post § 300.

Judgments in garnishment, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 42; Comp. L. 1915. § 13163.

¶ 65. Error does not lie on the affirmance by the circuit court of a commissioner's order dissolving an attachment.—Gray v. York, 44 Mich. 415.

¶ 66. How. St., § 8030, does not authorize an appeal from the order of a circuit judge made on the hearing of an application to dissolve an attachment, but is confined to circuit court commissioners.—Harvey v. Pealer, 63 Mich. 572.

¶ 67. A proceeding to dissolve an attachment is a special one, not according to the course of the common law, and error does not lie to review it.—Gore v. Ray, 69 Mich. 114.

¶ 68. An order collateral to a suit in garnishment, requiring plaintiff to pay back the amount received from the garnishee to the real creditors permitted to assume defense, is not a judgment and does not support a writ of error.—First Nat. Bank v. Mellen, 45 Mich. 413.

Person aggrieved and entitled to appeal, see post § 36, ¶ 144.

Scope of review questions open, see post § 306.

¶ 69. An order adjudging a party guilty of contempt, and imposing a fine and costs for violating an injunction, is appealable.—People ex rel. Messler v. Simonson, 9 Mich. 492; Romeyn v. Caplis, 17 Mich. 449.

¶ 70. An order adjudging a defendant in a divorce suit guilty of contempt for nonpayment of alimony, and imposing a fine, and in default ordering him to stand committed is appealable.—Haines v. Haines, 35 Mich. 138.

¶ 71. An appeal lies from an order committing a defendant for contempt in refusing to pay temporary alimony.—Ross v. Ross, 47 Mich. 185.

¶ 72. A commitment for contempt in violating an injunction is appealable.—People ex rel. Port Huron G. R. Co. v. Jones, 33 Mich. 303; People v. Simonson, 10 Mich. 335.

¶ 73. The determination of a circuit judge refusing to punish for contempt will not be reviewed on appeal.—Rasch v. Sheppard, 105 Mich. 667; People ex rel. Dean v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 137 Mich. 673, on authority of Schwab v. Coots, 44 Mich. 463.

Proper form of review, appeal, error or mandamus, see ante § 3.
Review with judgment, see post § 292.
Taxation of costs as improper matter in bill of exceptions, see post § 102.
Retaxation proceedings as foreign matter in record, see post § 99, ¶ 460.

¶ 74. Writ of error is not the proper remedy to review the taxation of costs, or the action of the circuit court upon appeal from such taxation.—Abbott v. Matthews, 26 Mich. 176; Lorman v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 33 Mich. 65.

§ 19. Extraordinary actions; habeas corpus, mandamus, certiorari, etc.

Reviewableness of judgment on habeas corpus, see Habeas Corpus.

¶ 75. At the common law a judgment on habeas corpus was not reviewable by appeal or on writ of error.—People v. Fairman, 59 Mich. 568; People v. Conant, 59 Mich. 565.

¶ 76. Neither at common law nor by virtue of statute does a writ of error lie to review habeas corpus proceedings.—In re Brock, 144 Mich. 42.

¶ 77. The decision of the circuit court on habeas corpus discharging or remanding a prisoner held on a civil capias is reviewable on error.—In re Hicks, 20 Mich. 129.

¶ 78. Proceedings on habeas corpus before a circuit judge at chambers are not reviewable on error.—People ex rel, Faust v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 30 Mich. 266.

¶ 79. Proceedings upon information filed on leave, in circuit court, to try title to office, may be taken by either party to supreme court on error.—Vrooman v. Mitchie, 69 Mich. 42.

Decrees in assignment proceedings in chancery, see post § 53.
Bastardy proceedings, see Bastards; Certiorari.
Appealability of tax proceedings generally, see Taxes, VI, B; and see also Local Improvements.
Decree in proceedings to dissolve corporation, see Jud. Act, chap. XL, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 13567.

¶ 80. In proceedings which are purely statutory, and not after the course of the common law, a writ of error will not lie.—Hartz v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 164 Mich. 231.

¶ 81. Proceedings in equity for the voluntary dissolution of corporations are not adverse proceedings, and are not appealable on the footing of chancery appeals. The general statute confines appeals to "causes," and does not include special proceedings not litigious.—Cady v. Centreville Knit Goods Mfg. Co., 48 Mich. 133.

¶ 82. Statutory proceedings to compel a son to support his mother are not reviewable on error.—Smith v. Lapeer County Superintendents of Poor, 34 Mich. 58.

¶ 83. Proceedings under Laws 1872, Act No. 57, How. St., § 1253, on an appeal to the circuit court from the auditor general's assessment of specific taxes are not judicial, and cannot be reviewed on error.—Auditor General v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 34 Mich. 59.

Questions open to review, see post § 303.
As to judgments on arbitration, see Jud. Act, chap. XLV, §§ 16, 17, Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13661, 13662.

¶ 84. Error does not lie on a judgment upon an award rendered by arbitrators under a statutory submission, where the submission is in due form, and the award is one that could have been lawfully made.—Cooper v. Andrews, 44 Mich. 94.

§ 22. Condemnation and highway proceedings.

Appeals from awards in eminent domain proceedings, see Eminent Domain, VIII.
Appeal from official location of highways or from awards of damages therein, see Highways, II, B.

§ 23. Proceedings before boards and commissions.

Appeals from assessments of taxes and local assessments, see Taxes, VI; Local Improvements, VII.

Review of proceedings of State Railroad Commission, see Public Service.

Review of decisions under Workmen's Compensation Act, see Workmen's Compensation Law.

§ 24. Prosecutions under municipal ordinances.

Being neither an indictment for crime nor an ordinary civil action reviewableness of a prosecution for violation of a municipal ordinance is specially treated in Municipal Corporations, XVI, B.

Finality of the judgment, see post § 33.

Questions open on error to judgment, see post § 302.

Appeal or certiorari from a justice to the circuit court is treated in Justices of the Peace, V, VI.

¶ 85. Entry of judgment on a transcript from a justice is not reviewable on writ of error; nor is the denial of a motion to vacate such judgment. If such proceedings are reviewable at all it is by certiorari.—Townsend v. Tudor, 41 Mich. 263.

¶ 86. Error, and not certiorari, is the proper remedy for reviewing a joint judgment against a principal and his sureties upon a bond, on an appeal of the cause from a justice's court.—Evers v. Sager, 28 Mich. 47.

¶ 87. Error is the proper remedy for reviewing the determination of the circuit in wrongfully dismissing an appeal from a justice's court for want of prosecution.—Willis v. Gimbert, 27 Mich. 91.

¶ 88. Error lies on the final disposition of a case in the circuit court on motion to dismiss an appeal from a justice.—McCombs v. Johnson, 47 Mich. 592.

§ 26. ——Forcible entry and summary proceedings.

Appeal from commissioner's decision in forcible entry cases, see Forcible Entry and Detainer, II.

¶ 89. When a proceeding to recover possession of lands under the statute "of forcible entries and detainers" is appealed to the circuit court, it becomes, in that court, a proceeding according to the course of the common law; and error is the only mode of reviewing, in the supreme court, the judgment of the circuit court.—Parker v. Copland, 4 Mich. 528.

¶ 90. Error and not certiorari is the proper means of reviewing an order of the circuit court dismissing on motion, for want of jurisdiction, a writ of certiorari from that court to a circuit court commissioner for the review of proceedings under the statute to recover possession of land.—Robens v. Videto, 33 Mich. 240.

§ 27. Proceedings on appeal from probate.

The right of appeal from orders, decrees and judgments of the probate courts to the circuit courts and the procedure to take such appeals is regulated by a statutory scheme unlike that of general appeals in important particulars. It is therefore treated in Probate Courts, III. and the practice and substantive matters which are peculiar to the several proceedings are treated in specific topics, such as Estates of Decedents; Wills; Guardianship.

Error rather than appeal is remedy to review probate matters, see ante ¶ 18.

Finality of orders, see post § 33.

Questions open on review of circuit judgment, see post § 301.

Appealable probate orders and decrees, see Probate Courts, III.

¶ 91. The judgment of a circuit court upon an appeal from a decision of a probate court, where the controversy involves issues analogous to suits at common law, may be reviewed in the supreme court by writ of error.—Labar v. Nichols, 22 Mich. 200.

§ 28. ——Administration proceedings.

Finality of the circuit judgment, see post § 33.

Ancillary receivership proceedings, see post § 57, ¶ 264, § 58, ¶ 272.

Proper amount of bond, see post § 83, ¶ 378.

¶ 92. Proceedings in the circuit court on appeal from the proceedings for the appointment or removal of an administrator are not reviewable on error.—Holbrook v. Cook, 5 Mich. 225; Conrad v. Button, 28 Mich. 365; In re Brinsmade's Appeal, 52 Mich. 537; Woolley v. Crane, 86 Mich. 360.

¶ 93. The affirmance by the circuit court of the dismissal by the probate court of a creditor's petition for the removal of an administratrix, which petition was met by plea and answer, the administratrix and her bondsman being discharged under the plea as upon a full accounting, is reviewable on a writ of error.—Peckham v. Hoag, 92 Mich. 423.

¶ 94. An order not according to the course of the common law, such as one requiring an executor to furnish a new bond and to render an account, is not reviewable on writ of error.—In re Sanborn's Appeal, 107 Mich. 189.

¶ 95. Error will not lie to review an affirmance by the circuit court of an order of the probate to extend the time of a commission and pass upon a claim.—Churchill v. Burt, 32 Mich. 490.

¶ 96. An appeal from the allowance of an administrator's account, or from his final accounting, is reviewable on writ of error and exceptions.—Labar v. Nichols, 22 Mich. 200; In re Mower's Appeal, 48 Mich. 441.

¶ 97. When a creditor of an estate proceeds in the probate court to compel the administrator to pay his claim, and the case is appealed to the circuit court, where the case involves substantially the issue plene administravit, the judgment of the circuit court thereon may be reviewed on error.—Brown v. Forsche, 43 Mich. 492.

¶ 98. Error will not lie to review an affirmance of the probate court's refusal to relieve an executor from giving bond on sale of realty.—Fletcher v. Clark, 39 Mich. 374.

¶ 99. The Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to review the refusal of the circuit court to affirm a probate order to an executor to advance money from an accumulation fund to the beneficiaries under a will since such a case does not present a common-law issue.—Knorr v. Millard, 52 Mich. 542.

§ 29. ——Probation or contest of wills.

Questions brought up, see post § 301.

¶ 100. Where an appeal has been taken to the circuit court from the decree of the probate court allowing or disallowing a will, and a trial is had, error lies to remove to the Supreme Court the adjudication of the circuit court upon the appeal; it makes no difference that a formal issue was not made up in the circuit court, since the substance of the issue is the same, whether made up in form or not.—American Baptist Missionary Union v. Peck, 9 Mich. 445.

¶ 101. Error will not lie to review proceedings in the circuit court upon an appeal from an order of the probate court denying a petition for the appointment of a mother as guardian of her minor children.—Cameron v. Bentley, 28 Mich. 520.

B. CHARACTER OR FINALITY OF THE JUDGMENT OR DECREE.

§ 31. In general; form and finality of decree.

In addition to having the requisite finality the decree or judgment must have been in a proceeding according to the course of the common law to be reviewable on error, and amounting to a "cause in chancery" to be appealable, or within some statute giving review. As to such matters, see ante III, A; and see also ante § 3.

Law judgments, see post §§ 32, 33.
What "orders" are deemed final, see post §§ 45-50.
Judgments on demurrers or pleas, see post §§ 38-40.
Cost decrees, see post § 41.
Decrees reserving questions, see post § 42.
Orders relating to amendments or in supplement of action, see post § 43.
Divorce and alimony decrees, see post § 54.
Foreclosure decrees and orders in course of foreclosure, see post § 55.
Injunctional orders and decrees, see post § 56.
Time for taking appeal from decree and from orders, see post § 73.
Nature of the judgment and matters involved in it as limiting review, see post XII, B, 2.
Dismissal or affirmance on hearing for want of reviewable question, see post § 480.

¶ 102. The right to appeal is determined not by the form of the order or decree, or by the particular classification thereof, but by the effect.—Perrin v. Lepper, 72 Mich. 454.

¶ 103. Appealability is not determined by the stage of the case at which the order was made, but by its effect on the rights of the parties.—Barry v. Briggs, 22 Mich. 201; Taylor v. Sweet, 40 Mich. 736.

¶ 104. An appeal in chancery lies only from a final decree or order.—Caswell v. Comstock, 6 Mich. 391; Demaray v. Little, 17 Mich. 386; Maxfield v. Freeman, 39 Mich. 64.

¶ 105. Decrees and orders, final and interlocutory, defined, and the distinction between them explained.—Wing v. Warner, 2 D. 288.

¶ 106. Decrees are final when they are the final determination of the court on the rights of the parties; interlocutory, when they are auxiliary only to the final determination.—Caswell v. Comstock, 6 Mich. 391.

¶ 107. The difference between interlocutory and final decrees is that in the former some further steps are required to enable the court to adjudicate and settle the rights of the parties, while under a final decree the party obtains his rights without any further adjudication on the merits, either by the direct operation of the decree itself, or by means of proceedings of a ministerial character in execution of it.—Lewis v. Campau, 14 Mich. 458.

¶ 108. When the word decree is used in a statute it is to be understood to mean a final decree, unless there is something in the context showing an interlocutory as well as a final decree is intended.—Caswell v. Comstock, 6 Mich. 391.

¶ 109. An appeal lies from every decree in chancery which purports to be final, even though its illegality does not appear on its face.—Wilson v. Wilson, 73 Mich. 620.

¶ 110. To be appealable a decree need not have disposed of all the merits.—Hake v. Coach, 105 Mich. 425.

¶ 111. A decree is not final, although it declares the principles on which the court means to act in all its future doings in the cause, unless it also adjudicates upon and fixes the rights of parties so that it can be carried into effect without further inquiry as to their rights and liabilities.—Patterson v. Hopkins, 23 Mich. 541.

¶ 112. Any decree or order divesting possession or rights on a preliminary inquiry is illegal and void; and when made in equity is a final order and appealable, though an appeal is not necessary to rescind it.—Tawas & B. C. R. Co. v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 44 Mich. 479.

¶ 113. The appealability of an order is determined by its effect on the rights of the parties. An order to be final must dispose of some portion of the controversy, and must finally determine some right between the parties.—Williams v. Olson, 151 Mich. 265.

Judgment on demurrer or dilatory plea, see post §§ 39, 40.

¶ 114. To authorize the writ of error there must be a final judgment or determination in the inferior court; it will not lie to bring up interlocutory proceedings merely, or discretionary orders made pending the litigation.—Holbrook v. Cook, 5 Mich. 225.

¶ 115. The province of a writ of error is to bring up for review final judgments or determinations, and it is not employed to bring up interlocutory decisions or discretionary orders made pending litigation.—Brady v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co., 73 Mich. 457.

¶ 116. An order which puts an end to a suit is a final judgment reviewable by a writ of error.—City of Flint v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 146 Mich. 439.

¶ 117. Error lies to review the final order or determination of the circuit court.—City of Flint v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 146 Mich. 439.

¶ 119. An order, upon a verdict of guilty on a trial for nuisance for keeping up a milldam, that the dam be removed, is a final judgment on which a writ of error lies.—Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117.

¶ 120. The Supreme Court has power to review, by writ of error, any final judgment of a circuit court rendered in a proceeding according to the course of the common law.—In re Hicks, 20 Mich. 129.

¶ 121. It is not necessary that a judgment should be a final determination of the rights of the parties to authorize a writ of error. It is enough if it determines the particular suit.—In re Hicks, 20 Mich. 129.

¶ 122. Error is the proper remedy to review the decision of a circuit judge dismissing a writ of replevin and quashing all proceedings with costs on motion. Such an order is held a final determination of the suit with a judgment against the plaintiff for costs.—Jewell v. Lamoreaux, 30 Mich. 155.

¶ 123. Error lies upon an order finally dismissing a common-law action of trover where the grounds of the motion to dismiss are made part of the record.—Emerson Talcott & Co. v. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co., 51 Mich. 5.

¶ 124. An order denying plaintiff's motion for judgment on the ground that the suit has been discontinued by stipulation is final so as to be reviewable.—Carpenter v. Myers, 90 Mich. 209.

¶ 125. Where a motion by defendants on special appearance to quash an attachment has been overruled, and they take no further steps, but allow judgment to be entered against them by default, a writ of error is their proper remedy for a review of the proceedings.—Pierce v. Johnson, 93 Mich. 125.

¶ 126. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10642, providing that any judgment or final order in garnishment may be removed to the supreme court in the same manner as other personal actions, an order quashing a writ of garnishment and releasing the garnishee from further liability, with costs to defendant, is in effect a final judgment which plaintiff can have reviewed upon writ of error, and hence mandamus will not be granted to review such order and to compel the circuit judge to vacate it.—Recor v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 139 Mich. 156.

Nature of the appeal as a chancery cause or common-law action open to review by appeal or error, see ante §§ 25-30.
Necessity that judgment be entered on claim against estate, see post § 34, ¶ 137.
Consent or default judgment, see also post § 37, ¶¶ 150, 151.
Denial of appeal after time as discretionary and not subject of writ, see post § 51, ¶ 226.
Scope of review, see post § 274.
Presumption as to jurisdiction of original court, see post § 361.
Amendment of assignments to challenge jurisdiction, see post ¶ 567.

¶ 127. A judgment in the circuit court upon an appeal from an administrator's accounting held sufficiently final in character to authorize a writ of error.—Hall v. Grovier, 25 Mich. 428, 438.

¶ 128. An order entered in a special appeal from justice court upon alleged jurisdictional grounds, finding that the appeal was not sustained by the returns of the justice, and directing the matter to stand for trial on its merits, was not a final order and therefore not reviewable on error.—Dodge v. Nichols, 136 Mich. 28.

¶ 129. A judgment of the circuit court on appeal from an order of the probate court denying a petition for letters de bonis non is final and subject to writ of error, where the circuit court dismissed the appeal though there was an issue of fact as to existence of unadministered assets, such an issue imparting to the appeal the nature analogous to a suit at common law.—Owen v. Ward's Estate, 125 Mich. 30.

¶ 130. An order dismissing an appeal and an order quashing a writ, are final orders reviewable by writ of error.—City of Flint v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 146 Mich. 439.

¶ 131. An order dismissing an appeal from the probate to the circuit court because no leave to appeal had been granted is a final order reviewable by a writ of error, and mandamus will be denied in such case.—City of Flint v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 146 Mich. 439.

¶ 132. An order of the circuit court allowing appeal after time from a decree of the probate court probating a will is merely interlocutory and is not appealable.—Apsey v. DeYoung, 173 Mich. 426.

Necessity of rendering decree permitting of appeal, see ante ¶ 11.
Judgment on demurrer, see also post § 39.
Decrees reserving questions or referring them, see post § 42.
Orders in course of the action or suit but not disposing of it entirely, see post §§ 45-50.
Consent to sustaining of demurrer without final judgment thereon, see post § 38, ¶ 155.
Appeal from demurrer to cross-bill before final judgment on bill, see post § 38, ¶ 167.
Necessity that record show entry of verdict and judgment, see post § 173.
Taking appeal or error before entry of judgment or settlement of case, see post ¶¶ 646, 647.
Dismissal for want of judgment entered, see post § 150.
Commencement of time to take appellate procedure, see post § 73.
Costs for premature appeal or error, or for unfounded appeal or error, see Costs, V.

¶ 133. When a decision is simply announced, but no decree actually drawn up or filed, there is no legal determination of the cause, and an appeal is premature.—Newbould v. Stewart, 15 Mich. 155.

¶ 134. A writ of error does not lie to review a case in which no final judgment has been entered.—Bancroft v. Board of Regents, University of Michigan, 192 Mich. 168.

¶ 135. An order sustaining a demurrer as to certain counts of a declaration, and overruling it as to others, is not reviewable by writ of error prior to the entry of final judgment.—Perry v. Church, 107 Mich. 480.

¶ 136. An agreement by counsel, without action of the court, that a demurrer to a declaration, which had been overruled, should stand overruled as to an amended declaration, presents no question for review on error, since parties cannot stipulate causes into the supreme court.—Hendrick v. Minor Lumber Co., 113 Mich. 52.

¶ 137. The rule that a judgment must be entered before a writ of error lies to it, applies as well to the adjudication of the allowance of a claim filed against the estate of a deceased person at a certain sum, or a disallowance, on appeal to the circuit court, as to a common-law judgment.—Rayl v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 91 Mich. 4.

¶ 138. Where an order setting aside a decree of divorce by default against a husband was granted upon condition that the husband pay the wife solicitor's fees of a specified sum within a certain period, and a petition to set aside the order of allowance of solicitor's fees was denied, but the time for payment was extended for 30 days, and the husband failed to pay the solicitor's fees within such second period, the decree went automatically into effect so that an appeal would lie therefrom.—McDonald v. McDonald, 190 Mich. 649.

¶ 139. Where an action for false imprisonment is against three defendants jointly, and a demurrer to the declaration is sustained in favor of two of them and overruled as to the third, the case is still pending for further proceedings in the court below, and a writ or error is unavailable.—Toleikis v. Austin, 197 Mich. 333.

¶ 139a. Error will not lie to review the order of the circuit court forfeiting a bond given on an appeal of a criminal case from justice's court after a denial of a motion to quash, no further proceedings having been taken in the case to carry it into judgment on the bond.—People v. Stimer, 82 Mich. 17.

Appealability of judgment in abatement, see post § 40.
Leaving questions in suspense or under reference, see post § 42.
Effect of order opening default on conditions which are not performed, see ante ¶ 138.
Causes of action which survive death of party, see Abatement and Revival, §§ 16, 17.
What will suspend judgment and enlarge time for error, see post § 75.
Practice in reviving to take appeal or error, see post § 80.
Treating revival as having been made, see post § 389, ¶ 1546.

¶ 140. An appeal from a decree of divorce taken by the defending wife within the statutory period, but after her husband's death, was sustained.—Shafer v. Shafer, 30 Mich. 163.

¶ 141. Appeal lies from a decree of divorce granted to a complainant after his death, with alimony to defendant, which decree was entered so as to relate back to complainant's lifetime.—Wilson v. Wilson, 78 Mich. 620.

Right to have review of trivial judgments, see ante ¶ 15.
Party entitled to appeal or bring error, see post § 60.
Aggrievement or injury as giving capacity to appeal, see post §§ 61, 62.
Judgment suffered by default or confession, see post § 37.
Dismissal pending appeal on compliance with or enforcement of judgment, see post § 162.
Dismissal or affirmance on hearing for want of grievance, see post § 481.
Final judgment without remand where no substantial injury or grievance appears, see post § 504.

¶ 142. Whenever a substantial legal right is divested by an order or decree in a court of chancery, an appeal lies from such order or decree to the supreme court.—Perrin v. Lepper, 72 Mich. 454.

¶ 143. The absence of a personal liability clause in a foreclosure decree is no ground for appeal unless the decree goes further and declares that no such liability should exist.—Shelden v. Erskine, 78 Mich. 627.

¶ 144. An appeal will not lie from the order of a circuit judge, made in contempt proceedings instituted by the complainants in a judgment creditors' suit to punish the defendant for a violation of the injunction issued on filing their bill, that the defendant is not guilty of the contempt charged.—Rasch v. Sheppard, 105 Mich. 667.

¶ 145. A complainant who obtained an interpleader of two claimants to a fund cannot appeal from the decree awarding it to one of them.—Knights of Honor v. Nairn, 60 Mich. 44; Atkinson v. Flannigan, 70 Mich. 639.

Failure to oppose judgment after motion to quash attachment overruled, see ante ¶ 125.
Decree or order, opening decree, see post § 44.

Party entitled to appeal, see post § 61, ¶ 294, § 62.
Loss of right to appeal by satisfaction of or compliance with judgment or decree, see post § 66.
Sufficiency of showing that order was by consent, see post § 173.

¶ 148. A consent decree cannot be appealed from when made in a case where a wife had filed a bill under How. St., § 6291, for maintenance, charging desertion, but not for the statutory period, and the husband's failure to suitably provide for and maintain her, but not in such a manner as to lay a foundation for a divorce under the general laws, to which bill an answer had been filed fully meeting all the allegations of the bill, and on the hearing the judge had announced that a divorce would be granted; whereupon a decree was agreed upon, granting a divorce for desertion and a permanent alimony, which was paid by the husband.—Owen v. Yale, 75 Mich. 256.

¶ 149. A consent order or decree is not appealable, even though it is a stipulation for removing the case without costs in order to settle a question of jurisdiction.—Chapin v. Perrin, 46 Mich. 130; Brick v. Brick, 65 Mich. 230.

¶ 150. Plaintiff went to work for defendant under a contract for a period from June 21, 1907, to October 1, 1907. Plaintiff was dismissed in ten days, and on July 17, 1907, recovered a verdict in a justice court. The circuit court held that she could recover for damages only up to the date of the suit in the justice court. Held, that judgment entered on this verdict was not a consent judgment, so as to be unappealable.—Webb v. Depew, 152 Mich. 698.

¶ 151. Where an order of the circuit on appeal reversing an order of the State Fire Marshal was entered by consent, the consenting parties are not in a position to take an appeal from such order.—Hart v. State Fire Marshal, 178 Mich. 609.

¶ 152. The interest of complainant, an unmarried deaf-mute fifty years of age, was derived by will, a portion of which is as follows: To him "during the term of his natural life and after his death to be divided equally between his heirs, share and share alike." Upon bill by complainant to enforce specific performance of a contract of sale of the land to his sister, the defendant, and to cut off the entail and convey a free and indefeasible estate in fee simple, a decree was made in accordance with the prayer of the bill and in accordance with the wishes and consent of defendant. Held, that under the practice of the Supreme Court that court may decline to consider the appeal.—Cameron v. Smith, 171 Mich. 333.

Proper remedy for review, see ante § 3.
Necessity of entry of judgment on demurrer, see ante § 34, ¶¶ 135, 136.
Review on appeal from decree, see post § 296.
Time for appealing, how reckoned, see post § 73.
Order on demurrer as a "decree" for purpose of reckoning time to claim appeal, see post ¶ 318.
Necessity for bond on appeal, see post § 81.
Questions open on appeal from interlocutory order, see post §§ 293, 307.
Ruling on demurrer or plea as question reviewable on appeal or error to final judgment, see post §§ 295, 296.

¶ 153. An order overruling a demurrer is not final; therefore it is not appealable.—Bennett v. Nichols, 12 Mich. 22; Kirchner v. Wood, 48 Mich. 199.

¶ 154. An order allowing a general demurrer, but not in terms dismissing the bill or awarding costs, is merely interlocutory and not appealable.—Blackwood v. Van Vleet, 10 Mich. 398; Kingsbury v. Kingsbury, 20 Mich. 212.

¶ 155. An order sustaining a demurrer to the bill of complaint in a chancery suit, and granted by virtue of a stipulation entered into for the purpose of bringing the cause to the Supreme Court on appeal, without any further decree dismissing the bill or otherwise disposing of the cause finally, is not such a final order or decree as is appealable.—Perkins v. Keating, 28 Mich. 269.

¶ 159. An appeal will lie from an order overruling a demurrer which is both general and special, under Comp. L. 1897, § 549.—Ideal Clothing Co. v. Hazle, 126 Mich. 262.

¶ 160. The rule requiring a specification of cause in all demurrers does not abrogate or enlarge the statute authorizing an appeal from an order overruling a general demurrer (Comp. L. 1897, § 549).—Daschke v. Schellenberg, 124 Mich. 16.

¶ 161. As the failure to verify a bill might have been ground for a general demurrer prior to the adoption of the rule requiring a specification of cause in all demurrers, an order overruling a demurrer for that cause is appealable, under Comp. L. 1897, § 549, making the overruling of a general demurrer appealable.—Daschke v. Schellenberg, 124 Mich. 16.

¶ 163. A demurrer alleging that complainant in a supplemental bill is not entitled to file said bill or any other bill which entitles him to the relief prayed for is not a general demurrer, and an order overruling it is not appealable.—Taylor v. Taylor, 87 Mich. 64.

¶ 164. The right given by How. St., § 6737, of appeal from an order overruling a general demurrer is not enlarged or abridged by 1897 Ch. Rule 9, permitting the reasons for a demurrer to be stated therein; and an order overruling a demurrer is not appealable if the bill, prior to the adoption of said rule, would not have been subject to a general demurrer for the defects stated in the overruled demurrer.—Greenley v. Hovey, 115 Mich. 504.

¶ 165. The special reasons in matters of substance which, under 1897 Circuit Court Ch. Rule 9 may now be stated in a general demurrer, do not make it any the less a general demurrer, and an order overruling it is appealable.—Robinson v. Kunkleman, 117 Mich. 198.

¶ 169. In a chancery suit where the defendants have answered and in their answer inserted the usual demurrer clause, the court cannot pass upon the legal issues without first proceeding to hear the proofs, and the practice of appealing upon the decision of the demurrer alone cannot be sanctioned even at the request of the parties, and the Supreme Court will reverse the decision on the demurrer and remand the cause for proofs upon the issues.—Gray v. Eldred, 144 Mich. 23.

¶ 171. A demurrer to a bill setting out in detail the grounds of multifariousness, repugnancy of allegations, duplicity, and inconsistency between the allegations and between the prayer and the allegations, is special and not general, and therefore no appeal lies from an order overruling it.—Case v. Longyear, 168 Mich. 434.

¶ 172. No appeal lies from an order overruling a demurrer for multifariousness, since such demurrer is special and not embraced by the statute.—Freeman v. Lowell Specialty Co., 174 Mich. 59.

¶ 173. As a demurrer to a bill of complaint on the ground of multifariousness is special, no appeal lies from an order overruling it.—Michigan Nat. Bank v. Hill, 181 Mich. 7.

¶ 174. A demurrer to a bill for multifariousness is special, and an order overruling it cannot be appealed from.—Graham v. Graham, 171 Mich. 307.

¶ 175. An appeal does not lie from an order overruling a special demurrer to a bill filed by the receiver of a defunct fraternal loan and insurance society for a discovery and an accounting against the trustees, officers and agents of the company.—Snover v. Boynton, 173 Mich. 539.

Review on error to final judgment, see post § 296.

Dismissal for want of reviewable judgment, see post § 150.

¶ 176. An order sustaining a demurrer to a declaration and directing final judgment, unless plaintiff amends within twenty days, is not a final order so as to be reviewable on error until the time limited therein for amendment has transpired.—Clark v. Village of North Muskegon, 86 Mich. 29.

¶ 177. An order overruling a demurrer to a declaration is not reviewable until it has been followed by final judgment.—Fitzsimmons v. Milwaukee, L. S. & M. R. Co., 98 Mich. 257.

¶ 178. An order overruling a demurrer to a declaration not followed by judgment, is not a final order, and is not reviewable by writ of error.—Tompkins v. Bowen, 123 Mich. 377.

Review on appeal from final decree or judgment, see post §§ 293, 296.
Right to proceed with trial and have review on error to final judgment, see also post ¶ 302.

¶ 179. An order overruling a plea to a bill which does not affect the merits of the entire controversy is not a final order, and therefore not appealable.—Morris v. Kuhn, 190 Mich. 419.

¶ 180. An order overruling a plea in abatement is final so as to be appealable when the plea goes to the whole case, and will dispose of it, if sustained.—Pinel v. Campsell, 190 Mich. 347.

¶ 181. Where a plea in an equitable action if good will dispose of the whole case, an order overruling such plea and requiring the defendant to answer within a given time under penalty of otherwise having the bill taken as confessed by him, is a final order and appealable after the elapse of the time for answering if the defendant elects to stand on his plea.—Hagar v. Schliess, 183 Mich. 610.

¶ 182. Where a plea is overruled with leave to answer within a limited time, it seems that taking an appeal before the expiration of that period may be treated as an election to stand by the plea, and the appeal may be sustained accordingly.—Cross v. Cross, 54 Mich. 115.

¶ 183. A writ of error will lie from an order overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement, since such order is in effect a final determination. The proper practice, however, is to enter a judgment, quashing the writ to which the plea is interposed.—Campbell v. Hudson, 106 Mich. 523.

¶ 184. An order overruling a plea to a bill to foreclose a mortgage, setting up facts which it was claimed required the state of Michigan to be made a party, with permission to answer, was not an appealable order, even though not reviewable on appeal from final decree.—Miller v. McLaughlin, 135 Mich. 646.

¶ 185. An order overruling a plea in abatement in a chancery suit to sequestrate corporation stock and property held not appealable.—Painter v. Lebanon Land Co., 178 Mich. 47.

¶ 186. Error will lie to test the sufficiency of service after an unsatisfactory decision on a plea of abatement.—Trumbull Motor Car Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 189 Mich. 554.

¶ 187. The sufficiency of service may be tested on a writ of error, if the party elects to stand upon it and not waive his rights.—Trumbull Motor Car Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 189 Mich. 554.

¶ 188. Defendants against whom a decree for costs has been taken may appeal from the decree.—McCabe v. Farnsworth, 27 Mich. 52.

¶ 189. An appeal in chancery will not lie where nothing is involved but costs on demurrer upon the dismissal of a bill without prejudice.—Jenness v. Smith, 58 Mich. 280.

¶ 190. Where a circuit judge orders a stay of proceedings until security for costs is given, the order is not a formal one and is reversible in the upper court for error.—Clark v. Bay Circuit Judge, 154 Mich. 483.

§ 42. Decrees for relief with reference or reservation.

Accounting decrees in general, see also post § 52.
Divorce decree with reference, see also post § 54, ¶¶ 238, 239.

¶ 191. A decree is not final or appealable which directs a reference to a master or other officer to do what the court, but for its power to make such reference, would itself have to do before it could decide the case.—Caswell v. Comstock, 6 Mich. 391.

¶ 192. Where a decree declares that there ought to be a specific performance, but does not fix its terms nor direct either party to do any act, and requires further inquiry as to title and incumbrances and an accounting, all of which are necessary to determine the terms and conditions of performance, it will be held to be interlocutory and not appealable; it does not conclude the parties from further litigating their rights on a final hearing.—Patterson v. Hopkins, 23 Mich. 541.

¶ 193. A decree in a partition suit which fixes the respective rights of the parties, although it contains an order of reference to take an accounting as to rents and profits, and to ascertain whether an actual partition is practicable, or whether a sale and distribution of proceeds is necessary, is such a final order or decree as is appealable.—Damouth v. Klock, 28 Mich. 163.

¶ 194. Under a bill to recover dower, a decree declaring complainant entitled to dower is appealable though directing further inquiry as to damages for dower withheld, and to ascertain whether dower could be assigned by metes and bounds, and, if not, to compute the money value.—Brown v. Bronson, 35 Mich. 415.

§ 43. Supplementary and amendatory decrees and judgments.

Orders opening, vacating or refusing to open or vacate, see also post § 44.
Accounting decree in execution of decree, see post § 52, ¶ 228.

Finality of orders supplementary to judgment, see post §§ 45-50.
Scope of questions open on appeal, see post § 308.

¶ 195. An order denying a petition to correct a foreclosure decree is final and appealable, though made after time to appeal from such decree had lapsed and extension thereof was denied.—Tucker v. Stone, 92 Mich. 298.

¶ 196. A decree determining the legal estate of parties is final and appealable; it is too late to examine the merits of the case on an appeal from any subsequent order made for the purpose of enforcing it.—Shepherd v. Rice, 38 Mich. 556.

§ 44. Opening or vacating decrees and judgments.

Setting aside or opening foreclosure sale, see post § 55, ¶¶ 245-248.
Time for appealing, how reckoned, see post § 73.

¶ 197. An order refusing to set aside a decree for irregularity is final and appealable.—Michigan Ins. Co. v. Whittemore, 12 Mich. 311.

¶ 198. An order opening a decree to a defense before any new rights have intervened is not final.—Maxfield v. Freeman, 39 Mich. 64.

¶ 199. An order setting aside a final decree, taken pro confesso in a foreclosure suit, and permitting a defendant to defend, unless the complainant should elect to assign to him the decree for a sum named in the order, is not a decree, or final order, which can be appealed from.—Prentis v. Rice, 2 D. 296.

¶ 200. A denial of a motion to set aside a default for nonappearance of defendant on condition that plaintiff remit a portion of the judgment, may be reviewed on writ of error, although an unconditional denial, being discretionary, cannot be so reviewed.—Carton v. Day, 157 Mich. 43.

Orders on demurrers, see ante §§ 38, 39.

¶ 201. A final order is one that finally disposes of the whole matter of the suit; and it may be either the decree itself, or an order subsequent to the decree when something remains to be done in carrying the decree into effect before the whole subject is finally disposed of, and a further and final order is requisite for the purpose.—Wing v. Warner, 2 D. 288.

¶ 202. Final orders are adjudications upon motions or other applications, not involving a hearing upon pleadings and proofs, but upon other issues interlocutory or collateral, whereby some supposed right of a party is definitely cut off or some liability is fixed upon him.—Kingsbury v. Kingsbury 20 Mich. 212.

¶ 203. If the decision of a motion opens a case it is not generally final unless it cuts off some acquired right under a decree; if it closes the matter and precludes any further hearing or investigation it is final.—Kingsbury v. Kingsbury, 20 Mich. 212.

¶ 204. An order disposing finally of any part of the merits is appealable, notwithstanding it is made before the case is ripe for hearing and though not deciding the whole case.—Lewis v. Campau, 14 Mich. 458; Kingsbury v. Kingsbury, 20 Mich. 212.

¶ 206. An order is final and appealable so far as it finally disposes of any portion of the subject-matter in controversy.—Taylor v. Sweet, 40 Mich. 730.

¶ 207. Whenever an order of a court of chancery divests a legal right an appeal lies to determine whether the order is legal or unauthorized.—Barry v. Briggs, 22 Mich. 201.

¶ 208. Any order is final that gives all the relief prayed for by the bill.—Whitbeck v. Chittenden, 50 Mich. 426.

¶ 209. If an order finally disposes of any right it is appealable though other proceedings are yet to be taken in the case.—Maxfield v. Freeman, 39 Mich. 64.

¶ 210. Complainant filed a bill against defendant as executor, for an accounting. Defendant answered and expressed a willingness to accouut. Defendant afterwards moved to dismiss the bill on the ground of lack of jurisdiction. The motion was denied. Held, an appeal would not lie from the order denying this motion, no final decree having been made on the bill.—Brooks v. Hargrave, 162 Mich. 599.

¶ 211. A writ of error is the proper remedy to review the decision of a circuit judge dismissing a writ of replevin and quashing all proceedings with costs on a motion whereupon, improperly, the merits were disposed of. —Jewell v. Lamoreaux, 30 Mich. 155.

¶ 214. An order striking a bill from the files is a final determination of the right of complainant to pursue her remedy against the defendant who had thus moved, and is therefore a final order from which an appeal lies.—Carpenter v. Auditor General, 144 Mich. 251.

¶ 215. An order denying a motion to strike an amended bill from the files is not a final order and is not appealable.—Williams v. Olson, 151 Mich. 265.

§ 47. ——Granting or denying leave to plead or intervene.

In foreclosure suits, see also post ¶ 243.

¶ 216. An order denying leave to file a bill of review is final.—Beecher v. Marquette & Pacific Rolling Mill Co., 40 Mich. 307.

¶ 217. An order granting leave to file a bill of review, and made before any steps have been taken in execution of the decree, is not a final order from which an appeal lies. —Maxfield v. Freeman, 39 Mich. 64; Beecher v. Marquette & Pacific Rolling Mill Co., 40 Mich. 307.

¶ 218. It seems that an order permitting a party interested but not a party to the suit to file a bill in the nature of a bill of review, is not appealable.—Leggett v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 247.

§ 48. ——Granting or denying writs and process.

Review on error to judgment, see post § 290.

¶ 219. An order denying a writ of assistance to the purchaser in a foreclosure suit may be appealed from.—Baker v. Pierson, 5 Mich. 456.

¶ 220. An order overruling a motion to quash the service of a summons is interlocutory and not reviewable upon writ of error.—Brady v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co., 73 Mich. 457.

¶ 221. An order dismissing a capias and discharging the defendant from arrest on condition that he file a stipulation not to bring suit for his arrest against either the plaintiff or the sheriff is an interlocutory order and not a judgment, and is therefore not removable into the Supreme Court by writ of error.—Adams v. Church, 22 Mich. 79.

§ 50. ——Granting or denying rehearing or new trial.

Review with judgment on appeal or error from it, see post § 298.

Scope of appeal from order on petition for rehearing, see post § 309.

¶ 222. An appeal lies from an order denying a rehearing of a chancery suit.—Perkins v. Perkins, 181 Mich. 166.

¶ 223. Bill of exceptions and writ of error for the sole purpose of reviewing the action of the circuit court in refusing to grant a new trial, is authorized under Comp. L. 1897 § 10504, which provides that "the party appealing the same may incorporate in the bill of exceptions a record of all proceedings had on said motion for a new trial, including the reasons given by the trial judge in refusing to grant said new trial. Exception may be taken and error assigned on the decision of the circuit judge in refusing such motion, and the same shall be reviewed by the Supreme Court."—Walker v. Newton, 13 Mich. 576.

¶ 224. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10492, a writ of error will not lie to review the determination of the trial judge in denying a motion for a new trial upon the merits after the affirmance of the cause in the Supreme Court since such denial is not a final determination within the meaning of said section.—Minkkinen v. Quincy Min. Co., 172 Mich. 404.

Decrees with reference for accounting, see also ante § 42.
Parties entitled to appeal, see post §§ 61, 62.
Scope of questions open on appeal, see post § 304.

¶ 227. A decree that consists in part of a reference to a commissioner to take an account between the parties is not appealable.—Enos v. Sutherland, 9 Mich. 148.

¶ 228. An accounting ordered only in aid of the execution of the decree, and which is no part of the relief prayed for, does not prevent the decree from being final where the whole purpose of the suit has been accomplished, and where the parties are entitled to an immediate execution of the decree.—Winthrop Iron Co. v. Meeker, 109 U. S. 180, 27 L. ed. 898, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111.

¶ 229. The confirmation of the report of a commissioner upon a reference to examine and state a partnership account—there having been no pre-adjudication upon the questions involved in the reference—is not a decree or final order which can be appealed from.—Kingsbury v. Kingsbury, 20 Mich. 212.

¶ 230. Appeal does not lie from an order confirming the report of a special commissioner on a reference to ascertain the amount due between parties.—Bewick v. Alpena Harbor Improvement Co., 39 Mich. 700.

¶ 231. A decree which, in a suit for a partnership accounting, places the date at which the firm dissolved at a period later than is claimed by either party, is not final as disposing of the case, but is final and appealable as settling the basis for accounting.—Candler v. Stange, 53 Mich. 479.

¶ 232. An order or decree which is in effect a final disposition of the case, and which fixes the principles of an accounting upon a bill filed therefor, is final and appealable.—Perrin v. Lepper, 72 Mich. 454.

¶ 233. Where by the commissioner's report in an accounting between partners the amount found due is subject to change by matters in process of litigation, an order confirming such report is not final or appealable.—Petrie v. Torrent, 95 Mich. 439.

¶ 234. A decree in a partnership accounting suit which fixes the time at which the accounting is to commence, the period which it is to cover, the respective rights of the parties with regard to the business of the partnership, and with regard to the business which is claimed by defendant to have been no part of the partnership, said contention being decided adversely to defendant, and which directs the commissioner after fixing the standing and rights of the parties in the various matters in dispute, to state an account upon said order as a basis, is appealable.—Hake v. Coach, 105 Mich. 425.

Receivership orders, see post §§ 57-59.

¶ 235. An order appointing a receiver pendente lite, and requiring property in mortgagee's possession to be turned over to him, issued in a proceeding under How. St., § 8749o (relating to voluntary assignments, and authorizing persons having preferred claims to apply for a receiver in certain cases), is appealable.—Hall v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 111 Mich. 395.

§ 54. Divorce and alimony decrees.

Consent decree, see ante § 37, ¶ 148.
Effect of death of party, see ante § 35.

¶ 236. An order overruling a plea of nonmarriage in a divorce suit is appealable.—Cross v. Cross, 54 Mich. 115.

¶ 237. A decree upon a petition filed under Comp. L. 1857, § 3238, How. St., § 6239, providing for the revision of decrees in divorce cases, is final and appealable.—Chandler v. Chandler, 24 Mich. 176.

¶ 238. A decree granting a divorce from the bonds of matrimony is appealable although also ordering a reference on the question of temporary alimony.—Shaw v. Shaw, 9 Mich. 164.

¶ 239. An order opening for review a decree for permanent alimony in a divorce suit, and ordering a reference to a circuit court commissioner to take proofs, etc., and to report thereon, is not appealable.—Perkins v. Perkins, 10 Mich. 425.

¶ 241. An order allowing temporary alimony is interlocutory and not appealable.—Haines v. Haines, 35 Mich. 138; Lapham v. Lapham, 40 Mich. 527; Cooper v. Mayhew, 40 Mich. 528; Ross v. Ross, 47 Mich. 185; Froman v. Froman, 53 Mich. 581; Rose v. Rose, 53 Mich. 585.

Proper amount of bond, see post § 83.

¶ 242. An order in a foreclosure suit confirming the report of the appraisal, set-off and conveyance of the mortgaged premises, under the appraisal law of 1842, was held to be a final order, from which an appeal would lie, and the decree directing such appraisal was also appealable, it being final.—Benedict v. Thompson, 2 D. 299.

¶ 243. An order denying and dismissing a petition made before mortgage sale for leave to file an answer nunc pro tunc is final and appealable.—Scriven v. Hursh, 39 Mich. 98.

¶ 245. An order denying a motion to stay a sale under a decree of foreclosure, and vacating a temporary order staying the sale until the motion could be heard and disposed of, cannot be appealed from.—Romeyn v. Hale, 1 Mich. 93.

¶ 246. An appeal will lie from an order setting aside a sale in a foreclosure suit after confirmation of report of sale, it being final as to the purchaser.—Bullard v. Green, 9 Mich. 222.

¶ 247. An order vacating a sale and ordering a new sale on new terms and conditions becomes a decree and may be appealed from.—Perkins v. Perkins, 16 Mich. 162.

¶ 248. An order opening biddings before confirmation, and directing a new sale on condition that a larger bid shall be made, is not appealable.—Demaray v. Little, 17 Mich. 386.

§ 56. Injunctional orders and decrees.

Contempt orders for violation, see ante § 17.
Review of interlocutory injunction, see post § 411.

¶ 249. A decree which grants the principal relief prayed for, and gives complainant the immediate benefit of judicial action by an injunction that in effect puts an end to defendant's business, is appealable, even though a farther decree may be necessary upon completion of an accounting.—Smith v. Walker, 57 Mich. 456.

¶ 250. An order allowing an injunction which has the effect of depriving a party of his possession of land is final and appealable.—Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 61 Mich. 9; Arnold v. Bright, 41 Mich. 207.

¶ 251. An order is final which enjoins defendant from ever using a particular device upon his manufactures, or from selling them as if made at complainant's establishment.—Smith v. Walker, 57 Mich. 456.

¶ 252. An order refusing to enjoin a replevin suit is not final or appealable.—Merchants' & Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Kent Circuit Judge, 43 Mich. 292.

¶ 253. An order enjoining a replevin suit for property to which plaintiff claims title is appealable.—Merchants' & Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Kent Circuit Judge, 43 Mich. 292.

¶ 254. An order denying a motion for the dissolution of a preliminary injunction, heard on answer to a part and demurrer to the residue of the bill, before the time for filing replication had expired, is interlocutory merely, and cannot be appealed from.—Wing v. Warner, 2 D. 288.

¶ 257. An order on a motion for preliminary injunction, which commands the removal of a fence alleged to have been erected maliciously to darken complainant's house, and enjoining its rebuilding, is appealable. —Ladd v. Flynn, 90 Mich. 181.

¶ 258. An order dissolving a preliminary injunction and restoring defendant to her possession of land is not appealable.—Schuffert v. Grote, 83 Mich. 263.

¶ 259. An order denying a motion to dissolve a preliminary injunction is interlocutory and not appealable.—United States Heater Co. v. Iron Molders' Union of North America, 129 Mich. 354.

¶ 260. In a chancery suit to abate an alleged nuisance a decree finding there is a nuisance and ordering that within 60 days it should be abated, failing which an injunction shall issue, is appealably final in that it decides the substantial question, though it leaves open some of the questions involved in the litigation.—Schmelzer v. Bartlett Illuminating Co., 142 Mich. 133.

¶ 261. An appeal does not lie from an order modifying a preliminary injunction nor from an order denying a motion to set aside such an order.—Simmons v. Alcona County Sup'rs, 144 Mich. 591.

¶ 262. Complainant on October 1, 1910, filed a bill for specific performance of a contract for the sale of pickles, and asked for a temporary injunction forbidding defendant vendee to sell or remove said pickles. Defendant's motions to dissolve the temporary injunction entered October 3, 1910, were heard and overruled on October 17, and November 28, 1910, respectively. The injunction entered prevented defendant from disposing of the pickles until the merits of the bill for specific performance should be determined. Held, the injunction was not such a final order as would enable the defendant to take an appeal therefrom.—Harbauer-Marseau Co. v. Thwing, 165 Mich. 42.

Divestiture of title or possession as making order appealable, see post § 58.
In assignment proceedings, see also ante § 53.
Review of interlocutory receivership, see post § 411.
Party entitled to appeal, see post § 60, ¶ 287, ff 61, 62.

¶ 263. When the appointment of a receiver is sought merely as ancillary to other equitable relief, and does not divest legal rights, an interlocutory order making such appointment cannot be appealed from.—Duncan v. Campau, 15 Mich. 415.

¶ 264. Where a bill is filed in aid of probate proceedings for the removal of an administrator, and prays the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the assets pending such proceedings, an order making such appointment, though in terms interlocutory, is in effect final and subject to appeal.—Lewis v. Campau, 14 Mich. 458.

¶ 265. Whether, even in ordinary partnership cases and tenancies in common, there may not be cases where an appeal will lie from the appointment of a receiver, quere. —Barry v. Briggs, 22 Mich. 201.

¶ 266. An order appointing a receiver, and directing a defendant holding a chattel mortgage assigned to him by his codefendant and alleged to be fraudulent, to turn the same over to the receiver to collect, and hold the proceeds until the respective rights of the parties are determined, is not a final decree as to such mortgagee defendant.—Salling v. Johnson, 25 Mich. 489.

¶ 267. An order appointing a receiver to take possession of and collect certain partnership accounts, held appealable.—Simon v. Schloss, 48 Mich. 233.

¶ 268. An order made when a cause in chancery is ripe for final hearing on pleadings and proofs, which appoints a receiver of partnership property, is appealable, notwithstanding it does not in terms purport to be final.—Morey v. Grant, 48 Mich. 326.

¶ 269. An order denying the appointment of a receiver in a foreclosure suit is interlocutory and not appealable.—Beecher v. Marquette & Pacific Rolling Mill Co., 40 Mich. 307.

¶ 271. An order appointing a receiver to take charge and dispose of all the property held by defendant as surviving partner of a firm is an order divesting his entire legal estate in property of which he had exclusive control as well as exclusive title. It is a decree from which appeal lies, whatever may be the stage of the cause in which it is made. —Barry v. Briggs, 22 Mich. 201.

¶ 272. An order appointing a receiver is final and appealable where it takes from an administrator the entire custody and management of the estate and transfers them to a stranger thereto.—Perrin v. Lepper, 56 Mich. 351.

¶ 273. An order appointing a receiver is appealable if it divests a party of a possession to which he is of right entitled.—Taylor v. Sweet, 40 Mich. 736; Arnold v. Bright, 41 Mich. 207.

¶ 274. An order appointing a receiver and restraining defendants' control over real estate held by them under a trust deed which the bill seeks to set aside is appealable.—Hodges v. McDuff, 69 Mich. 76.

¶ 277. Where the vendors of shingle logs, who had retained the title to the logs and shingles manufactured therefrom as security, etc., filed a bill to enforce their lien upon a portion of said shingles in the hands of purchasers from their vendee who claimed to be good-faith purchasers for value, and an order was made appointing a receiver to take possession of said shingles, and hold and dispose of them only under the direction of the court it is appealable.—Brown v. Ring, 77 Mich. 159.

¶ 278. On a bill for relief from a contract because of nonperformance by defendant, and for the appointment of a receiver, it was alleged that defendant agreed to care for complainant's cattle on his farm and to take the milk and butter for a period of five years at which time double the number of cattle of like age, sex, and quality were to be returned. A decree was rendered appointing a receiver to take charge of the cattle and for the sale of the cattle, and that the money be brought into court, and further providing that in case the amount realized from the sale should be less than the value of the cattle at the time of the breach a personal decree should be entered for the deficiency, held that such decree or order was not a final order which was appealable, and this court could not examine into the merits of the controversy and construe the contract and decide the respective rights of the parties.—Webber v. Randall, 86 Mich, 58, reversed 89 Mich. 531.

¶ 279. An order for the sale of assigned property by a receiver is final and appealable where it provides for an entire disposal of the trust funds and may affect the claims of creditors and others, and where also it contains special and unusual provisions as to notice of sale, and sale in large lots, and allows to some claimants but denies to others interested certain privileges of buying on credit, and allows sales without mortgage or other property security.—First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. E. T. Barnum Wire & Iron Works, 58 Mich. 315.

¶ 280. A receiver, appointed by consent in a suit for the settlement of partnership accounts, was afterwards ordered to pay certain moneys from the partnership funds to each of the parties on application, and without reference to the state of their accounts, and to charge them with the sums so paid, to be accounted for on final settlement. Held, that as it might not be possible to recover back such moneys this order was final and appealable, and that it was improvidently made. —Taylor v. Sweet, 40 Mich. 736.

¶ 283. An order discharging a receiver in a chancery cause and providing for the rendering of an account by him on notice of the order, for passing his account when rendered, for canceling his bond, for the payment into court of any surplus in his hands, for the restoration of the property taken into his possession as receiver, and for the dismissal of the bill when he shall have complied with these directions, is not an appealable final order.—Colgate v. Michigan Lake Shore R. Co., 28 Mich. 288.

¶ 284. An order or decree dismissing an intervening petition for the removal of a receiver after a hearing on the merits is a final order and not subject to review by mandamus but by appeal only.—Moran v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 6.

IV. THE PARTIES APPELLANT AND RESPONDENT.

§ 60. Proper parties appellant and respondent.

Necessary grievance or injury, see post §§ 61, 62.

Necessity of joining codefendants, see also post ¶ 351.

Parties to be served with notice, see post § 70.

Effect of death of party on appealability, see ante § 35.

Severance of case or parties for error, see post §§ 77, 78.

Practice on severance of parties for separate appeal, or on abatement and revival, see post §§ 79, 80.

Necessity of appeal or error to permit assignment of error, see post XI, D.

Necessity of appealing to obtain relief by modification of decree, see post § 520.

Appeal or error by one party as inuring to others, see post § 77.

Reversal inuring to other parties, see post § 558.

Consolidation of cross writs, see post § 141.

Single or double fees on cross appeal, see post § 89, ¶ 394.

Defects in parties as ground for dismissal or amendment, see post § 152.

Affirmance for want of parties, see post § 479.

Who may notice cause for hearing, see post § 133.

Parties entitled to notice of motions, see post § 167.

Party entitled to complain of or urge errors as depending on relation to the appeal or error, see post XI, D.

Waiver or estoppel to urge error on appeal, see post XI, D.

Party entitled to appeal, see Jud. Act, Chap. L. § 18; Comp. L. 1915, § 13753.

Appeal by party or parties to partition suit, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXXI, § 68; Comp. L. 1915, § 13325.

¶ 285. A decree finally adjudicating upon the merits of the controversy is necessarily final as to both parties, and therefore either, if aggrieved, may appeal.—Kingsbury v. Kingsbury, 20 Mich. 212.

¶ 286. Proceedings upon an information filed in the circuit court by a private relator, on leave, to try the title to an office, may be taken either by relator or respondent to the Supreme Court on error.—Vrooman v. Mitchie, 29 Mich. 42.

¶ 287. In a suit in equity against a defendant who had agreed to care properly for complainant's cattle, defendant to have the proceeds thereof, and to deliver at the end of five years double the number received of like kind, a decree was made directing the appointment of a receiver to take the cattle and their progeny, to put them in condition for market, to sell them, and to bring the proceeds into court, and requiring an accounting and providing for a deficiency decreed against defendant. Held, that such decree was final as to both and could be appealed from by either party.—Webber v. Randall, 89 Mich. 531, on rehearing modifying opinion 86 Mich. 58.

¶ 287a. Where a bill is brought to enforce stockholders' liability, and one defendant files against another defendant a cross-bill, asking affirmative relief, said defendants are to be treated as adverse parties for purpose of appeal.—Winegar v. Fritz, 164 Mich. 427.

Nonappealability of judgment unless injurious, see ante § 36.

Necessity that interest be injured, see post § 62.

Necessity of interest to join in another's appeal, see post § 77, ¶ 355.

¶ 288. Every person desiring to appeal must have an interest in the subject-matter of the litigation.—Allen v. Soule, 191 Mich. 194.

¶ 289. A foreclosure purchaser has such an interest as entitles him to appeal from an order setting aside the sale, even though he has conveyed to another.—Lawrence v. Jarvis, 36 Mich. 281.

¶ 290. A. assigned a claim which he held against an estate to his wife, but on a proceeding against him in the nature of a creditor's bill under Comp. L. 1871, ch. 203 (How. St., § 8107) an order was made declaring the assignment void as against creditors, appointing a receiver, and restraining the transfer to A. of the money due to him from the estate, or any interference with it by A. or his wife. Held, that A. could appeal from this order, as it would not protect him from proceedings to enforce his liability on the assignment.—Reed v. Baker, 42 Mich. 272.

¶ 291. A decree in favor of judgment creditors setting aside certain conveyances as fraudulent and providing that the costs shall be satisfied and paid out of the property, is not appealable by the grantors, as they have no interest in the property, can derive no benefit from a reversal of the decree and have no pecuniary interest in the suit. Such grantors do not represent the grantees or vendees, who being non-residents and not having been served with process, have a remedy, if they chose to avail themselves of it, but the grantors cannot be said to have an appealable interest.—Manhard Hardware Co. v. Rothschild, 121 Mich. 657.

¶ 292. In an action for the dissolution of a partnership and for an accounting where a city had been made a party, and an injunction prayed to preserve moneys in the city's hands due on a contract of the firm, and the city had filed a cross-bill through its mayor and clerk, the city has an appealable interest in the suit where the real issue tried related to the priority of rights as to money due from the city between the firm, the materialmen, and the workmen on the contract, the city's interest being its responsibility to the materialmen in case of a deficit.—Carlisle v. Spain, 147 Mich. 158.

¶ 293. A mortgagee of land and an assignee of the mortgage who disclaim any interest in the mortgage, which was owned by a third person, are not parties possessing any interest in the subject-matter of a suit so as to be entitled to appeal from a decree in favor of complainant granting the relief prayed on a bill by the purchaser of part of the land covered by the mortgage against a subsequent purchaser of the remaining part of the land, who had agreed to assume the payment of the entire mortgage, and such mortgagee and assignee, asking for a decree reversing the order of the sale of the property on foreclosure so that the land purchased by the party assuming the mortgage might be sold first.—Allen v. Soule, 191 Mich. 194.

¶ 294. Where a corporation on passing into the hands of a receiver has become a party defendant to a suit for the distribution of the remaining assets, it cannot prosecute an appeal from a decree consented to by it and the receiver through their attorney, where the corporation has no interest in the fund to be distributed.—Gorman v. Hirsh Co., 177 Mich. 382. (Ostrander and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

Grievance to party as essential of appealability, see ante § 36.
Cost decrees and judgments, see also ante § 41.
Necessity that grievance be to one interested, see ante § 61.
Dismissal or affirmance on hearing for want of grievance, see post § 481.

¶ 295. A party is aggrieved by a judgment or decree when it operates on his rights in property or bears directly upon his interest.—In re More's Estate, 179 Mich. 237.

¶ 296. Where one party appeals from the decision of the judge of probate to the circuit court, and in that court the decision appealed from is affirmed, the party appealing is the only one who can bring error; since he alone can be said to be aggrieved by the judgment of the circuit court.—Jackson v. Hosmer, 14 Mich. 88.

¶ 297. If one who has no right appeals from the probate of a will, and in the circuit the proponents of the will, instead of moving to dismiss his appeal, join issue with him on the merits, and the judgment affirming the will is also a personal judgment against him for costs, he may bring error.—Taff v. Hosmer, 14 Mich. 249.

¶ 298. A writ of error may be sued out in name of executor appointed on probate here of foreign will of nonresident defendant who died after entry of judgment, though it is not shown that testator had property in Michigan.—Hubbell v. Blandy, 87 Mich. 209.

¶ 299. A bank is not properly a party to an appeal from a decree in interpleader awarding the fund to one defendant where some time previous it has been decreed that the bank pay the fund into court and be discharged from all liability to either defendant from which first decree one defendant appealed and appeal was dismissed.—Detroit Sav. Bank v. Haines, 128 Mich. 38.

¶ 299a. Where a purchaser at a sale made in pursuance to a decree in a chancery suit, obtains from the lower court an order for a writ of assistance to aid him in getting possession, a claimant to title to sustain an appeal from this order under Act No. 340, Pub. Acts 1907, must show that his title was not acquired after the chancery suit was begun (which would make him subject to the writ) or else that he had a title independent from that of the parties to the litigation.—Lightner v. Prentis, 158 Mich. 13.

V. WAIVER OR LOSS OF RIGHT.

§ 63. Agreement or waiver generally.

Right to appeal and waiver or loss of right in condemnation and highways proceedings, see Eminent Domain, VIII; Highways, II, B.
On appeals from probate, see Probate Courts, III.
Waiver by action inviting judgment complained of, see post § 64.
Waiver of right to complain of error, see post §§ 225-229.

¶ 300. Where an agreement to arbitrate provided that any question which might arise relative thereto should be submitted to the circuit court "and its decision shall be final," the decision of the circuit court thereunder is not subject to review on appeal.—Hoste v. Dalton, 137 Mich. 522.

§ 64. Invited error or judgment.

The doctrine that one cannot invite error by his course or conduct on the trial and then complain of a particular error thus induced is correlative to the rule that one must raise the objections on which he would insist and must save them by obtaining a ruling and a proper exception. See generally Saving Questions for Review.

Consent to decree, see also ante ¶ 294.

¶ 301. Parties are at liberty to waive rights secured to them by rules of practice, and they may also waive objections to pleading or to evidence; they can stipulate facts or confess judgment. But if they stipulate to substitute methods of their own in place of essential rules of legal procedure, they cannot afterwards claim the right of review, —Harris v. Sweetland, 48 Mich. 110.

See also Saving Questions for Review.

Remarriage as barring attack of divorce decree, see also Divorce, VII.

Acceptance or use of property awarded as alimony as bar to review of award, see also Divorce, X, E.

For the rule that such questions may be reviewed on appeal or error to the final judgment, see post XII, B, 2.

¶ 302. Upon the sustaining of a plea in abatement which had the effect of precluding a plaintiff in ejectment from prosecuting his homestead claim, raised by one of the counts of the declaration, the plaintiff was not required to appeal from the order quashing such count, but was entitled to await final judgment and then obtain a review of the question by writ of error.—Upton v. Gerber, 136 Mich. 72.

§ 66. Compliance with or recognition of judgment as proper.

Right to appeal from decree on cross-bill where object of bill has been realized, see also ante ¶ 146.

Dismissal on satisfaction or compliance, see post § 162.

¶ 303. Right to appeal from an order permitting a person interested but not a party to the suit, to file a bill in the nature of a bill of review, if such right ever existed, is waived by filing an answer thereto.—Leggett v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 247.

¶ 304. Payment by plaintiff in error of an execution issued against him on the judgment upon which error is brought cannot be treated as voluntary, and is no objection to sustaining a writ of error to reverse such judgment.—Watson v Kane, 31 Mich. 61.

¶ 305. A settlement with one of two defendants by complainant, who has obtained a decree requiring each to pay her a specified sum, from which decree she has appealed, does not operate as an affirmance of the decree, so as to preclude her from prosecuting her appeal as against the other defendant. —Carmichael v. Lathrop, 112 Mich. 301.

¶ 307. On bill to set aside a deed where it is admitted in the answer of the grantee defendant that the deed was intended as security and the trial court determines that the conveyance was a mortgage and did not pass the legal title, the court's determination cannot be questioned in the Supreme Court by another defendant, the appellee, who purchased the land described in such deed under a contract from such grantee defendant.—Wiles v. Shafer, 175 Mich. 704.

VI. PROCEDURE TO OBTAIN REVIEW BY APPEAL, ERROR OR CASE.

A. SAVING OBJECTIONS AND EXCEPTIONS.

§ 68. In general; cross-references.

The procedure to have a review of an action or ruling of the trial court deemed to be erroneous begins in the trial court by taking of an objection or the making of a request for a ruling, the procurement of a ruling thereon, the taking of an exception thereto when necessary to preserve the matter so ruled on, the adherence to the objection and exception so taken, and finally the embodiment of the narrative or history of the ruling in the bill of exceptions or settled case so as to be contained in the "record on error." All such matters had and done in the trial court are treated in topic Saving Questions for Review, and the making up and settlement of the case or bill of exceptions is treated post this topic, VI, D.

Requisite showing of exceptions and objections in the bill or case, see post § 101 et seq., 177 et seq.

B. APPLICATION, CLAIM AND NOTICE, AND WRIT OF ERROR.

§ 69. Application for and claim of appeal.

Right to appeal and remedy for appeal or review, see ante I.
Filing bond and payment of fees, see post VI, C.

¶ 309. Under former chancery practice written claim of appeal was not required. —Emerson v. Atwater, 5 Mich. 34; Warner v. Whittaker, 5 Mich. 241.

¶ 310. A claim of appeal having been filed by seven defendants, an eighth defendant, whose name had been inadvertently omitted therefrom, executed in his own behalf and on behalf of the other seven the statutory bond, to which was attached a stipulation signed by non-appealing defendants and by complainant's solicitor, accepting such bond, waiving any question as to the sufficiency of the sureties, and all further notice of entering said appeal. Held, that the claim was amendable by inserting the name of the eighth defendant.—In re Flint & P. M. R. Co.'s Application, 105 Mich. 289.

§ 70. Notice of appeal and service.

Time for service and effect of delay, see post §§ 72-75.

Direction of court as to manner of service, see Sup. Ct. Rule 26.
Service of notice on attorneys, see Sup. Ct. Rule 21.

¶ 311. Parties who have disclaimed all interest in the subject-matter of an appeal need not be served with formal notice of the appeal.—Detroit Society for Study & Prevention of Tuberculosis v. Detroit Society for Study & Prevention of Tuberculosis, 167 Mich. 97.

¶ 312. The exchange of printed briefs before a motion is made to dismiss the appeal operates as a waiver of the written notice of appeal.—Cameron v. Adams, 31 Mich. 71.

¶ 313. Failure to serve the appellee with notice of the proceedings in error is waived by a hearing of the appeal without objection, and the presence in the record of a writ of error and return accompanied by a certified transcript of the entire proceedings. —Hirsh v. Fisher, 138 Mich. 95.

§ 71. Writ of error and issuance.

Statutory right to writ of error on judgment over $500, see ante ¶¶ 13, 14.
Return day for writ, see post § 125.
Suing out writ before settlement of exceptions or afterwards, see post § 76.
Showing as to issuance after time, see post ¶ 706.

¶ 314. Under Laws 1891, Act No. 200, § 61, failure in a tax case to claim appeal and file the bonds for costs within twenty days after entry of the decree necessitates dismissal of the appeal.—Carney v. Baldwin, 95 Mich. 442.

¶ 315. Delay of seven days after the twenty days allowed by Sup. Ct. Rule 14, in serving notice of perfection of appeal, is not of itself sufficient to warrant a dismissal where no damage has resulted.—Tucker v. Stone, 92 Mich. 298.

¶ 316. Writs of error and of certiorari are barred—allowing for all disabilities—after five years from judgment (How. St., §§ 8686, 8687, 8689), and if sued out will be dismissed. —People v. Van Wagner, 51 Mich. 171.

¶ 317. Where a stipulation between parties specified that it should in no wise affect the rights or claims of either party, writs of error issued three years after judgment, to review alleged rights based on the stipulation, will be dismissed.—Bliss v. Caille Bros. Co., 158 Mich. 212.

¶ 318. The term "decree," as used in Pub. Acts 1907, No. 340, § 2, allowing forty days after the filing of a decree in chancery to claim an appeal, is broad enough to include an order overruling a demurrer, although such order is not a final decree.—Moody v. Macomber, 156 Mich. 76.

Time whence limitation against writ of error is to be computed (entry of judgment by clerk), see Jud. Act, Chap. L, § 10; Comp. L. 1915, § 13745.

¶ 319. If taken within forty days from the time the decree is drawn up and left with the register to be entered it is in time, though more than forty days from the time when the judge announced orally what the decree would be.—Sellers v. Botsford, 9 Mich. 490.

¶ 320. If a decree is entered in vacation the forty days commence to run only from notice of its entry.—McClung v. McClung, 39 Mich. 55.

¶ 321. When the testimony has been taken in open court the forty days within which an appeal must be taken run from the settlement of the case.—Gale v. Gould, 40 Mich. 62; Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181.

¶ 322. The statute limiting the time for bringing writ of error commences running from the rendition of the judgment, and is not affected by the settlement of exceptions afterwards.—Teller v. Willis, 12 Mich. 384; Borden v. Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co., 14 Mich. 232.

¶ 323. Where the last of the forty days in which an appeal is allowed to be taken is Sunday the appeal cannot be taken on the following Monday.—Drake v. Andrews, 2 Mich. 203.

¶ 324. Under Const., art. 6, § 5, providing that the Supreme Court shall by general rules establish, modify and amend the practice in such court * * * and simplify the same, the time for filing the record is "forty days after the filing of the appeal bond" (Sup. Ct. Rule 15) notwithstanding Pub. Acts 1879, No. 30, which amended Comp. L. 1871, § 5182, by requiring the register to transmit the record within 15 days; and accordingly the time for noticing the cause under Sup. Ct. Rule 34 begins on the expiration of the forty days.—Byrne v. Gypsum Plaster & Stucco Co., 141 Mich. 62.

¶ 325. Comp. Laws 1897, § 550, fixing the time for appeal from a decree in chancery will limit the appellant to his appeal from the order denying a rehearing where the appeal is taken on March 2nd following a decree on November 1st, and the denial of a rehearing on January 10th.—Wilkinson v. Kneeland, 125 Mich. 261.

¶ 326. An order allowing compensation to counsel for complainant and directing the trustee to pay it, made after a hearing but before final decree on the merits, is within the provision of Pub. Acts 1899, No. 243, which requires appeal within forty days of the date of the order where not based on pleading and proofs.—Hopkins v. Crossley, 138 Mich. 561.

¶ 327. An order overruling a demurrer to a bill was entered September 23rd, and thirty days was given defendant to file an answer. He did not do so, but took an appeal November 23rd. Held, the forty days given by Act No. 340, Pub. Acts 1907, for appeal, began to run September 23rd, and not at the end of the thirty days allotted for the answer.—Bliss v. Tyler, 156 Mich. 640.

¶ 328. Judgment was entered in the trial court October 13, 1909. The court fixed sixty days as the time for making a case. November 29, 1909, motion for a new trial was overruled. Within sixty days of this date, the appellant served upon appellee his proposed case made. By agreement of the parties the time for settling such case made was extended from time to time, the last extension being to October 15, 1910. On October 13, 1910, the case was settled and appellant filed the same with the clerk at 4:15 p. m. of that day. The clerk entered the same of record the following day. Held under 3 Comp. L. 1897, § 10492, limiting the period for taking an appeal to one year, a motion to dismiss the appeal should be denied.—Hartley v. Miller, 164 Mich. 47.

¶ 329. Where an order setting aside a decree of divorce by default against a husband is granted upon condition that the husband pay the wife solicitor's fees of a specified amount within a certain period, and a petition to set aside the order is denied, but the time for payment is extended for 30 days, and the husband fails to pay the solicitor's fees within such second period, a claim of appeal filed within 40 days after the expiration of such second period is timely.—McDonald v. McDonald, 190 Mich. 649.

¶ 329a. A party who, after judgment rendered against him on trial before the judge, has acted upon the judgment, and procured orders allowing time to settle a case or bill of exceptions, cannot object that he has had no written notice of the judgment, and insist upon a right to make and serve a case, under rule 81, until ten days after such written notice.—Richardson v. Yawkey, 9 Mich. 139.

¶ 330. By filing a claim of appeal and an appeal bond, and giving notice thereof to the opposite party, a party waives his right to a notice in writing of the entry of the decree.—Stockwell v. Eaton Circuit Judge, 172 Mich. 166.

§ 75. ——Extension or enlargement of time.

Settlement of exceptions as affecting time for taking out writ, see ante § 73, ¶ 322.

For settlement of bill or case, see post §§ 95-98.

For filing return in Supreme Court, see post § 129.

For assigning errors, see post § 121.

Filing bond after time or nunc pro tunc, see post § 81.

Extension of time for filing claim of appeal, see Jud. Act, Chap. L, § 20, Comp L. 1915, § 13755.

¶ 331. Under Act No. 340, Pub. Acts 1907, a party to a suit ordinarily has only forty days after the filing of a decree in chancery within which to file his claim of appeal, but the court may, upon cause shown and notice given, extend the time.—Witham v. Clinton Circuit Judge, 150 Mich. 568.

¶ 332. The court may, in its discretion, extend the time in which to perfect an appeal.—Southwick v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 173 Mich. 472.

¶ 333. An application under Chancery Rule 37h for an extension of time in which to perfect an appeal, is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court.—Smilansky v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 186 Mich. 463.

¶ 334. Appellants from a decree in favor of the proponents of a will must, in order to secure an extension of the regular time for taking a writ of error, show a valid excuse for the delay.—In re Langley's Estate, 158 Mich. 395; Whitehead v. Sunley, Id.

¶ 335. The Supreme Court will not grant a dilatory appeal where there is no showing that the decree of the circuit court was not just or that justice requires a revision of the case.—Stockwell v. Eaton Circuit Judge, 172 Mich. 166.

¶ 336. Where the party has failed to comply with the provisions of the statute within the time prescribed the court will not allow a re-entry of the decree in order to enable him to appeal.—Weed v. Lyon, W. 77.

¶ 337. Neither the statute (3 Comp. L. 1897, § 10504) nor Circuit Court Rule 47, nor any order of the court made pursuant thereto, may operate to extend the time limited by the statute in which to take out a writ of error.—Kaiser v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 162 Mich. 247.

¶ 338. One cannot gain time for suing out a writ of error by moving to vacate judgment.—Buckley v. Sutton, 38 Mich. 1.

¶ 339. The time within which a writ of error must be sued out under How. St., § 8686, requiring all such writs to be brought within one year after the rendition of final judgment, was not extended by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 134, of which authorizes the assignment of error upon the action of the trial court in refusing a motion for a new trial. The right to sue out the writ is not suspended pending decision of motion for new trial.—Hill v. Hill, 114 Mich. 599.

¶ 340. Under the Judicature Act, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, Chap. 51, § 6, providing that all writs of error upon any judgment or final determination shall issue within one year after the rendering of such judgment or final determination is made and not thereafter, except that in case a bill of exceptions has been settled and signed by the circuit judge such writ of error shall be taken out within ten days after the bill of exceptions shall have been signed, and that the time in which writs of error may be taken out may be extended not exceeding six months by the Supreme Court or by one of the Supreme Court justices in chambers when any party has been prevented from taking out the same by circumstances not under his control, upon a proper showing, where a writ of error is obtained more than ten days after the bill of exceptions is signed and it appears that the plaintiff in error was in no way responsible for the delay in suing out such writ, it will be allowed to stand the same as though an extension of time had been granted upon a proper showing.—Rasor v. Mott, 194 Mich. 311.

¶ 341. A judgment in the lower court was rendered August 21, 1908. Motion for a new trial was entered, and the consideration of it postponed from time to time so that the decision overruling it was not filed until August 16, 1909. Defendant's counsel were absent from their offices on business, and did not receive notice of the decision until August 23, 1909. Held, that under Comp. L. 1897, § 10492, providing for an extension of time for suing out a writ of error beyond the year, the defendant was entitled, under these circumstances, to such extension.—Belmer v. Boyne City Tanning Co., 158 Mich. 399.

¶ 342. Act No. 299, Pub. Acts 1909, relating to the perfecting of appeals, makes no limitation as to time when an order extending the time for taking an appeal must be entered except that the time of appeal may not be extended beyond one year. Notice of a decree dismissing the cross-bill of defendant Dettenthaler against his codefendant Sullivan was served on Sullivan October 11, 1909. No order made with proper notice to Sullivan, and extending the time of appeal, was entered within sixty days from the time of the serving of said notice. Chancery Rule 37 provides that the court shall grant no extension of time to perfect an appeal, after the expiration of sixty days, to a party who has not obtained an extension within the sixty days. This rule was adopted by the Supreme Court February 3, 1910. Held, said rule did not apply to defendant Dettenthaler's case, and an appeal perfected on an extension of time made after the expiration of the sixty days was validly taken.—Winegar v. Fritz, 164 Mich. 427.

¶ 344. An attorney was instructed by an appellant from a decision of the circuit judge to do all things necessary to perfect an appeal. The attorney failed to do his duty as a lawyer, and did not file the appeal in time, and the Supreme Court dismissed it. Thereafter the court extended the time of appeal. Held, on mandamus to compel the circuit court to vacate the order extending the time of appeal, that the facts justified the ruling, and the writ should be denied.—Bliss v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 507.

¶ 345. A decree in chancery was entered October 22, 1908. Defendant's counsel prepared notice of an appeal, but forgot to file it. He ordered immediately a transcript of the evidence to be made, and within forty days after October 22nd, met the complainant's counsel, showed him the transcript, and talked with him about an appeal. In July, 1909, defendant's counsel discovered his mistake, and immediately filed the appeal notice. These facts were set forth in an affidavit by him, and the circuit court granted an extension of time to file the appeal. Relator, the complainant in the chancery suit, brought mandamus to compel the lower court to vacate the order of extension. Held, under section 6, Act No. 340, Pub. Acts 1907, giving the trial judge power upon cause shown to extend the time for taking appeals, that his discretion was properly exercised in this case, and the writ should be denied.—Klotz v. Lenawee Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 639.

¶ 346. Where counsel for the defendants in an equity case timely advised them of the decree and essentials to perfect the appeal, if desired, held that as to defendants themselves, no sufficient excuse was shown for failure to promptly instruct their counsel, in case an appeal was desired, to have proper steps to that end seasonably taken within the time prescribed by law.—Guthrie v. Leelenau Circuit Judge, 197 Mich. 321.

Bill of exceptions signed after writ issued, see also post ¶ 418.

Filing bond out of order, see also post ¶ 369.

Grounds for dismissal that steps were taken out of order, see post ¶¶ 646, 647.

¶ 347. The claim of appeal may be filed as well after the giving of the appeal bond as before, if within the forty days.—Emerson v. Atwater, 5 Mich. 34.

¶ 348. A party is not obliged to wait until his exceptions are settled before suing out his writ of error. The exceptions, if sealed and filed after error brought, may be brought up like any other omitted portion of the record. —Teller v. Willis, 12 Mich. 384.

¶ 349. While claiming an appeal and filing the bond prior to the settlement of a case, by defendant, is irregular, plaintiff waives the irregularity where he knew that defendant was proceeding in good faith and with diligence to procure the testimony for settlement of the case and was obtaining orders from the court extending the time for that purpose, and took no steps to procure a dismissal until a motion for an extension of time to perfect the appeal had been made in the Supreme Court.—Sherman v. Sherman, 139 Mich. 180.

¶ 350. Section 2, Act No. 299, Pub. Acts 1909, provides for filing claim of appeal with the register in chancery forty days after the settlement of the case on appeal. Held, the statute is complied with if the claim of appeal is filed before such settlement.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 162 Mich. 703.

§ 77. Joint and separate appeals and writs.

Necessity of separate appeal or error to enable party to complain of errors, see post XI, D.

Who may complain of errors where one party separately appeals, see post §§ 219-223.

Settlement with one party as affecting right to appeal from portion of decree affecting other coparty, see ante ¶ 305.

Necessity that judgment be finally entered as to all joint parties, see ante § 34 ¶ 139.

Joint and separate bonds, see post § 86.

Consolidation of appeals for hearing, see post § 141.

Affirmance as to some and reversal as to others, see post § 486.

¶ 351. A writ of error brings up the whole case. Where judgment has been rendered in favor of two of the defendants to a joint demand and against the other, a writ of error brought against the two only will be dismissed; the defendants cannot be severed in that manner.—Mills v. Bunce, 26 Mich. 101.

¶ 352. Where a plaintiff had consented to a new trial on the stipulation by two of the three defendants in the case that the judgment therein should be final, a writ of error afterwards sued out by the three jointly was dismissed on motion. If the other defendant desired a review of the judgment, he should have sued out a sole writ in his own behalf, in accordance with Supreme Court Rule 35. —Cole v. Thayer, 25 Mich. 212.

¶ 353. An appeal by one defendant in foreclosure does not benefit another, nor does his failure to appeal prevent another from appealing.—Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430.

¶ 354. Where both parties join in the same bill of exceptions and both assign errors, one writ of error will not suffice for both appeals.—Haas v. Malto-Grapo Co., 148 Mich. 358.

¶ 355. From an order granting a writ of assistance in certain tax proceedings, one not in any way a party to those proceedings nor a party to the application for the writ of assistance, and another, the original title owner to the land, are not entitled jointly to appeal.—Haney v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 170 Mich. 685.

¶ 356. Where in a suit against a husband and wife to foreclose a mortgage, defendants, owners by entirety of the premises, file a cross-bill asking merely that the note and mortgage be canceled on the ground of fraud and delivered up, and that they be relieved of liability, the wife alone may appeal from a decree in favor of complainant.—Davis v. Wardowski, 164 Mich. 561.

Amendment by adding name of coappellant to claim, see ante ¶ 310.

The question whether a separate appeal or writ of error should be taken to a separate order usually appears in the form of a question what will be examined and reviewed on appeal or error to the final judgment or decree, or what may be considered on appeal from an interlocutory appeal, or on an appeal from an order after the final judgment, see post XII, B, 2.

¶ 357. Appointment of receiver under creditor's bill is not reviewed on appeal from order holding defendant in contempt for not assigning to him as ordered.—Bagley v. Scudder, 66 Mich. 97.

¶ 358. Where joint plaintiffs in ejectment claimed undivided interests, and one recovered but the other did not, and both plaintiffs and defendants then treated the cause as severed and proceeded separately, though the pleadings were not changed beyond the title, and no order for a severance was entered, defendants, after removing one branch of the case to the Supreme Court, were allowed to object to the removal of the other and claim that there was nothing before the court. But such practice is reprehensibly loose.—Stewart v. Ashley, 34 Mich. 183.

¶ 359. A writ of error to bring up a judgment against joint parties should be taken out in the name of all, and if any do not wish to prosecute it, a severance may be had under Supreme Court Rule 35. But a writ taken out in the name of only one is amendable if it identifies the judgment; and if the party who was not joined afterwards files his election not to proceed, the writ will not be dismissed for the nonjoinder, but the other may be allowed to proceed separately.—Spencer v. Fish, 43 Mich. 226.

¶ 360. Where infants have been joined as plaintiffs with an adult who has not been designated as their next friend, though their natural guardian, the objection that on taking out a writ of error they should have procured the latter's appointment as next friend, or the adult should have severed in its prosecution, is too late if not made until the hearing; it should be raised by a motion to dismiss.—Sick v. Michigan Aid Ass'n, 49 Mich. 50.

See also Divorce, VII.

Effect of abatement on appealability of judgment or decree, see ante § 35.

Amendment by impleading new party, see also post ¶ 648.

Remanding cause for revivor, see post § 515.

Settlement of bill on death of party, see post §§ 109, 114.

Appellate judgment on abatement, see post § 492.

Right of codefendant to appeal in divorce suit abated by death of spouse, see also Abatement and Revival, ¶ 73.

Changing entitling of papers after severance as to portion of parties, see also Affidavits, ¶ 26.

¶ 361. A writ of error may issue without any steps to revive the judgment, where the party prevailing has died since judgment; and, in such case, steps may be taken after the return of the writ to bring in the representatives by scire facias, or by the process provided by rule of court.—Van Valkenburg v. Rogers, 17 Mich. 322.

¶ 362. A wife and her husband were sued jointly, but he died and the suit was discontinued as to him. The case was afterwards referred and recovery was had as against the wife alone, on the referee's report. In suing out a writ of error the wife entitled the case as if her husband was still a party. Held, that the irregularity might be disregarded.—Campau v. Brown, 48 Mich. 145.

¶ 363. Revivor and a writ of error in name of executor appointed on Michigan probate of foreign will of nonresident defendant who died after judgment was sustained over objection that he left no assets in Michigan.—Hubbell v. Blandy, 87 Mich. 209.

¶ 364. The lower court directed a judgment in a personal injury suit for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. Before the settling of a bill of exceptions, defendant died. Held, before the Supreme Court would hear an appeal, plaintiff must have the proper persons substituted as defendants.—Courser v. Jackson, 159 Mich. 119.

C. BONDS AND SECURITY AND PAYMENT OF FEES.

§ 81. Necessity of bond and time for filing.

Timely filing as jurisdictional, see also ante § 11, ¶ 54.

Filing bond before claim or claim before bond, see ante § 76.

Bond as condition of extension of time for settling bill, see post ¶ 441.

Delay as ground for denying extension of time to settle bill, see post § 95, ¶ 427.

Filing bond as waiver of notice of entry of decree, see ante ¶ 330.

Bonds for stay of proceedings or for security for costs, see Security for Costs; Stay of Proceedings, II.

Exemption of state or state officer appealing, see Jud. Act, Chap. L, § 27; Comp. L. 1915, § 13762.

¶ 365. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 550, as amended by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 243, no bond is required on an appeal from an order overruling a demurrer in chancery where no stay of proceedings is sought.—Daschke v. Schellenberg, 124 Mich. 16.

¶ 366. An appeal from an order overruling a motion to vacate an order dismissing a petition to set aside a tax sale is a general chancery appeal in which appellant is not required to file a bond in order to perfect it, except in case to stay proceedings, by virtue of Pub. Acts 1899, No. 243, amending Comp. L. 1897, § 550.—Hayward v. O'Connor, 142 Mich. 230.

¶ 368. If no bond is filed during the time allowed for an appeal the party cannot be allowed to file one afterwards.—Covell v. Mosely, 15 Mich. 514.

¶ 369. If the bond is filed in due time it is immaterial whether it precedes or follows the claim of appeal.—Emerson v. Atwater, 5 Mich. 34.

Number of sureties, see also post ¶ 386.
General law of the execution of instruments, see Execution of Instruments.

¶ 371. It is not necessary that the bond should be executed by all the appellants. It is sufficient if it appear to be executed by one on behalf of all.—Warner v. Whittaker, 5 Mich. 241; Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181.

¶ 372. An appeal bond may be good though purporting to be signed in the surety's name by his attorney.—Wood v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 48 Mich. 641.

§ 83. Amount and conditions.

Amendment as to amount, see post § 87.
Conditions variant from statutory form, see also post ¶ 2400.
What constitutes breach or fulfillment of conditions, see post § 571.
Operation of conditions in bonds given on cross-appeals, see also post ¶ 2402.
Liabilities on bond, and enforcement of same, see post XVI.
Bond for supersedeas and stay of proceedings, see Stay, II.

¶ 373. The appeal bond provided for by How. St., § 6738, is intended to secure the performance or satisfaction of any decree the Supreme Court may make, where such decree is a personal one, requiring the party to do some act or pay some amount of money not otherwise secured.—Richardson v. Richardson, 82 Mich. 305.

¶ 374. In fixing the penalty of an additional appeal bond the Supreme Court will look to the decree made by the court below for a criterion to enable it to fix such penalty.—Richardson v. Richardson, 82 Mich. 305.

¶ 375. An appeal bond in chancery does not secure the payment of the entirety of the debt out of which the decree arises, which is otherwise secured, and is not to be made for a sum large enough to do so; but should cover the decree only.—Reid v. Wayne County Judge, 132 Mich. 406.

¶ 377. The rights of defendant in an action to set aside a deed to a certain brick store and office building, are not adequately secured by complainant's bond to answer to defendant for all rents collected from such property, pending an appeal from a decree in such action putting complainant in possession of the property; but such bond should also obligate complainant to pay defendant all damages resulting from negligence in the care or management of such property.—Barron v. Myers, 145 Mich. 342.

¶ 378. A bond of executors of a will, in the penal sum of $150, conditioned to prosecute a writ of error, and to pay and satisfy such judgment as may be rendered against them, given after an order is made to pay a legacy provided for in a will, out of the estate, the judgment being for the sum of $593.30, is insufficient where it does not comply with Comp. L. 1897, § 10355 (How. St., § 7621c, as amended by Pub. Acts 1897, No. 124), as to a stay of proceedings upon execution of a bond with sufficient sureties to pay the judgment if not set aside or reversed, and when it does not comply with Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10485, 10486 (How. St., §§ 8679, 8680), providing that no writ of error shall stay or supersede execution in any civil action unless a bond shall be given to pay and satisfy the judgment that may be rendered, which bond shall be double the amount of the judgment upon which the writ of error is brought. As there is no other statute under which an appeal may be had, the circuit court has no inherent power to stay proceedings upon such terms as it thinks just, and the fact that the judgment was ordered paid out of the assets of the estate, would not change the rule that a stay of execution can only be granted in accordance with the statute.—Markham v. Kent Circuit Judge, 121 Mich. 573.

¶ 379. Mere clerical errors in a supersedeas bond, to-wit, "twn" for "two" in stating the amount of the judgment, will be disregarded where the meaning is evident.—Ten Hopen v. Taylor, 103 Mich. 178.

Affidavits to impeach officer's certificate of approval, see post ¶ 708.

¶ 380. An indorsement upon the bond, signed by the proper officer, in the following words: "I approve of this bond, both in form and substance," will be held an approval both of the sureties and of the penal sum, and is sufficient.—Maynard v. Hoskins, 8 Mich. 260.

¶ 381. The officer who fixes the penalty of the appeal bond does not acquire exclusive jurisdiction to approve the sureties; but they may be approved by any officer empowered by law to act in the premises.—Emerson v. Atwater, 5 Mich. 34.

§ 86. Joint and several bonds.

¶ 382. Where one who is a party both personally and as administrator gives an appeal bond in his own behalf only, no appeal is perfected in behalf of the administrator. —Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181.

§ 87. Additional bonds, amendments and further security.

Penalty of additional bond, see also ante ¶ 374.

¶ 383. Appellate courts have power, as incident to their appellate character, on application, to amend the original bond prescribed by statute for appeal or to require a new one.—Coeling v. Barnard, 159 Mich. 634.

¶ 384. Under Comp. L. 1857, § 3597, the Supreme Court has no power to require an appellant to give a new or further appeal bond in addition to the one approved by the commissioners and alleged to be insufficient.—Moore v. Olin, 6 Mich. 328.

¶ 385. Laws 1877, Act No. 13, (see How. St., § 6738) giving the Supreme Court power to order an additional bond, does not apply to cases appealed prior to its passage.—Perrin v. Kellogg, 37 Mich. 316.

¶ 386. The bond should have at least two sureties; but if defective in this or any other respect, the Supreme Court, if motion to dismiss is made for this cause, may allow a new bond to be filed or allow that already given to be amended.—Beebe v. Young, 13 Mich. 221; Torrent v. Muskegon Booming Co., 21 Mich. 159.

¶ 387. Where an appeal bond is approved by one acting under color of authority, but having no right, the Supreme Court may allow an amendment.—McClintock v. Laing, 19 Mich. 300.

¶ 388. Where an appeal bond is defective it is proper to allow the filing of an amended bond, and an appeal will not be dismissed for defects in the bond where an amended bond is tendered.—Cameron v. Adams, 31 Mich. 71.

¶ 389. Where an appeal bond is defective or insufficient the remedy is by motion in the Supreme Court for leave to amend or file a new bond, and not by mandamus against the judge who approved it.—Pulte v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 47 Mich. 646.

¶ 390. A party is not guilty of laches in not making a motion for the filing of an additional appeal bond during the term in which the transcript is filed, where there is but one motion day in that term after such filing at which the motion could be heard.—Richardson v. Richardson, 82 Mich. 305.

§ 89. Fees and payment of same.

As precedent to extension of time to settle case on appeal, see post § 98.

Payment or offer as condition of further time to file return, see post § 129, ¶ 581.

Who must provide cost of transcript for settling bill, see post ¶ 507.

Nonpayment as ground for dismissal, see post § 154.

Costs and fees and prepayment of same in general, see Costs; Courts, I (right of clerk or stenographer to fees).

Fee for appeal, see Jud. Act, Chap. XLVI, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 13679.

¶ 391. In a chancery appeal, the payment of the register's fee required by Act 299, P. A. 1909 is jurisdictional.—Perkins v. Perkins, 173 Mich. 690.

¶ 392. Failure to pay the fee within 30 days upon an appeal from a chancery order appointing a receiver of defendant's property, as required by Comp. L. 1897, § 552, entitles complainant to a dismissal where he has done nothing to waive the right.—Trombly v. Klersy, 139 Mich. 311.

¶ 393. An appeal in chancery is not perfected, under Act No. 340, Pub. Acts 1907, until the register's fee is paid, and as the time for perfecting an appeal is limited to one year from the filing of the decree, and cannot be extended, an appeal is not taken and perfected if the fee is not paid until after the year has elapsed.—Lum v. Fairbanks, 155 Mich. 23.

¶ 394. Under section 2, Act No. 299, Pub. Acts 1909, but one fee to the register in chancery is required to be paid, and when so paid the opposite party may seasonably claim an appeal, and the costs including the appeal fee will be taken care of by the final decree.—Mack v. Engel, 165 Mich. 540.

fied case is duly filed with the register of the court. Pub. Acts 1907, No. 340, governing chancery appeals subsequent to June 28, 1907, limits the time for perfecting an appeal to one year from the filing of the decree, and requires that the register's fee be paid when the settled case is filed. Held, that, whether an appeal is taken under the former statute or the latter, the register's fee must be paid within the time limited, and if not so paid, the appeal will be dismissed.—Lum v. Fairbanks, 155 Mich. 23.

¶ 396. Section 2, Act No. 299, Pub. Acts 1909, provides for the payment of five dollars to the register in chancery within forty days after the settlement of the case on appeal. Appellant did not actually pay the fee until after the time limited, but the register considered it paid, gave appellants personal credit for the same, and made no demand therefor. Held, the statutory requirement was sufficiently complied with.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Assn., 162 Mich. 703.

¶ 397. Where the register's fee in a chancery case is not paid until four months after the transcript for appeal is filed, the appeal must be dismissed, since, under Act No. 340, Pub. Acts 1907, § 5, the payment of the fee at the time of filing the transcript with the register is mandatory.—Thompson v. McKay, 154 Mich. 228.

D. PREPARATION OF RECORD OR TRANSCRIPT, ABSTRACT, CASE OR BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

[Note. The term "record" as used in respect to appellate procedure has two distinct meanings, which are often open to confusion. The record proper is the record which the lower court keeps of its proceedings in the clerk's office and comprises those papers in the case which are essential to its history from commencement to judgment, to wit, the pleadings, process and return or appearance, the verdict or findings, and the judgment, but not the incidents of the case or trial, such as interlocutory motions, minutes, opinion, evidence or instructions. In its more extended sense the "record on appeal" includes the record proper and also the bill of exceptions, case, or the like by which the other matters and proceedings are recorded and returned to the reviewing court as the basis of its review. See Cyc. Law Dictionary, title Record.]

A record is necessary to transmit the case to the reviewing court, where it must be seasonably filed (see post VII), in order to confer appellate jurisdiction (see post IX), and it must be sufficient in contents and substance to present for review the things objected to (see post XI, A, B); and the review will not be extended beyond the things thus preserved and sufficiently presented (see post XII, B), for which purpose essential facts will not be supplied by intendment or presumption unfavorable to the decision below (see post XII, C).

Rule that none but matters in the record proper will be examined unless properly brought in by bill or case, see also post XII, B, 1.

Irreviewableness of questions dependent on matters not reducible to record, see post § 278.

Propriety of affirmance without consideration for want of proper record, see post § 478.

Retention of cause to be heard on record proper when no case or exceptions are settled, see post § 157.

Occasion for settling case in chancery, see also post ¶ 674.

Election between exceptions and case made, see also ante ¶ 34.

Proper mode of preserving record in condemnation or highway proceedings, see Eminent Domain, VIII; Highways, II, B.

¶ 398. The nature, functions and origin of the bill of exceptions considered and explained.—Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 36.

¶ 399. The office of a bill of exceptions is to bring before the court legal propositions decided which do not appear on the record.—Smith v. Barstow, 2 D. 155.

¶ 400. The office of the bill is solely to present certain specific points raised only by exceptions.—Turner v. City of Grand Rapids, 20 Mich. 390.

¶ 401. Pub. Acts 1905, No. 129, providing that where a cause is tried upon testimony taken in open court either party may make and settle a case at such time and in such manner as is now provided by rule for the settlement of bills of exception in cases of law has no application to a case not before the court upon pleadings and proofs but upon an oral demurrer to an amended bill.—City of Detroit v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 144 Mich. 696.

¶ 402. In proceedings to bring before the Supreme Court an alleged error of the circuit judge in dismissing an appeal to the circuit court because the appeal had not been authorized, where everything essential to the determination of the matter is found in the papers on file and entries made in the cause, no bill of exceptions is necessary because those papers and entries constitute the record which will be transmitted in obedience to the order contained in the writ of error.

But if anything essential to the determination is found outside the papers filed or entries made, a bill of exceptions is necessary.—City of Flint v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 146 Mich. 439.

¶ 403. A writ of error brings up the files and journal entries in a replevin suit and no bill of exceptions is necessary where the question is as to the sufficiency of the pleadings and papers to describe the property.—Dages v. Brake, 125 Mich. 64.

¶ 404. When no case is settled on appeal the necessity or expediency of ordering a receiver to sell the assets of a corporation in a dissolution proceeding, will not be reviewed.—In re Abbott, 187 Mich. 229.

¶ 405. Since writ of error does not lie to habeas corpus a bill of exceptions is not appropriate for review and need not be approved.—People ex rel. Faust v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 30 Mich. 266.

§ 91. Mode of preserving record; exceptions or case.

Proposals and amendments in making up bill or case, see post § 108.
Approval and settlement and certification, see post §§ 110-114.

¶ 406. Where an appeal is taken in a case where the witnesses were examined in open court, the proper course for the party desiring the testimony to be certified to the Supreme Court under the statute, is to make a case setting it forth, present it to the circuit judge, and procure his order, fixing the time and place when and where it shall be settled, and for notice to the opposite party that he may attend and propose amendments; or instead thereof, take other equivalent proceedings.—Wright v. Dudley, 8 Mich. 74.

¶ 407. The provision of Comp. L. 1897, § 10188, providing for the making and settlement of a case where the testimony is taken before a commissioner permits but does not require testimony taken before a commissioner to be settled before the court as a condition of appeal, and such testimony is still reviewable under the old law (Comp. L. 1897, § 552) without requiring it to be settled.—Hughes v. Love, 136 Mich. 169.

¶ 408. After a trial by the court without a jury the evidence cannot be considered for the purpose of reviewing any question of law "appearing upon the trial" unless brought upon the record by bill of exceptions or case made.—Peabody v. McAvoy, 23 Mich. 526.

¶ 409. Where a cause has been referred by the circuit court to a referee who has reported, finding the facts, and the circuit judge on motion for judgment has filed a written finding of the law, such finding may be brought to the Supreme Court for review as well by writ of error with bill of exceptions as by case made.—Near v. Mitchell, 23 Mich. 382.

¶ 410. Where exceptions are taken on a trial before a referee, the bill of exceptions, when settled, performs the same offices for the purposes of a writ of error as a bill settled by the circuit judge when the case is heard in open court.—Altman v. Wheeler, 18 Mich. 240.

¶ 411. Where a case has been tried before a referee, a bill of exceptions, including the proceedings before the referee, is necessary to enable the court to review the whole proceedings.—Bevier v. Wright, 30 Mich. 484.

§ 93. ——Recitals in order or judgment.

See also post ¶ 831.

¶ 412. The want of a bill of exceptions cannot be supplied by a recital of facts in an order of the court; e. g., one denying a motion for a new trial.—Monnier v. Mizner, 17 Mich. 271.

§ 94. Time for preparation and settlement.

Timeliness as element of jurisdiction, see also ante § 11.
Suing out writ or appeal before settlement or afterwards, see ante § 76.
Filing bond before settlement of case, see ante § 76, ¶¶ 349, 350.
Proceedings to settle, see post §§ 108-116.
Extension of time, application for extension, and grounds for it, see post §§ 95-98.
Allowable time for extensions, see post § 96.
Settlement nunc pro tunc, see post § 116.
Delay or laches as reason for not compelling settlement, see post § 115.
Striking bill or case for delay, see post § 165.
Time allowable for settlement, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, § 62; Comp. L. 1915, § 12634; 1916 C. C. Rule 66, § 1.

¶ 413. The statute allowing three months after trial for the making of a case will be construed to allow three months from the time the decree is made.—Wright v. Dudley, 8 Mich. 74.

¶ 414. The time for the settlement of a bill of exceptions, under C. C. Rule 85, runs from the date of the judgment.—Rayl v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 91 Mich. 4.

¶ 415. Pub. L. 1905, Act No. 129, does not limit the time for settling a chancery case for appeal to the time limited by Circuit Court Rule No. 47.—Tinker v. Piper, 149 Mich. 335.

¶ 416. Pub. Acts 1905, Act No. 129, providing for chancery appeals, does not by reference therein to C. C. Rule No. 47, limit the time for making and settling a chancery case for appeal to the time provided by said rule, but the statute expressly grants three months in which to make and file a case, and gives the circuit judge authority to extend the time without cause and without notice to a time not extending six months after the entry of the decree.—Nolan v. Garrison, 149 Mich. 56.

¶ 417. The motion for a new trial having been denied, defendant in the case has a reasonable time thereafter for the settlement of a bill of exceptions.—Pettinger v, Montmorency Circuit Judge, 164 Mich. 463.

¶ 418. A bill of exceptions returned with a writ of error appeared to have been signed after the writ was sued out. Held to be at most an irregularity which was waived by joinder in error.—Brown v. Bissell, 1 D. 273.

¶ 419. Where a circuit judge has once regularly extended the time to settle a bill of exceptions into a term subsequent to that at which the judgment was rendered, he may, at his discretion, settle the same at any time thereafter.—White v. Campbell, 25 Mich. 463.

¶ 420. A party cannot be deprived by the inaction of the judge of his right to the settlement of a bill of exceptions which he has duly presented.—People ex rel. Wright v. Superior Court Judge, 41 Mich. 726.

¶ 421. A further order of extension having been made by the circuit judge, he cannot afterwards disregard it and refuse to settle the exceptions because not presented for the purpose within the time first allowed.—People ex rel. Teller v. Littlejohn, 11 Mich. 60.

§ 95. Extension of time to prepare and settle.

Allowable time of extension, see also ante ¶ 416.
Discretion of court to extend time, see post § 97.
Power to extend, see also post ¶ 442.
Stipulation as dispensing with formal procedure for extension, see also post ¶ 433.
Waiver of notice of judgment by obtaining extension, see ante ¶ 329a.
Extension of time for settlement, see 1916 C. C. Rule 66, § 2.

¶ 422. Where proofs were taken in open court an extension of time for filing a case on appeal can be applied for after sixty days from the date of the decree, and may be granted if the time allowed does not exceed the statutory period of three months.—Tilden v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 44 Mich. 515.

¶ 423. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 168, extending the time for settling chancery cases, deals with procedure only, and therefore it applies both to pending and to future cases.—Beebe v. Birkett, 108 Mich. 234.

¶ 424. Where the trial court fixes a time for settling a bill of exceptions or making a case, the parties may by agreement extend such time.—Hartley v. Miller, 164 Mich. 47.

¶ 425. A motion for a new trial extends the time for the settlement of a bill of exceptions into the term in which the motion is determined.—Adrian Furniture Manuf. Co. v. Lenawee Circuit Judge 92 Mich. 295.

¶ 426. Where the time for settling a bill of exceptions has been regularly extended during the term at which the case is tried, the circuit judge may settle the same at any time thereafter at his discretion; and he is not deprived of this right because the term of the extension has expired.—Lenhoff v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 565.

¶ 427. Failure to file a bond as required by Comp. L. 1897, § 10355, or to show good cause by affidavit, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to extend the time for settling a bill of exceptions.—Marshall v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 280.

¶ 428. Appellant has a right to settle a bill of exceptions at any time within twenty days after the denial of the motion for a new trial, and within that time the court below has jurisdiction upon motion and upon cause shown, to extend reasonably the time to settle a bill of exceptions.—Kaiser v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 162 Mich. 247.

¶ 429. Respondent judge granted thirty days to defendant to settle a bill of exceptions, after denying a motion for a new trial. Held, that after the expiration of said time, the respondent had the power, upon sufficient cause shown, after due notice to opposing counsel, to further extend the time for settling the said bill.—Pettinger v. Montmorency Circuit Judge, 164 Mich. 463.

Necessity for motion and showing, see also ante ¶¶ 428, 429.
Showing under the Judicature Act, see post § 98.
Necessity for certificate of stenographer, see post § 98.
Improper application for extension as reason for not compelling settlement, see post § 115.
Striking bill or case for want of order of extension, see post § 165.
Objection to extension as waiver of notice to settle, see post § 109, ¶ 504.

¶ 430. While it would have been the better practice for respondents to have applied for extension before the statutory time had expired, a failure to do so would not justify a refusal of the application where the stenographer was dilatory.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Chambers, 89 Mich. 5.

¶ 431. If no order was made during the term at which trial was had, extending the time for settlement of exceptions, the circuit judge has no power to make one afterwards.—Cleveland v. Stein, 14 Mich. 334.

¶ 432. The clerk's neglect to enter an oral order extending the time to settle a bill of exceptions is not ground for striking out a bill settled in pursuance of it; and the omission may be cured by an order for extension made nunc pro tunc at the next term.—Spencer v. Fish, 43 Mich. 226.

¶ 433. When the counsel for both parties have stipulated to extend time for settling exceptions, their stipulation removes the necessity of following the rules, and the court has no right to disregard it.—People ex rel. Hunt v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 39 Mich. 123.

¶ 434. Under 1897 Circuit Court Rule 47, allowing not less than 20 days after entry of judgment for settling a bill of exceptions, and providing that further time may be granted by the court, and that the court may extend such time, and further that not more than 60 days' time shall be granted except for cause and on notice, an application for extension of time after eighty days from entry of judgment have elapsed may be granted on cause shown where there has been no previous extension.—Roach v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 117 Mich. 242.

¶ 435. Under 1897 Circuit Court Rule 47, an order extending, upon an ex parte motion, more than eighty days after the entry of judgment, the time for settling a bill of exceptions, is erroneous.—Singer v. Livingston Circuit Judge, 117 Mich. 318.

¶ 436. The court has no authority to extend time for settling a bill of exceptions for more than eighty days after judgment unless the party applying therefor has complied with the requirements of Circuit Court Rule 47.—Burgess v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 171 Mich. 583.

¶ 437. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10504, providing for the incorporation in a bill of exceptions of the record of proceedings on motion for new trial, and Circuit Court Rule 47, allowing twenty days after judgment for the settlement of a bill of exceptions, and authorizing the court to grant such further reasonable time as may be deemed proper for such settlement, the judge should, on application being made within twenty days after the denial of a motion for a new trial, fix a reasonable time for the settlement of a bill of exceptions.—Harper v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 155 Mich. 543.

¶ 438. Where a court, over twenty days after the denial of a motion for a new trial and eighty days after judgment, enters an order prolonging the time for settling a bill of exceptions without requiring appellant to show cause, the order will be vacated by mandamus.—Kaiser v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 162 Mich. 247.

¶ 439. The requirement of Circuit Court Rule 47 in regard to extending the time for settling a bill of exceptions more than eighty days after judgment can be waived only in writing, duly filed and presented as a foundation for the action of the court, or by admission or stipulation in open court, in the presence and hearing of the court, a minute of which has been made and recital of which appears in the order as the authority of the court for granting the same.—Burgess v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 171 Mich. 583.

¶ 440. Under 1897 Cir. Ct. Rule No. 47, an ex parte order extending the time for settling a bill of exceptions is void where the verdict was rendered December 31, 1898, and the order was entered on March 31, 1900, extending the time thirty days.—Hayes v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 277.

¶ 441. An order giving defendant an extension of time for settlement of a case for appeal was granted upon condition that he give bond to pay complainant a specified sum monthly, it appearing that complainant was a very old man and that the complaint founded upon defendant's failure to furnish proper support and maintenance in accordance with an agreement pursuant to which all complainant's property had been conveyed to defendant.—Sherman v. Sherman, 139 Mich. 180.

Under Judicature Act, see post § 98.

¶ 442. Where time has been allowed for preparing and settling exceptions and it has expired without action the circuit judge has power to make a further order for that purpose.—People ex rel. Teller v. Littlejohn, 11 Mich. 60.

¶ 443. A settlement after the statutory time is good if the appellant used due diligence to obtain one within the time and was prevented by causes beyond his control, such as the court stenographer's inability, through sickness, to finish a transcript of the testimony.—Cameron v. Calkins, 43 Mich. 191.

¶ 444. The Supreme Court will extend the time for settling a case in which the proofs were taken in open court, if the failure to settle it within the prescribed time could not have been prevented by the appellant.—Gram v. Wasey, 45 Mich. 223.

¶ 445. A motion to extend the time for settlement of a bill of exceptions is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge.—People v. Manistee Circuit Judge, 194 Mich. 527.

¶ 446. The discretion of the trial court in granting an extension under Chancery Rule 37h, of the time for settling a case on appeal, held not abused.—Smilansky v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 186 Mich. 463.

¶ 447. April 18, 1911, a decree was entered against relator, the complainant in a chancery suit. The record was ready for appeal by June 12, 1911. Relator's solicitor refused to serve the transcript and stenographer's minutes until paid what relator deemed to be an excessive fee. On September 15, 1911, relator adjusted his differences with his solicitor. The transcript and minutes were not served on the defendant until November 16, 1911. On January 24, 1912, the respondent circuit judge refused to sign the proposed case on appeal. On February 27, 1912, relator filed a motion to extend the time for settling the cause for review, which was denied March 20, 1912. The petition for mandamus was signed and sworn to May 29, 1912. Held, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant a writ compelling respondent to extend the time for settling the appeal.—Stockwell v. Eaton Circuit Judge, 172 Mich. 166.

¶ 448. A motion for an extension of time to settle a case was denied, where appellant in a chancery case had elected to transmit the testimony taken before a commissioner under Comp. L. 1897, § 552, before having the testimony settled, instead of having it settled by the court under Comp. L. 1897, § 10188.—Hughes v. Love, 136 Mich. 169.

¶ 449. A motion to extend the time to settle a bill of exceptions not made within more than six months after the time fixed therefor by stipulation, where the delay was caused by illness of counsel, held properly denied where there was ample opportunity to have such motion heard by the judge who tried the cause.—Lavigne v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 193 Mich. 416.

¶ 450. The provision in the Judicature Act, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, Chap. L, § 9, requiring the payment of an appeal fee to the register in chancery within 20 days after decree is filed is mandatory, and a condition precedent to the extension of time to settle a case for appeal, and such requirement is not affected by Circuit Court Rule 66, as such rule states that subject to the "limitations prescribed by statute" and upon such terms and conditions as may be deemed just the court may grant a further and reasonable time for settlement of a bill of exceptions or can and may extend such time when proper.—Guthrie v. Leelenau Circuit Judge, 197 Mich. 321.

¶ 451. Under the Judicature Act, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, chap. XVIII, § 62, relating to the extension of time for the settlement of bills of exceptions it is not necessary that a litigant seeking a second extension file a second certificate from the official stenographer, as, such information having once been conveyed to the court, it is sufficient to warrant repeated extensions by the court in the exercise of its sound discretion.—People v. Manistee Circuit Judge, 194 Mich. 527.

¶ 452. A circuit judge has no jurisdiction under Comp. Laws 1915, § 13440, and Circuit Court Rule 66 to settle a bill of exceptions where nearly one year has elapsed since a final order vacating a judgment against a defendant and no extension of time was granted within which to settle a bill of exceptions and no cause was shown by affidavit or any special motion for, or written stipulation of the parties made or filed, extending such time.—Yerkes v. Antrim Circuit Judge, 200 Mich. 443.

¶ 453. The discretion of the trial judge in settling a bill of exceptions under Comp. Laws 1915, § 13440, and Circuit Court Rule 66 may be exercised only within the limits fixed by the statute and rule.—Yerkes v. Antrim Circuit Judge, 200 Mich. 443.

¶ 454. The discretion of the circuit judge in extending the time for settlement of a bill of exceptions must be exercised only within the limits prescribed by Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, Chap. XVIII, § 62, and Circuit Court Rule 66, the statute contemplating an extension of time where the official stenographer through pressure of business is unable to furnish a transcript within the 20-day limit, and the allowance of a motion for an extension of time more than four months after the furnishing of such transcript is improper.—Boyne City Hardware Co. v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 197 Mich. 374.

¶ 455. The record returned on appeal should include full copies of all the proceedings in the case, so that the transcript shall present everything which appeared in the court below.—Wright v. Dudley, 8 Mich. 115.

¶ 456. To a chancery appeal the register must return the entire record, and may not omit anything upon his own determination that it is not material.—Brown v. Thompson, 29 Mich. 72.

¶ 457. A copy of the bond given on appeal in chancery should be sent up by the register with the record. It is not sufficient that the register certifies that an appeal bond was duly approved and filed.—Maynard v. Hoskins, 8 Mich. 81.

¶ 458. Where a demurrer is sustained, an amended bill filed, another demurrer taken and sustained, and the decree sustaining it appealed from, the original bill is part of the record and should be included in the return to the appeal.—Riopelle v. Doellner, 26 Mich. 102.

¶ 459. The record on an appeal in a mechanic's lien case should contain a copy of the testimony duly certified by the register as a true copy of the testimony filed in the cause.—Roberts v. Miller, 31 Mich. 73.

¶ 460. Questions arising on the retaxation of costs before the circuit judge are no part of the record brought to this court on error to review the judgment, and will not be considered on such review.—Cox v. Klein, 149 Mich. 162.

§ 100. ——On error to judgment on appeal from justice or probate.

Necessity that jurisdiction appear, see post § 172, ¶ 735.
Assignment of error, how specified, see post § 201.
On case made to certiorari, see post § 105.

¶ 461. The record in error upon a judgment rendered on a general appeal from a justice's judgment does not include the affidavits, or orders of the circuit court based upon them, for compelling a return, or the returns or answers of the justice in showing cause against being compelled to make return to the appeal.—People ex rel. Wiley v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 29 Mich. 487.

§ 101. Contents of bill or case; attaching papers.

How bill or case to be made for review of law questions on trial, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, § 61; Comp. L. 1915, § 12633.
Preparation and settlement of bill on reference, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, §§ 72, 73; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12644, 12645.
Attaching abstract of record to bill of exceptions, see 1916 C. C. Rule 68.

¶ 462. Enough of the facts upon which the propositions of law to be reviewed arise should be given to show their materiality.—Smith v. Barstow, 2 D. 155.

¶ 463. Properly drawn, the bill sets forth only so much of the evidence as bears upon the particular points excepted to.—Turner v. City of Grand Rapids, 20 Mich. 390.

¶ 464. A bill of exceptions should contain nothing but what is material to the points of law presented.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Horton, 28 Mich. 173.

¶ 465. A bill should exclude whatever is immaterial. It should not be made up by embodying the stenographer's minutes in full without reference to their legal bearing.—People ex rel. Harbaugh v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 32 Mich. 259; Frankenberg v. First Nat. Bank of Decatur, 33 Mich. 46; Snyder v. Willey, 33 Mich. 483; Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448.

¶ 466. A bill of exceptions should contain only so much of the evidence as is necessary to present fairly the questions of law to be reviewed, and this may usually be given in narrative form.—Cole v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 77 Mich. 619.

¶ 467. A bill of exceptions should contain only so much of the evidence as may be necessary to explain the bearing of the rulings of the court upon matters of law in reference to the questions in dispute between the parties to the case and which may relate to exceptions noted at the trial.—Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408; 36 L. ed. 485, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679.

¶ 468. The bill of exceptions should not contain a full transcript of all that happened at the trial, or set forth long colloquies unnecessary to presentation of the points raised.—Jastrzembski v. Marxhausen, 120 Mich. 677.

¶ 469. Laws 1869, p. 113, How. St., §§ 6481-6484, providing for written charges to juries, made no change in the form or office of the bill of exceptions; and the charge is not a part of the record without such bill.—Geary v. People, 22 Mich. 220; Wagar v. Peak, 22 Mich. 368.

¶ 470. Arguments upon objections to testimony form no part of the record, and parties should not be put to the expense of having them written out or printed.—Welch v. Palmer, 85 Mich. 310.

Affidavits on motion, see also post ¶ 1237.
Recitals in order on motion, see also post ¶ 1238.
Incorporation of proceedings on motion for new trial, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, § 63; Comp. L. 1915, § 12635.

¶ 471. The office of a bill of exceptions in a civil cause is to bring upon the record the rulings and decisions of the trial court, and not to embrace rulings upon new proceedings, such as a motion for a new trial, taken after the trial is wholly ended.—Johr v. People, 26 Mich. 427.

¶ 472. The statement in the bill of exceptions of the payment by plaintiff in error of the execution issued in the judgment whereon he brings error cannot be considered as part of the bill or record.—Watson v. Kane, 31 Mich. 61.

¶ 473. A motion for a new trial forms no part of the bill of exceptions, strictly speaking.—Cuddy v. Major, 12 Mich. 368.

¶ 474. Questions relating to the taxability of costs cannot be included in the bill of exceptions.—Stebbins v. Field, 43 Mich. 333.

¶ 475. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10504, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 12965, exceptions to the denial of a motion for a new trial and all proceedings with reference thereto should be incorporated in the bill of exceptions.—Maynard v. Keene, 189 Mich. 97, In re Keene's Estate, Id.

¶ 476. During the period for settling a bill of exceptions, the trial court may file supplemental reasons for denying a new trial, which may be excepted to, and both the reasons and exceptions may be incorporated in the bill of exceptions.—United States Graphite Co. v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 158 Mich. 598.

§ 103. Verbatim or condensed narrative of evidence.

See also ante ¶ 468.

Prolixity as ground for reversal without review, see post § 164.

Narrative form or full statement, see 1916 C. C. Rule 66, § 8.

¶ 477, 478. Counsel should exercise his own discretion in omitting to print the formal, and what he might deem the unimportant, parts of the record; and the court would not interfere with the exercise of such discretion, unless it clearly appeared to have been abused.—Wilson v. Wilson, 6 Mich. 272.

¶ 479. In preparing a bill of exceptions the record should be condensed, the testimony put into a narrative form, and only such testimony inserted as is necessary to present the questions involved.—Welch v. Palmer, 85 Mich. 310.

¶ 480. A bill of exceptions should not be made up by taking a transcript of the stenographer's notes and attaching thereto a heading and a conclusion.—Welch v. Palmer, 85 Mich. 310; Pease v. Munro, 83 Mich. 475.

¶ 481. The incorporation in a bill of exceptions of all of the testimony is excusable only when it is necessary to enable the court to determine whether or not the case should have been taken from the jury.—Finch v. Karste, 97 Mich. 20.

¶ 482. The practice of settling chancery cases by including all of the testimony, immaterial and otherwise, and setting it forth by questions and answers, is condemned.—Hammond v. Rathbone, 113 Mich. 499.

¶ 483. The record on appeal should not be extended by printing long colloquies needlessly or by printing repetitions of testimony elicited by the questioning of counsel going over the same ground. The testimony should be condensed and, as far as possible, put in narrative form.—Sowles v. Wilcox, 127 Mich. 196, per Grant, J.

¶ 485. In a record for a chancery appeal, all questions to and answers of witnesses, and all remarks by court and counsel were included. Held, the record made was too bulky; that it should have included only enough to give a proper understanding of the evidence; and that 3 Comp. L. 1897, § 10188, providing that a chancery record should be made up in a manner similar to a bill of exceptions at law, had not been complied with.—Andrews v. Lavery, 159 Mich. 26.

¶ 486. A bill of exceptions is not necessarily prolix because it introduces a large amount of testimony, where there is room for difference concerning the tendency thereof.—Whitaker v. Kilroy, 70 Mich. 635.

¶ 487. The statement of an objection to testimony taken in a chancery case, and the reason for it, in the simplest and shortest way, is sufficient, and a discussion of it before the commissioner, if deemed necessary by counsel, is not to be transcribed and made a part of the record on appeal.—Hilliker v. Coleman, 73 Mich. 170.

¶ 488. Bill of exceptions criticised for containing the entire stenographic report without condensation in narrative form.—Wright v. Elk Rapids Iron Co., 129 Mich. 543.

¶ 489. The circuit judge need not sign and settle a case in chancery where the record has been copied verbatim and not reduced to narrative form as required by Chancery Rule 37. —Southwick v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 173 Mich. 472.

§ 104. Incorporation of books, maps or exhibits.

Attachment of papers to bill or case, see ante § 101.

Incorporation of affidavits made on motion for new trial, see also post ¶ 831.

Sufficiency of showing of documentary evidence in chancery case, see post § 187.

Affidavits and documents to supplement record, see post § 249.

Dismissal for noninclusion in record, see post § 156.

Production of exhibits with the record on appeal, see post § 178.

Indexing or identification in printed record, see post § 174.

¶ 490. Papers not incorporated in the body of the bill as signed cannot be considered as forming a part of it unless by reference thereto in the bill they are clearly identified as a part of it.—Wagar v. Peak, 22 Mich. 368.

¶ 491. Books and similar exhibits need not be reproduced in the printed record of a case.—University of Michigan v. Rose, 45 Mich. 284.

¶ 492. On a bill of accounting between partners, transcripts from such parts of the books as became material should be introduced, and not the books themselves, unless there is something in their appearance which is necessary to consider on questions of fraud or forgery or some special difficulty.—Harrison v. Dewey, 46 Mich. 173.

¶ 493. Maps or plans ought to be furnished in the record where the case is unintelligible without.—Curtis v. Norton, 58 Mich. 411.

§ 105. Contents and substance of case made.

Dismissal for defects, see post § 163.
Remission for correction, see also post ¶ 617.
Sufficiency of matter in case made to admit of review, see post § 196.
Contents and settlement of case made, see 1916 C. C. Rule 67.
Removal of case made to Supreme Court, see Jud. Act, Chap. L, § 17; Comp. L. 1915, § 13752.

¶ 494. A record of what was called a case made after judgment contained the pleadings; a mass of evidence, documentary and oral; special questions submitted by each side to the judge, who tried the case without a jury; the judge's answers thereto; and the general judgment. No regular general finding of the facts in the case appeared. This form is criticised, and the mode of finding facts held not to be regular under the statute.—Adams v. Champion, 31 Mich. 233; Armstrong v. Adams, 31 Mich. 236.

¶ 495. A case made must present a finding of facts, and should point out as clearly as a bill of exceptions the errors relied on for a reversal.—Tuxbury v. French, 39 Mich. 190.

¶ 496. Where a judgment of a circuit court affirming a judgment of a justice of the peace on certiorari is brought to the Supreme Court for review on case made after judgment, the return of the justice to the writ of certiorari is an essential part of the record, without which the Supreme Court will not take jurisdiction of the cause.—Zeller v. Harris, 23 Mich. 286.

¶ 497. The original minutes of oral testimony taken in open court in a chancery case must not be removed from the files to be used as copy in printing the record, unless by an order of the Supreme Court. But in a case where they were so removed and were destroyed by the printer, the appellants, who were not shown to have had any knowledge that they had been so used, were allowed, for the purpose of saving their rights, to file a copy of the evidence in lieu of the original.—Lamb v. Hinman, 46 Mich. 112.

§ 107. Minutes as basis for bill or case.

Impropriety of full transcript, see ante § 103.
Settlement on notes of stenographer on retirement of judge, see post ¶ 524.
Requiring copy at expense of appellant to prepare amendments, see post ¶ 507.

¶ 498. The party making the bill is under no obligation to secure a copy of the stenographer's minutes of any more of the testimony than he may deem necessary for this purpose; for which amount, when certified to by the circuit judge, he may tax as a part of his costs.—Cole v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 77 Mich. 619.

§ 108. Proposed draft and amendments.

Service of proposals and amendments, see post § 109.
Failure to propose amendments as waiving objections to case as settled, see post ¶ 634.

¶ 499. The proper course in settling a bill of exceptions is to adopt as the framework the bill tendered by the party taking the exceptions, if proper in form, with such changes and amendments as the facts warrant.—People ex rel. Harbaugh v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 32 Mich. 259.

¶ 500. It is an abuse of discretion to discard a proper bill of exceptions tendered for settlement by the party taking the exceptions, and to adopt as a substitute one submitted by the adverse party.—People ex rel. Harbaugh v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 32 Mich. 259.

¶ 501. Amendments must contain a copy of whatever additional testimony, or exhibits, or other matter the party proposing same desires to have inserted; and copies thereof must be served on the opposite party before the time noticed for the settlement of the bill of exceptions.—Cole v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 77 Mich. 619.

§ 109. Notice to settle, and service of proposals or minutes.

See also ante ¶ 501.
Defective notice as reason for not compelling settlement, see post § 115.

Service of copy of proposed bill or case, and service of amendments proposed, see 1916 C. C. Rule 66, § 9.

¶ 502. The party against whom a decision is rendered by the circuit judge in vacation is entitled to a written notice, either from the clerk or from the opposite party, before the ten days allowed him for making a case commence to run.—People ex rel. Kinney v. Wilson, 12 Mich. 25.

¶ 503. On settling a bill of exceptions after the death of the opposing party notice should be given to the administrator or an opportunity afforded to propose amendments.—Van Valkenburg v. Rogers, 17 Mich. 322.

¶ 504. A plaintiff waives notice and showing as required by 1897 Circuit Court Rule No. 47 where the defendant moves for time to settle a bill of exceptions to the first day of the next term and the attorney for the plaintiff opposes the motion but not on the ground that no notice had been given or showing made as required by the rule.—Wilkins v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 628.

¶ 507. Under How. St., § 6534e2, relating to the stenographer of the Kent circuit, which provides that, if it shall be necessary to procure a transcript of the stenographer's notes in order to remove a case to the Supreme Court, and the trial judge shall certify to such necessity, the appellant, if he shall prevail, may tax the cost thereof, and that said transcript may be used by the opposite party in proposing amendments to the record, the trial court, upon a certificate that a transcript of the whole or of certain parts of the testimony is necessary in order to settle a bill of exceptions, may require the appellant, at his own expense, to furnish such transcript to the appellee, to enable the latter to prepare amendments to the bill.—Gillies v. Kent Circuit Judge, 106 Mich. 687.

Framing on basis of proposals, and amendments, see ante § 108.

Compulsory duty to sign or settle, see post § 115.

Return to insert showing of settlement, see post § 118.

Sufficiency of showing that all evidence material to questions is returned, see post § 176.

Sufficiency of showing in bill that objection was made for prolixity, see post § 177, ¶ 763.

Presumption as to regularity of settlement and signing, see post § 348.

Construction of the certificate by the Supreme Court, see post § 340.

Dismissal for improper or imperfect settlement, see post § 157.

Settlement as time whence to reckon time in which to take appeal, see ante § 73.

Settlement of evidence on appeal, see Jud. Act, Chap. L, § 22, Comp. L. 1915, § 13757.

Signature of bill in Wayne county, proper judge, see Jud. Act, Chap. II, § 55; Comp. L. 1915, § 12138; generally, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, § 64; Comp. L. 1915, § 12636.

¶ 508. Under Chancery Rule 37, subdivision (a) when no amendments or corrections to a proposed record are offered, the court may certify it if satisfied it is a fair and proper presentation of the proceedings.—Alderson v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 173 Mich. 608.

¶ 509. Failure to file a supersedeas in order to obtain a stay of proceedings as provided by 3 Comp. L. 1897, § 10355, does not deprive a court of jurisdiction to settle the bill of exceptions.—Harper v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 155 Mich. 543.

¶ 510. Where no proceedings are taken for the settling of a case, but the party appellant, without notice to the opposite party, procures and files with the appeal papers a certified copy of the judge's minutes of the evidence taken on the trial, such copy cannot be treated as a case made under the statute, or considered in the Supreme Court on the hearing.—Wright v. Dudley, 8 Mich. 74.

¶ 511. The stenographer's transcript of his notes of the evidence in a chancery cause where the testimony was taken in open court, which has been merely filed in the cause, and a copy thereof sent up with the return without being authenticated by the circuit judge as a case settled as required by the statute, will not be considered on appeal as the evidence in the cause.—Moote v. Scriven, 33 Mich. 500.

¶ 512. A case made after judgment for review by the Supreme Court must show on its face that it is settled and signed by the circuit judge for that purpose.—Gard v. Stevens, 12 Mich. 9.

¶ 513. Since the statute has confined "cases made" to law questions, less strictness is required in the form of certifying them than when they could also be used for the review of facts.—Wheeler v. Wilkins, 19 Mich. 78.

¶ 514. Cases made after judgment must be certified to the Supreme Court by the clerk of the court below, or the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to hear the cause; the want of the certificate, being a jurisdictional defect, cannot be cured by the stipulations of counsel.—City of Grand Rapids v. Whittlesey, 32 Mich. 192.

¶ 515. A bill certified as containing the substance of all the evidence deemed by the circuit judge material to the assignments of error does not show that all the evidence is included; and therefore will not admit of reviewing any question dependent thereon.—Black v. Simon, 116 Mich. 382.

¶ 516. The misleading statement in a bill of exceptions that the evidence is all set forth, when it is not, is rebuked.—American Ins. Co. of Chicago v. Woodruff, 34 Mich. 6.

§ 111. ——Agreed statement or stipulations.

Stipulations in lieu of certification, see ante ¶ 514.
Stipulations as to retiring judge settling bill, see also post ¶ 521.
Stipulation that other evidence shall be considered in case at bar, see also post ¶ 1063.
Additional matter by stipulation, see post § 248.
Agreement to extend time, see ante § 95.
Agreement as waiving inclusion of assignments in bill, see post ¶ 563.
Presumption on the record as to matters admitted or conceded, see post § 350.
Exclusion from consideration on review of stipulations extraneous to record, see post § 285.
Agreed statement and settlement and approval of same, see 1916 C. C. Rule 66, § 10.

¶ 517. Without a proper authentication of what seems to have been returned and treated as the evidence in proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien upon lands, the Supreme Court will not hear an appeal therefrom; the defect is not cured by a stipulation of the solicitors; the solemn judgments of courts will not be disturbed on records made for them by the counsel or attorneys.—Roberts v. Miller, 31 Mich. 73.

¶ 518. Parties cannot stipulate as to the judge who shall settle a bill of exceptions.—Hill v. Hill, 112 Mich. 633.

§ 112. ——Retirement or change of judge.

Stipulations as to judge who shall sign, see ante ¶ 518.
Reversal without review on failure to obtain settlement of case, see post ¶ 695.
Settlement in case of death or resignation or other disability or absence of trial judge, see 1916 C. C. Rule 66, § 12.
Signature by successor or other judge in case of death, vacancy or disability, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, § 64; Comp. L. 1915, § 12636.

¶ 519. Where a judge has gone out of office after settlement of exceptions the bill must stand as part of the record.—Van Valkenburg v. Rogers, 17 Mich. 322.

¶ 520. Where a bill was settled and signed by a judge after resignation, but by consent of parties, it was not disturbed.—Tefft v. Windsor, 17 Mich. 425.

¶ 521. A judge cannot settle a bill of exceptions after going out of office, even under stipulation of counsel.—Crittenden v. Schermerhorn, 35 Mich. 370.

¶ 522. The clause in Laws 1879, p. 5 (How. St., § 7613), permitting settlement upon stenographer's minutes by the successor in office of the trial judge, is valid.—Mason v. Phelps, 48 Mich. 126.

¶ 523. Under How. St., § 7613, Comp. L. 1897, § 10249, requiring a bill of exceptions to be settled before the judge who tried the case, except in case of his death or resignation, the expiration of his term, or vacancy in office from other cause, the fact that the case was tried before a judge from another circuit, who is absent from the county, and whose attendance cannot be procured, does not authorize the settlement of the bill before the local judge, since the bill may be settled at the trial judge's home.—Hill v. Hill, 112 Mich. 633.

¶ 524. A case in chancery may properly be settled on the stenographer's notes where the trial judge goes out of office before the time for settling the case expires; and the procedure would be substantially the same as in settling a bill of exceptions at law.—Johnson v. Johnson, 49 Mich. 639.

¶ 525. A bill of exceptions which has been certified to by the trial judge will not be deemed insufficient because containing testimony which was taken by a court stenographer who died without making a transcript, and because the testimony was placed in the hands of another court stenographer, who transcribed it; but with some help from counsel for the plaintiff, especially where no mistake in the transcript is pointed out.—White Pine Lumber Co. v. Manufacturers' Lumber Co., 191 Mich. 390.

Notice to administrator to settle bill, see ante ¶ 508.

¶ 526. A bill of exceptions is not irregular because of being signed and settled after the death of the opposing party, and before there has been any revival of the judgment.—Van Valkenburg v. Rogers, 17 Mich. 322.

§ 115. Compelling settlement or action by judge.

Unduly prolix case, see also ante ¶ 489.
Compelling amendment of record, see post § 244.
Mandamus as remedy to compel settlement of case and procedure thereon, see Mandamus.
Duty to sign bill or case, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, § 64; Comp. L. 1915, § 12636.

¶ 527. Where a party has done all in his power to comply with the orders for settlement of a bill of exceptions, and has furnished it in due time, mandamus lies to compel signing.—People ex rel. De Moss v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 41 Mich. 725.

¶ 528. Although a trial judge will not be compelled by mandamus to sign a proposed bill of exceptions which he avers to be incomplete and inaccurate, he should, upon it and the amendments offered by the other party, settle such bill as he deems proper.—Pope v. Judge of Recorder's Court, 107 Mich. 25.

¶ 529. Circuit judge not compelled by mandamus to settle bill of exceptions after expiration of time provided for in 1897 C. C. Rule 27, in absence of written stipulation extending time.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Branch Circuit Judge, 116 Mich. 399.

¶ 530. Mandamus to compel the circuit court to settle a case on appeal will be denied where the statutory period of forty days had elapsed without the appeal being perfected.—City of Detroit v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 144 Mich. 696.

¶ 531. The circuit judge will not be compelled by mandamus to vacate an order denying an extension of time for settling a bill of exceptions, where the application for such extension did not comply with the rule which requires cause to be shown by affidavit, on special motion, after notice, and where some of the reasons given for the extension are not founded upon the record.—Northern Assur. Co. v. Houghton Circuit Judge, 169 Mich. 238.

¶ 532. It is only when the sound discretion of the trial court in granting an extension of time under Chancery Rule 37h, for settling a case on appeal has been abused, that the appellate court will interfere.—Smilansky v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 186 Mich. 463.

¶ 533. Mandamus to compel the circuit judge to sign and settle a case on appeal should be denied where one of the three defendants had not formally entered his appearance and had not pleaded or been defaulted; where notice of settlement of the bill had been legally served on only one of the other defendants; where a motion to dismiss as to the one not served was denied; and it was agreed by the court and counsel that if the motion to dismiss was denied the bill of exceptions was not properly before the court for settlement under the statute and rules; and where no bill of exceptions was ever presented to the circuit judge for settlement and signature.—McNamara v. Kent Circuit Judge, 173 Mich. 602.

¶ 534. A circuit judge will not be required by mandamus to settle and sign a bill of exceptions in the form requested by appellant, where the former is ready to sign and settle such a bill as is warranted by the facts.—Corby v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 186 Mich. 533.

¶ 535. An order made July 3rd extending to September 1st the time for settling a bill of exceptions, if objectionable, was ratified by a stipulation made on the same day agreeing to settle it by agreement before July 25th, if possible, and that the judge might sign it on September 1st nunc pro tunc July 29th; and such stipulation contemplated that if it was not agreed on the judge must have time to examine the record in passing on proposed amendments, so that it was proper for him when the bill was presented on September 1st with no agreement and with numerous proposed amendments to order it prepared with the amendments as allowed and presented to him on September 5th and then to sign it as of July 29th according to the stipulation.—Culver v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 141 Mich. 644.

§ 117. Delivery of bill and filing below.

Who may send up record and file same above, see post § 127.
Time for filing above, see post § 128.
Effect of sending up copy of bill instead of original, see post ¶ 571.
Signature and delivery of settled bill or case, see 1916 C. C. Rule 66, § 11.
Filing bill by clerk of circuit to be returned with record, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, § 66; Comp. L. 1915, § 12638.

¶ 536. The provision of C. C. Rule 83, requiring a case made to be filed within ten days after it shall be settled and signed, has reference to the filing in the lower court only.—Ackley v. Sager, 30 Mich. 264.

¶ 537. Sup. Ct. Rules 8 and 15 do not require the dismissal of an appeal for failure to file the record in the court below within 40 days after the filing and approval of a bond which stays proceedings only, since under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 243, a bond, except to stay proceedings, is not required until after settlement of the case, and where orders extending the time for settlement of the case have been regularly made it would not be proper to dismiss the appeal for failure to file the record.—Sherman v. Sherman, 139 Mich. 180.

§ 118. Return of record for additions or amendments.

Propriety of return, see post § 243.
Compelling amendment, see post § 244.
Power to permit sending up of paper lost from files, see post § 249, ¶ 1113.
Proper practice to seek amendments, see post § 242.
Leave to appellee to resettle on denying motion to dismiss, see post ¶ 670.
Remission of record to court below for further action, see post § 143.
Form and manner of bringing amendment into record, see post § 245.
Proper matter of amendment, see post § 246.
Amendment to show matters improperly shown by certificate, see also post ¶ 701.
Return of amendments to Supreme Court, see post § 250.
Notice for hearing pending amendment, see post § 131.
Amendments and additional records in general, and presentation of points thereby, see post XI, F.

¶ 538. A case made held defective because not showing that it was settled and signed by the circuit judge for review was allowed to be remitted to the court below for correction.—Gard v. Stevens, 12 Mich. 9.

¶ 539. The Supreme Court remanded the record in a case, with an order to extend the time for settling a bill of exceptions. On November 11th, an order was entered below extending the time to November 18th, while at the same time defendant served notice on plaintiff to settle the bill on November 15th. Plaintiff overlooked this notice. On November 15th defendant settled the bill, plaintiff being absent, and the record was returned to the Supreme Court November 17th. On November 18th plaintiff presented his proposed bill of exceptions, and also served a notice upon defendant with a copy of his proposed amendments. The trial court declined to consider them on the ground of lack of jurisdiction. The trial court in his certificate stated that he mistakenly supposed the amendments had been previously accepted and that matters had been called to his notice which he thought the Supreme Court should have before it in deciding the case. Held, that plaintiff's motion before the Supreme Court to remand the record for the purpose of incorporating his amendments should be granted.—Kaiser v. Detroit United Ry., 164 Mich. 56.

¶ 540. Where a case was imperfectly settled in consequence of the wilful or negligent absence of the appellees, it was remanded for settlement, subject to a charge against the appellees on final decree of all costs resulting from their neglect to raise objection until after the case as settled had been printed.—Stickle v. Haskins, 54 Mich. 130.

¶ 541. In a case involving accounts the parties made frequent references to certain partnership books which were not returned in whole or by sufficient transcript as part of the record. The references were therefore unintelligible, and as the court could not tell whether the case was presented as it had been below, it was referred back to the lower court that the parties might take proper action to present it clearly.—Lambert v. Griffith, 40 Mich. 174.

¶ 542. An appellant secured an extension of time to settle a bill of exceptions, without showing cause for such extension. The bill was settled, the writ of error issued and return thereon made, and the record printed. The upper court decided that the extension of time was improperly made, but that appellant might apply to the lower court for leave and that such leave might be granted for cause shown. On motion of appellant, held, the appellant might dismiss its writ of error, and if the lower court granted leave for an extension of time to settle a bill of exceptions, it might take out a new writ and make the record as previously printed a part of the record under the new writ.—Kaiser v. Detroit United Ry., 163 Mich. 109.

E. ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

§ 119. In general; necessity of assignment.

Who may assign and complain of errors, see post XI, D.
Construction, sufficiency and scope of assignments, see post XI, C.
Joint and several assignments, see post § 217.
Dismissal for want of regular assignments, see post § 158.
Statement of points in briefs, see post § 232.

¶ 543. On a writ of error the court should be informed of the alleged errors of law, and the precise questions involved.—In re Hoffman's Estate, 183 Mich. 67.

¶ 544. The sufficiency of the counts of a declaration cannot be considered on review

if there is no assignment of error thereon.—Hitchcock v. Pratt, 51 Mich. 263.

¶ 545. Whether a defense is available under a plea of the general issue cannot be reviewed in the absence of an exception to or assignment of error based on the admission of evidence in support thereof.—Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Schneider, 181 Mich. 538.

¶ 546. That the verdict and judgment in an action for the breach of warranty originating in a justice's court exceeded the ad damnum clause in an amended declaration will not be considered on review where there is no assignment of error on that subject and the question was nowhere called to the trial court's attention.—Patterson v. Gore, 177 Mich. 591.

¶ 547. Rulings in excluding testimony cannot be reviewed where error is not assigned upon them.—Kehoe v. Allen, 92 Mich. 464.

¶ 548. Objection to testimony in an ejectment case by a surveyor about a former survey in which he took no part, brought out on his cross-examination and based on no assignment of error, was not considered.—Miller v. Shumway, 135 Mich. 654.

¶ 549. The Supreme Court will not review the admission of evidence over the objection and exception of appellant, where no error is assigned upon said exception.—In re McNamara's Estate, 166 Mich. 451; McNamara v. Michigan Trust Co., Id.

¶ 550. Error not assigned to instructions on the effect of evidence if believed by the jury will not be considered by the Supreme Court.—Parkey v. Galloway, 147 Mich. 693.

¶ 551. In order to have this court review an alleged erroneous instruction error must be assigned upon the instruction.—Cox v. Klein, 149 Mich. 162.

¶ 552. An allegation in the brief that the court erred in giving certain instructions will not be considered by this court where the question is not raised in the assignments of error.—Muncie Wheel & Jobbing Co. v. Finch, 150 Mich. 274.

¶ 553. To raise the question of improper argument of counsel, exception and proper assignment must be made thereon.—Devich v. Dick, 177 Mich. 178.

¶ 554. No question is open for review in trover tried without a jury, where no exceptions of law or fact were taken, and where no error was assigned on the ground that the facts found did not support the judgment.—Goulet v. Perry, 123 Mich. 264.

¶ 555. An objection to drain proceedings on the ground that the drain commissioner was an interested party will not be considered on review where it is not raised by any assignment of error.—Roberts v. Smith, 115 Mich. 5.

¶ 556. In order to satisfy C. O. Rule 84, a case made before judgment will not be reviewed where no statement of errors is filed or error assigned.—McKinnon v. Atkins, 60 Mich. 418.

Costs for excessive assignments, see Costs, V.

¶ 557. Assignments of error ought not to be needlessly multiplied.—Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 Mich. 292; Burt v. Long, 106 Mich. 210.

¶ 558. Counsel was criticized for making 156 assignments of error based upon rulings relating to the admission of evidence which upon examination were found not only to be without error but to raise no legal questions requiring discussion.—City of Battle Creek v. Haak, 139 Mich. 514.

§ 121. Procedure to make assignments; extensions.

Dismissal for delay in filing, see post § 155.
Practice as to assignment, see Jud. Act, Chap. L, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 13740.

¶¶ 559, 560. The Supreme Court will always give a plaintiff in error the benefit of his exceptions, if he is not at fault in occasioning delay, by extending time for assignment of errors, or by allowing a new assignment, as may be required.—Teller v. Willis, 12 Mich. 384.

§ 122. Inclusion in, or service with bill of exceptions.

Failure to include as ground for denying further time to file return, see post § 129.
Dismissal for noninclusion, see post § 156.
Affirmance for want of inclusion, when proper, see post § 478.

¶ 561. Where one who has proposed a bill of exceptions has failed to incorporate therein his assignment of error, the Supreme Court may refuse to consider the point made by him.—Peterson v. Frey, 109 Mich. 689.

¶ 562. An objection to the exclusion of evidence presented and argued before the court below, and clearly disclosed by the record, was passed on although the assignments of error were not embodied in the bill of exceptions.—Coon v. Dennis, 111 Mich. 450.

¶ 563. An objection that the assignments of error did not accompany the bill of exceptions is without force where defendant in error stipulated to the settlement of the bill.—Hubbard v. Garner, 115 Mich. 406.

§ 123. Service on adversary.

Service of copy of assignments, see Sup. Ct. Rule 11; 1916 C. C. Rule 66, § 5.

¶ 564. When defendant in error notices the cause for hearing he waives the right to complain of any failure to serve him with a copy of the assignment of errors.—Frost v. Lawler, 34 Mich. 235.

§ 124. Amendments and additional assignments.

Necessity of new notice for hearing after amendments see post § 131, ¶¶ 587, 588.

¶ 565. Where an objection purely technical was made to an assignment of errors at the hearing, and it was evident that the defendant in error could not have been misled, the court permitted an amendment.—Trudo v. Anderson, 10 Mich. 357.

¶ 566. The entry of a special motion for leave to amend an assignment of errors must show in what particular an amendment is desired. And a copy of the proposed amendment, with notice of the motion, should be served on the opposite party.—Parsons v. Copland, 5 Mich. 143.

¶ 567. In a case which originated before a circuit court commissioner, and was appealed to and tried in the circuit court and then removed to the Supreme Court, a motion made after four weeks in term and after the filing of joinder in error to amend the assignment of errors so as to take an objection to the jurisdiction of the commissioner which was not made before the commissioner or in the circuit court presents no equitable claim upon the discretionary power of the court and will be denied.—Parsons v. Copland, 5 Mich. 144.

¶ 568. Assignments of error may, in a proper case, be amended, on the motion of plaintiff in error, so as to include a general assignment that the findings of the court below do not support the judgment, in which case the usual motion fee will be allowed to defendant in error.—Hubbard v. Garner, 115 Mich. 406.

VII. RETURN AND FILINGS IN THE SUPREME COURT.

§ 125. Return day for writ.

Time for filing above, see post § 128.
Time for notice for hearing, full time for return, see post § 131.
Return time in chancery appeals, see Sup. Ct. Rule 15.

¶ 569. The time—not less than twenty days—in which a writ of error may be made returnable runs from and excludes the date of issue, and includes the return day, and a writ issued August 30 is properly made returnable September 19.—Doyle v. Mizner, 41 Mich. 549.

§ 126. Requisites and contents of return in general.

Return to Supreme Court of amendments of the record, see post § 250.
Dismissal for inadequacy of return, or remission for fuller return, see post § 156.
Contents of the judgment roll and of the bill or case, see ante §§ 99, 105.
Requisites and sufficiency of the case or bill of exceptions for presentation of errors assigned, see post XI, B.
Affidavit of service of notice of writ, see Sup. Ct. Rule 5.
Filing copy of notice and proof of service of same in chancery appeals, see Sup. Ct. Rule 14.
Filing proof of service of notice of filing case made, see Sup. Ct. Rule 17.
Return of order for extension with record, when time has been extended, see Sup. Ct. Rules 7, 16.

¶ 570. The court will not set aside a writ of error for want of proper return, after the lapse of several years, during the most of which time the papers have been in possession of the counsel for defendant in error, and rejoinder in error was filed while the counsel had the return in his hands.—Wattles v. Warren, 7 Mich. 309.

¶ 571. A copy of the bill of exceptions was sent up instead of the original; but, three terms having elapsed since the return to the writ, and issue in error having been joined without notice of the irregularity, and no explanation being made of the delay, the court refused to interfere to require the original to be sent up.—Evans v. Norris, 6 Mich. 69.

Filing below, see ante § 117.

¶ 572. When the case is settled and filed with the clerk of the circuit court, either party, desiring action upon it, may cause it to be certified to the Supreme Court.—Robertson v. Little, 10 Mich. 371.

§ 128. Time for filing.

Filing bill below, see ante § 117.
Sufficiency of filing made before motion to dismiss, see post § 155.
Dismissal for delay in filing return, see post § 155.
Dismissal of case made for delay in filing, see post § 163.
Filing briefs, see post § 231.

¶ 573. The provision of C. C. Rule 83, requiring a case made to be filed within ten days after it shall be settled and signed, has reference to the filing in the circuit court, and has no relation to the practice in the Supreme Court.—Ackley v. Sager, 30 Mich. 264.

§ 129. Excuse for delay; extensions.

Extension of time for taking appeal, see also ante § 75.
Reasons for extension, see also ante § 75.
Failure of judge to sign and settle, see also ante ¶ 421.
Ground for extension of time to make and settle bill or case, see ante § 97.
Counter affidavits to excuse delay, see post § 166, ¶ 707.
Extension of time for return and order for extension, see Sup. Ct. Rule 7.
Extension of time for returning record in appeals, see Sup. Ct. Rule 16.

¶ 574. Where plaintiff in error has neglected to cause the return to be made in time, and applies to the Supreme Court for relief, he must explain and excuse the delay.—Lathrop v. Hicks, 2 D. 223.

¶ 575. He will not be relieved merely upon the affidavit of his attorney that in his opinion there was good and legal cause for suing out the writ of error, and that if the case should be heard on its merits the judgment below would be reversed.—Lathrop v. Hicks, 2 D, 223.

¶ 576. It is not a sufficient excuse that the clerk below promised to make out the transcript and deliver it to the attorney within the time required by the rule; that the attorney relied upon this promise, and the neglect occurred in consequence of the clerk's failure to perform it.—Lathrop v. Hicks, 2 D. 223.

¶ 577. A neglect to procure a return is not sufficiently excused by affidavits which state that the counsel expected the clerk to make it, but show no request to the clerk to do so and no interview with him on the subject.—Carne v. Hall, 7 Mich. 159.

¶ 578. Where verdict had been rendered for plaintiff for $5,000 in an action for breach of promise of marriage, and, on motion being made for a new trial, the circuit court had made an order granting it, unless plaintiff reduced the damages to $2,000, which was done: and defendant, nearly two years thereafter, brought error, but neglected to procure return to the writ in time, held, on motion to dismiss the case for want of prosecution, that, in the absence of valid excuse for delay, the case did not call for indulgence on other grounds.—Carne v. Hall, 7 Mich. 159.

¶ 579. A plaintiff in error had failed to procure a return to a writ of error in time, and made application for leave to file it and assign errors. The only special assignment was of errors occurring on the trial, and the record showed no exceptions. As the errors proposed to be assigned could not be noticed by the court, leave was refused, though the delay was sufficiently excused.—Webster v. Fisk, 9 Mich. 250.

¶ 580. If the appellant is in default in not filing the return, and, instead of complying with the rule when his attention is called to the default, resists a motion to dismiss on technical grounds, the court will not grant him further indulgence.—Ball v. Ball, 18 Mich. 380.

¶ 581. When a transcript of the record has not been filed within the proper time, permission to file it will not be granted unless a sufficient excuse is shown for the delay, and a readiness to file it when a motion to dismiss is made, or within a time satisfactory to the court; and if the register's fees for the return are not paid the appellant should show that he has offered or been ready to pay them.—Boardman v. Taylor, 16 Mich. 62.

¶ 582. Where no assignments of error were filed with the bill of exceptions, and no satisfactory reason or excuse for not doing so is offered, a motion to extend the time to make return to the writ of error will be denied and the appeal dismissed.—Hanselman v. Adrion. 139 Mich. 546.

VIII. ENTERING, DOCKETING AND CALENDARING CAUSE.

§ 130. Appearance and entry of cause.

Party entitled to send up return, see ante § 127.
Appearance of counsel as requiring service of motions on him, see post § 167.
Improper entitling of cause by reason of death of party, see ante § 362.
Motions in causes not yet docketed, necessity of notice, see post § 167.
Practice as to appearance by appellee, see Jud. Act, Chap. L, § 5; Comp. L. 1915. § 13740.
Entitling cause and names of parties, see Sup. Ct. Rule 3.

Computation of time, when notice may be given, see ante ¶ 324.
Mode of calling up motions, see post § 166.
Notice of motion, see post § 167.
Notice as waiver of service of assignments, see ante § 123.
Notice as waiving objections to appeal or writ, see post § 146.
Noticing as preventing striking from calendar, see post ¶ 594.
Want of notice as cause for reversal, see post ¶ 2124.
Notice for argument of cause, see Sup. Ct. Rule 34.

¶ 584. An appeal cannot be noticed for hearing until the full time for making return thereto has expired.—Stockton v. Garland, 14 Mich. 333; Torrent v. Muskegon Booming Co. 21 Mich. 1.

¶ 585. In computing time on notices of hearing the day on which the notice is served is to be excluded and the first day of term included. An intervening Sunday is not to be excluded.—Anderson v. Baughman, 6 Mich. 298; Corey v. Hilliker, 15 Mich. 314.

¶ 586. The fact that the bill of exceptions has been removed from the files for amendment by order of the court and that the amendments are not completed nor the bill of exceptions returned, does not prevent noticing the case for hearing.—Polhemus v. Ann Arbor Savings Bank, 27 Mich. 44.

¶ 587. A case on error may be properly noticed for hearing under Supreme Court Rule 21 on the same day that the assignment of errors is filed, and if no new issue is raised as provided by rule 13, the case will be properly on the docket; but where, after the notice, a new issue is raised by plea in bar to the writ, this new issue must also be noticed after hearing; and where it has not been, a motion to strike from the docket must prevail.—Crane v. Sumner, 31 Mich. 199.

¶ 588. Where, after a case reserved for the opinion of the Supreme Court had been noticed for hearing, an addition of specific questions was made to it by the circuit judge without the consent of one party, it was held that such party should not be required to go to a hearing of the case upon the notice previously given.—Farrand v. Collins Iron Co., 8 Mich. 136.

¶ 589. A notice, dated, that a cause will be brought on for hearing and argument at the next term of said court, to be held at the city of Detroit, is sufficient.—Franklin v. Mansfield, 8 Mich. 99.

¶ 590. A notice, without date, that a cause "will be brought on for hearing at the next term of said court," is good in form.—Brushaber v. Stegemann, 22 Mich. 190.

¶ 591. If either party to a cause desires to have it heard in the Supreme Court, he must notice it for hearing on his own behalf, and have it placed on the docket for hearing.—Willey v. Kilduff, 25 Mich. 161.

¶ 592. An appeal in chancery cannot be properly noticed for hearing by any one not the solicitor of record in the court below, and who has not been substituted as solicitor in the Supreme Court.—English v. Maxwell, 2 Mich. 462.

§ 134. Calendar, calling and striking causes.

Notice sufficient to put cause on calendar, see ante § 132.
Notice to put cause on for hearing, see ante § 131.
Reinstatement of dismissed cause, see post § 171.
Continuances, see post § 140.
Motion calendar, see post § 166.
Striking off papers in cause, or cause itself for defects in papers, see post § 165.
Motion to strike and practice thereon, see post §§ 166-168.
Placing causes on calendar for term, and order and priority of causes on calendar, see Sup. Ct. Rule 43; stipulation for arrangement and later order, see rule Calling causes on calendar and setting for argument, see Sup. Ct. Rule 45.

¶ 593. A case may be stricken from the docket, with full costs as for a hearing, when plaintiff in error, after noticing it for trial, does not furnish opposing counsel with a copy of the printed record until late in the day preceding that of the hearing.—Mayo v. Elsey, 47 Mich. 10.

¶ 594. A cause will be stricken from the calendar if placed thereon by a notice of hearing given before the time for filing the record as fixed by rule has elapsed.—Bay v. Gypsum Plaster & Stucco Co., 141 Mich. 62.

IX. TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION AND EFFECT THEREOF.

§ 135. Effect of removal in general.

Consequences of trial de novo in equity, see post XII, H.
Effect on conclusiveness of judgments or decrees, see Former Adjudication, II.
Effect on jurisdiction over alimony, see Divorce, X, C, E.

Pendency of action until disposed of, see Actions, § 6; Abatement, § 10.
Pendency as ground for abating later action, see Abatement, § 10 et seq.
Pending appeal to United States Supreme Court from district court, as ground for abating state suit, see Abatement, ¶ 50.

¶ 595. After an appeal has been taken, the lower court has no further jurisdiction except in case of remand for further proceedings.—City of Grand Rapids v. Coit, 51 Mich. 109.

¶ 596. A case removed to a court of record for review becomes subject to its rules of practice; and the party removing it cannot take advantage of delays necessarily incident to the operation of those rules to contest, on that ground, the jurisdiction to proceed.—People v. Blake, 54 Mich. 239.

¶ 597. The effect of filing a claim for appeal and the statutory bond is to transfer the cause to the Supreme Court, after which that court alone has jurisdiction of a motion to dismiss the appeal.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Chambers, 89 Mich. 5.

¶ 598. Appeal suspends decree and precludes its use in evidence in another suit.—Day v. De Jonge, 66 Mich. 550.

¶ 599. Where bill for injunction against the collection of a paving assessment, upon which a preliminary injunction has been granted, was dismissed on the hearing in the court below, an appeal from that decree by complainants does not revive the injunction, and the city authorities are not liable as for contempt for proceeding, during the pendency of such appeal, to enforce the collection of said assessment.—Breevoort v. City of Detroit, 24 Mich. 322.

¶ 600. Where a general decree in a divorce action gives the complainant a note in liquidation of temporary alimony, and defendant declines to produce it and files a claim of appeal, the trial court, until the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court on appeal attaches by the making of a return and the filing and approval of a bond, has jurisdiction to make a further order requiring the defendant to forthwith surrender such note.—Snay v. Snay, 192 Mich. 210.

¶ 601. Where a judgment against the plaintiff in attachment is appealed from it does not dissolve the attachment, but the lien of the writ continues until the final disposition of the case against him.—Treat v. Dunham, 74 Mich. 114.

§ 136. ——Suspension or stay of proceedings.
Power of lower court to enrol decree pending appeal, see post § 143, ¶ 616.
Effect of appeal or error to stay proceedings, bonds for stay or supersedeas, and applications for stay, see generally Stay of Proceedings, II.
Effect of appeal to stay proceedings, see Jud. Act, Chap. L, § 21; Comp. L. 1915, § 13756.

§ 137. Commencement and cessation of jurisdiction above.
See also ante § 135.
Return and filings in Supreme Court, see ante VII.
Jurisdiction to allow suit money on appeal from divorce decree, see also Divorce, X, C.
Power to amend or add to record, see post XI, F.
Power to supply lost files after appeal taken, see post ¶ 1113.
Cessation of power of Supreme Court to correct or relieve from its own judgment, see post § 533.
Cessation of time for application for rehearing, see post § 546.
When appeal deemed perfected, see Jud. Act, Chap. L, § 24; Comp. L. 1915, § 13759.

¶ 602. A bill of exceptions was signed November 9, 1910, and a writ of error taken out by defendant. A motion for a new trial was made by defendant February 1, 1911. Held, the trial judge properly ruled that he had no jurisdiction to dispose of the motion.—Minkkinen v. Quincy Min. Co., 169 Mich. 279.

¶ 603. After a judgment of a circuit court in an action of ejectment has been brought to the Supreme Court on writ of error, and reversed, and a new trial ordered, and before a remittitur has issued to the court below, the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction—the case not being in the court—to grant an order staying waste upon the lands in question.—Crane v. Reeder, 23 Mich. 92.

¶ 604. Jurisdiction of a case brought by writ of error to the Supreme Court, and there affirmed, is restored to the trial court upon the filing of a remittitur from the Supreme Court.—Reynolds v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 403.

¶ 605. An appellant on writ of error failed to obtain in the lower court a stay of execution of a judgment for costs entered against him. Held, that after the writ had been returned, the Supreme Court is the only court having jurisdiction to order a stay of execution.—Coeling v. Barnard, 159 Mich. 634.

¶ 606. No power rests in the circuit court to stay proceedings for the purpose of moving for a new trial or settling a bill of exceptions, upon any verdict or judgment, beyond twenty days, unless the bond required by statute is given, and such bond stands as a supersedeas bond when a writ of error is taken out (Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10355, 10358; How. St., §§ 7621c, 7621f).—Markham v. Kent Circuit Judge, 121 Mich. 573.

¶ 607. Under the provision of C. C. Rule 47 (h) that on cause shown and on special motion and on proper terms, the court may order the recall of an execution issued after the expiration of ten days from the settlement of a bill of exceptions, without a writ of error having issued, such motion must be made in the court which issued the execution, and therefore a motion made in the Supreme Court was dismissed without prejudice to the right to its renewal below.—Ismond v. Scougale, 119 Mich. 501.

X. MOTIONS, DISMISSALS AND INTERLOCUTORY MATTERS PENDING REVIEW.

§ 139. Practice and powers in general.

Jurisdiction dependent on transfer of jurisdiction from lower court, see ante § 135.
Amendments of or relief from appellate judgment, see post XIII, E.
General powers of the court, see Courts.
Adaption of common-law practice in all matters not otherwise provided for on writ of error, see Jud. Act, Chap. L, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 13740.
Power of Supreme Court to issue writs essential to exercise of its jurisdiction, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 12014.
Stipulations between counsel, and filing same, see Sup. Ct. Rule 33.
Suggestions of death and revivor, see Sup. Ct. Rule 53.

¶ 608. The constitution in granting to the Supreme Court the power to issue writs of error, and to hear and determine the same, impliedly gives all the common-law means of executing that power. If necessary, a venire may be issued for a jury to try in this court the issue joined on assignment of error of fact, or the issue may be sent to the proper circuit court for trial.—Teller v. Wetherell, 6 Mich. 46.

¶ 609. Where the appellant had not passed up the printed record twenty-four hours before the case was called for hearing, and his counsel were unwilling to have the case put to the foot of the docket, to be submitted on briefs, and defendants were ready to go to a hearing, the case was continued, and defendants were allowed as costs on the continuance a counsel fee as upon hearing.—Griswold v. Fuller, Chaney's Digest, p. 735, par. 6; Clark v. Sable, 44 Mich. 1.

§ 141. Consolidation of appeals or writs.

Of law and chancery causes, see also post ¶ 1118.
Time to object to improper consolidation or hearing, see post § 145, ¶ 629.
Questions open on consolidated record, see post § 275.
Severance of judgment or parties for separate review, see ante § 79.

¶ 610. A chancery appeal and a separate proceeding in an action at law brought up by writ of error, cannot be consolidated and heard together.—Stevens v. Stevens, 181 Mich. 449.

¶ 611. Where both parties take a writ of error from a judgment of the circuit court in settling the account of an administrator, the cases should be consolidated and heard together in the Supreme Court.—In re Saier's Estate (Appeal of Zimmer), 158 Mich. 170.

§ 142. Interlocutory injunctions, receivers, contempt, etc.

Which court may stay proceedings pending perfection of error, see ante § 138.
Loss of jurisdiction on remand and pending filing of remittitur below, see ante § 137.
Recalling execution, see ante § 138, ¶ 607.

¶ 612. The Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to enjoin a defendant from interfering with the operation of a railway pending condemnation proceedings, not having original equity jurisdiction, and an application for an injunction to this effect should be made to a court of original and competent jurisdiction.—Grand Rapids, G. H. & M. Ry. Co. v. Stevens, 143 Mich. 646.

¶ 613. A remainderman purchased a mortgage against the estate, obtained a decree requiring the life tenant to pay the over due interest and on a sheriff's sale, under the decree, of the life estate, bid in the estate and instituted proceedings to obtain possession. The life tenant having filed an appeal from the decree petitioned the Supreme Court for an injunction to restrain the possessory proceedings, alleging her property. Held, that as no appeal bond was filed as provided by Act No. 290, Public Acts 1909 as amended by Act No. 160, Public Act 1911, the proceedings under the decree were not stayed, and the injunction would be denied.—Pinel v. Pinel, 172 Mich. 611.

¶ 614. On adjudging that an act was in contempt of a decree of injunction pending on appeal, the extent of the punishment and the question of a reference was left to be determined on settlement of the decree by the Supreme Court.—Wilkinson v. Dunkle & Williams Co., 141 Mich. 409.

Power of Supreme Court respecting amendments, see post XI, F.
Application to amend record or bring up additional matter, see post § 242.
Return of record for additions or amendments, see ante § 118.
Compelling settlement of bill or case by trial judge, see ante § 115.
Making additions and amendments to record, see post XI, F.
Additional assignments and amendments of assignments, see ante § 124.

¶ 615. Where one of the parties caused a case to be filed in the Supreme Court which he claimed was a case settled after judgment, but it did not conclusively or necessarily show on its face that it was so intended; and the circuit judge who tried the suit and signed the document certified to the Supreme Court that, in so signing it, he did not suppose he was settling a case under the statute, and that the one signed did not set forth the whole facts as they existed, held, that the papers should be remitted to the circuit court for such action as that court should deem proper under the circumstances.—Farrand v. Bentley, 6 Mich. 281.

¶ 616. Under Pub. Acts, 1899, No. 243, permitting appeals in chancery without bond and allowing the appellee to proceed to enforce his decree unless a bond for stay be given, an enrollment of the decree in the minutes of the court is authorized, although an appeal has been taken, where no bond is filed, and on motion of the appellee the suit papers will be returned to the circuit court for enrollment.—Harmon v. Metcalfe, 134 Mich. 643.

¶ 617. If the case made shows on its face that all the evidence is not embraced, the court above will refuse to hear it, but will remand it for correction.—Lee v. Lake, 13 Mich. 220.

¶ 618. On a motion to dismiss a writ of error, it appeared that no bill of exceptions had been settled and no motion had been made for an extension of time within which the writ might be returned, although the return day of the writ had expired, but appellant desired to have the case remanded to hear certain motions. Held, that the writ should be dismissed for want of diligence or of good faith.—In re Thorington's Estate (Appeal of Starkweather), 157 Mich. 513.

§ 144. Mode of objecting to appeal or writ.

Practice on motions, see post § 166-168.

¶ 619. A motion to dismiss is the proper form of objection to a writ of error supposed to be barred by lapse of time. The plaintiff in error may show himself, by affidavit, to come within the exceptions of the statute; and if that fact is disputed the court may resort to such measures as may be found most suitable to have the question settled.—Teller v. Willis, 12 Mich. 268.

¶ 620. The right to sue out a writ of error should be contested upon a motion to dismiss the writ, supported by proper showing.—Hagar v. Coup, 50 Mich. 54.

¶ 621. An objection that a writ of error is not issued within the time allowed by 3 Comp. L. 1897, § 10492, is available without a plea of the statute of limitations.—Bliss v. Caille Bros. Co., 157 Mich. 258.

§ 145. Time for objections.

Right of court to refuse dismissal because not promptly moved, see post ¶ 636.

¶ 622. Motions to dismiss must be made at the earliest opportunity.—Warner v. Whittaker, 5 Mich. 241; Stewart v. Dixon, 6 Mich. 391; O'Flynn v. Eagle, 7 Mich. 306.

¶ 623. Motions based upon the irregular action of the opposite party must be made at the earliest opportunity, and will not be entertained after the lapse of a term unless some very satisfactory reason is shown for the delay.—O'Flynn v. Eagle, 7 Mich. 306.

¶ 624. Where plaintiff in error failed to give notice of suing out the writ of error, but served assignment of errors, a motion to dismiss made a year and a half afterward, for want of notice of suing out the writ, was held too late.—Smith v. Mitchell, 9 Mich. 261.

¶ 625. Delay in moving to dismiss will not prejudice the appellee if the appeal was not taken in time, so that the court has not acquired jurisdiction.—Moore v. Ellis, 18 Mich. 77.

¶ 626. All objections to a record as it stands at the beginning of the term should be made then, and not by separate motions, made on different motion days, to dismiss the writ and strike out the bill of exceptions.—Spencer v. Fish, 43 Mich. 226.

¶ 627. After judgment in the Supreme Court it is too late to move to dismiss a writ of error for informalities and irregularities.—Powers v. Irish, 23 Mich. 429.

¶ 628. The objection that judgment had not been entered when the writ of error was sued out comes too late when two full terms have intervened before the hearing without motion to dismiss.—McCahill v. Detroit City R. Co., 96 Mich. 156.

¶ 629. An objection made in the Supreme Court that two cases, a mandamus proceeding and a writ of error, were combined in one record, comes too late where the record gave timely notice that the cases were to be considered together, the attention of the trial court was not called to the matter by motion or otherwise, and the original files show that stipulations for continuances of the cases entitled as combined had been entered into, signed by attorneys for party objecting.—Craig v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 171 Mich. 33; Same v. Porter, Id.

§ 146. Waiver or bar of objections.

Dismissal of nugatory proceedings on motion of party at fault, see also post ¶ 691.
Opposition to dismissal as ground for denying further time to file return, see ante § 129, ¶ 580.
Waiver of failure to suggest death of co-party, see also Abatement, ¶ 82.

¶ 630. A notice of hearing given by an appellee is a waiver of irregularities in taking the appeal.—Durfee v. McClurg, 5 Mich. 532.

¶ 631. Where a cause was noticed for hearing in the Supreme Court by both parties, and then continued, and afterwards an objection was made, for the first time, that the exceptions had been irregularly settled, held, that the objection was waived.—Mason v. Phelps, 48 Mich. 126.

¶ 632. Counsel for appellee does not waive failure of the appellant to pay, within the time required, the register's fee for filing the settled case, by urging counsel for appellant to expedite the hearing of the case, if it appears that he did not know of such failure, and was not chargeable with notice. —Lum v. Fairbanks, 155 Mich. 23.

¶ 633. Counsel for appellee, who has accepted copies of the record and of the brief for appellant, and who expected the case to be heard at the next term of court, is not in a position to take advantage, on motion to dismiss the appeal, of the failure to serve notice of perfecting the appeal.—Lum v. Fairbanks, 155 Mich. 23.

¶ 634. Where under Act No. 209, Pub. Acts 1909, as amended by Act No. 160, Pub. Acts 1911, and under Chancery Rule 37, governing chancery appeals, an appellee does not object to the correctness and sufficiency of a case proposed for settlement by offering amendments thereto, he cannot object before the Supreme Court to an appeal so taken on the ground that the case proposed for appeal was not properly settled.—Hamilton v. Wilcox, 167 Mich. 551.

¶ 635. An attempt to procure a voluntary dismissal of a writ of error made after learning of a motion to dismiss by the other party, does not affect the right of the latter to a dismissal.—Bliss v. Caille Bros. Co., 157 Mich. 258.

¶ 636. After the statutory time for suing out a writ of error has expired, the failure of a party to move promptly to dismiss a writ so sued out cannot give the Supreme Court power to refuse to dismiss such writ. —Riley v. Detroit United Ry., 163 Mich. 327.

§ 147. Voluntary dismissal or discontinuance.

Right of other party to urge involuntary dismissal, see ante ¶ 635.
Dismissal in chancery or at law on trial or pending trial, see Discontinuance, etc.; Equity, X.

¶ 637. The plaintiff in error will be allowed to dismiss his writ of error on motion on payment of costs.—Birch v. Brown, 5 Mich. 31.

¶ 638. On motion of appellant the writ may be voluntarily dismissed where the bill was settled after time without a regular extension, and leave be sought to settle a new bill on which to bring a new writ.—Kaiser v. Detroit United Ry., 163 Mich. 109.

¶ 639. Where a relator sues out a writ of error, and notifies the respondent of the time and place of settling a bill of exceptions, and when objection is made there attempts to withdraw his writ of error, he cannot do so without giving the respondent opportunity to recover costs.—Ullman v. Sardell, 158 Mich. 396.

§ 148. Dismissal on motion of court.

¶ 640. The Supreme Court should, on its own motion, dismiss a case which the record discloses it has no jurisdiction to hear and determine, because a writ of error was sued out more than one year after the entry of judgment, and no motion for extension of time to take out the writ was made, and no extension of time was granted by the Supreme Court or any of its justices.—Hamilton v. Cummings, 200 Mich. 234.

§ 149. Grounds to dismiss or affirm without review.

Repeal of statute under which review sought, see also post ¶ 690.
Time for objections and waiver or bar of them, see ante §§ 145, 146.
Avoidance of review of merits on motion to dismiss, see post § 168.

Dismissal, affirmance or reversal at hearing without consideration for defects in procedure or parties, see post §§ 476-479.
Grounds for dismissing case made, see post ¶ 163.

¶ 641. An appeal in chancery can be dismissed for want of jurisdiction only.—First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. E. T. Barnum Wire & Iron Works, 58 Mich. 315.

¶ 150. ——Want of jurisdiction or appealable judgment.

See also ante ¶ 641.
On motion of court, see ante § 148.
Time for objection, see ante §§ 145, 146.

¶ 642. Where an examination of the printed and manuscript record discloses that no judgment has been returned there is nothing for the Supreme Court to consider, and a writ of error will be dismissed with costs.—Delaney v. Michigan Elm Hoop & Lumber Co., 144 Mich. 351.

¶ 643. Since an order sustaining a demurrer to a plea in abatement is not such a final order as is reviewable by writ of error, the writ will be dismissed with costs of printing the brief, and an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars to the appellee.—Wanner v. Martin, 173 Mich. 508.

¶ 644. Where a plea in abatement is filed and later, upon motion, is stricken from the files, and no final judgment is entered, a writ of error must be dismissed.—Backus v. Trumbull Motor Car Co., 194 Mich. 199.

¶ 645. An appeal will not be dismissed on the ground that the order appealed from was a matter of discretion in the court below.—Michigan Ins. Co. v. Whittemore, 12 Mich. 311.

¶ 151. ——Premature appeal or writ.

Want of judgment, see also ante § 150.
Time for objection, see ante § 145, ¶ 628.

¶ 646. Where a divorce case is heard in open court it is not necessarily ground for the dismissal of the appeal that it was taken before the case was settled. Where no harm results from such a course it raises a mere question of regularity and the appeal will stand nunc pro tunc.—Simons v. Simons, 7 Mich. 645.

¶ 647. Where the prevailing party neglected to enter his judgment until after the return day of a writ of error which had been taken out, but to which return had not been made, a motion to dismiss a second writ sued out after judgment was entered was denied.—Hinckley v. Washtenaw Probate Judge, 45 Mich. 343.

Want of co-party defendants, see also ante § 77.
Dismissal of one party on motion as removing necessary party and requiring dismissal on hearing, see post § 479.

¶ 648. A bill in equity can be so amended on the hearing as to implead as a party complainant one whose interests were identical with those of the other complainants, and who was out of the jurisdiction when the bill was filed, but has since formally approved of the proceedings by a filed writing. And the mere omission to implead such person is not ground for dismissing the bill on appeal.—Edinger v. Heiser, 62 Mich. 598.

§ 153. ——Defects in notice or service.

Time for objections and waiver of them, see ante §§ 145, 146.

¶ 649. An appeal will not be dismissed for appellant's failure to serve notice thereof on codefendants, as required by Supreme Court Rule 14, if the failure is sufficiently excused.—Garratt v. Litchfield, 10 Mich. 451.

¶ 650. Failure to serve the notice of appeal required by Sup. Ct. Rule 14 is not ground for dismissing the appeal; the court cannot deprive itself of statutory jurisdiction.—Shook v. Proctor, 26 Mich. 283; Simpson v. Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co., 38 Mich. 626.

¶ 651. An appeal in chancery, where the evidence has been taken in open court, will not be dismissed on the ground that the notices of appeal and of settling a case upon the evidence were served upon the appellee in person instead of his solicitor of record, where he is himself a solicitor of the court and has taken part in the management and trial of the cause, and made no objection to the service at the time.—McCurdy v. Bowman, 27 Mich. 214.

Nonpayment of fees, see also ante § 89.
Amendment of bond to prevent dismissal, see ante § 87.
Waiver of objection, see ante § 146, ¶ 632.
Power to amend bond or to require new one, see ante § 87.
For informality in bond, etc., see Jud. Act, Chap. XVI, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 12486.

¶ 652. The provision of How. St., § 6740, in relation to chancery appeals, that, if the appellant shall neglect to pay the registers' fees for making the return for 30 days after the appeal has been perfected, he shall be deemed to have waived his appeal, is mandatory, and upon such failure the appeal will be dismissed, in the absence of a waiver by the appellee of his statutory right.—Bennett v. Hickey, 110 Mich. 628.

¶ 653. The right of the appellee to insist upon the dismissal of the appeal for nonpayment of return fees is held to have been waived by a failure of his counsel to assert his intention of relying upon such right when he was told by counsel for appellant, in response to the suggestion that the return had not been made within the time prescribed by statute, that counsel intended to have the return made at once, and that the appellee should not be inconvenienced by the delay.—Bennett v. Hickey, 110 Mich. 628.

§ 155. ——Delay in filings or proceedings.

Computation of period for bringing proceeding, see ante § 73.
Delay in claiming appeal and filing bond, see also ante § 72.
Dismissal of writ barred by limitations, see ante § 72, ¶ 316.
Dismissal for delay beyond time for appeal, see also ante ¶ 57.
Allowing writ to stand as if proper extension had been regularly procured, see also ante ¶ 340.
Dismissal of writ without remand as penalty for laches, see also ante ¶ 618.
Delay in cases made, see post § 163.
Informality in proceedings, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVI, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 12486.
Dismissal for delay beyond return time to return record, see Sup. Ct. Rule 8.

¶ 654. Unless there has been gross neglect an appeal will not be dismissed for the failure of the register to cause return to be made within the time provided by the statute, if it is actually filed before the motion to dismiss is made.—Garratt v. Litchfield, 10 Mich. 451; Covell v. Mosely, 15 Mich. 514.

¶ 655. The writ will not be dismissed for delay in filing the return if it is actually filed before motion made.—Woodmansie v. Hollon, 16 Mich. 379.

¶ 656. Where the return of a transcript in an appeal in chancery is made before the motion to dismiss is called up, the motion will be denied. But the appellant giving no adequate excuse for the delay in filing the same, costs will be awarded to the appellee.—Babcock v. Twist, 16 Mich. 282.

¶ 657. An appeal will not be dismissed for delay in filing the transcript, where the order of the extension of the official stenographer's notes was given immediately after the decree and where appellant used reasonable diligence at every stage, and the delay was owing to the default of such officer of the court.—City of Kalamazoo v. Kalamazoo Heat, L. & P. Co., 122 Mich. 489.

¶ 658. Where a claim of appeal was filed under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 248, and the time to settle the case was extended for almost one year, an appeal will not be dismissed because a second claim of appeal was not filed within 40 days from the settlement of the case where no harm has resulted therefrom.—Patterson v. Hynes, 148 Mich. 581.

¶ 659. Where the record shows that the return to a writ of error was not filed for ten days after the return day, but also shows that the motion to dismiss was not made until ten days after the return was filed, the Supreme Court will not dismiss the writ.—Riley v. Detroit United Ry., 163 Mich. 327.

¶ 660. A final sale under a foreclosure was made in August, 1910, and the purchase price paid. On appeal by defendants a record was presented to the Supreme Court in October, 1911, and immediately thereafter the same was remanded, being found defective. Seven months elapsed without the perfected record being returned. Meanwhile the purchaser was unable to obtain either possession or a return of the purchase price, the defendants occupying the premises without the payment of rent or taxes. Held, the appeal should be dismissed for failure to prosecute the same.—Vogt v. Cottier, 170 Mich. 124.

¶ 661. A motion to dismiss a writ of error because an assignment of error was not filed in time was denied where the assignment was in fact filed, and the delay was satisfactorily accounted for.—Scribner v. Gay, 5 Mich. 511.

¶ 662. A writ of error will not be dismissed for delay in filing the return if it is filed before the motion to dismiss is heard.—Hill v. Hill, 112 Mich. 633.

§ 156. ——Deficiencies or omissions in bill or case.

¶ 663. The court will not dismiss an appeal for a failure of the register to make a full return; but a further return will be ordered.—Maynard v. Hoskins, 8 Mich. 81.

¶ 664. An appeal will not be dismissed on the ground of an imperfection in the record. The proper remedy should be sought by motion to amend the return.—Verplank v. Hall, 21 Mich. 469, rehearing denied 22 Mich. 8

¶ 665. Error to review a judgment against a garnishee defendant will not be dismissed because certain exhibits referred to by the garnishee defendant in his oral testimony were not contained in the record of the evidence.—King v. Harrigan, 142 Mich. 47

¶ 666. An appeal from a decree pursuant to testimony taken before a commissioner will not be dismissed for failure to transmit books and exhibits; the remedy being to have them transmitted.—Hughes v. Love, 136 Mich. 169.

¶ 667. It seems that the Supreme Court will remand the record for correction (inclusion of assignments of error in the bill of exceptions) rather than refuse to entertain the appeal.—Coon v. Dennis, 111 Mich. 450.

¶ 668. A writ of error will be dismissed on motion where no assignment of errors accompanied the bill of exceptions when it was settled, as required by 1897 C. C. Rule 47, par. (e), and none was served until some days afterwards.—Roush v. Darmstaetter, 113 Mich. 535.

§ 157. ——Failure to settle and sign bill or case properly.

Ground for voluntary dismissal, see ante § 147, ¶ 638.

Time for settlement or preparation, see ante § 94.

¶ 669. The writ of error will be dismissed where the record does not show that the bill of exceptions was signed and settled by the circuit judge.—Davison v. Valin, 142 Mich. 83.

¶ 670. In a cause where the testimony was taken in open court, and no case was settled within the statutory time, the court below, at the request of the appealing defendants, certified up a transcript of the stenographer's minutes as the whole evidence in the cause, but the certificate failed to state that a case had been settled. The appellee's motion to dismiss the appeal for want of settlement was denied, but leave was granted him, if not satisfied with the proofs as returned, to have the case resettled.—McBride v. Rea, 33 Mich. 347.

¶ 671. Appeal will not be dismissed because the return has been made to the wrong clerk's office; the statute requiring return to be made to the nearest office being directory merely.—Beebe v. Young, 13 Mich. 221.

¶ 672. Dismissal of an appeal on the ground that appellees had had no notice of the settlement of the case was denied where it appeared that it was settled in good faith and that they knew of the proceedings and might have appeared.—Stickle v. Haskins, 54 Mich. 130.

¶ 673. For failure to have a stipulated bill authenticated by the trial court and shown on the record, the writ of error will be dismissed if the fact is brought to the Supreme Court's attention before argument.—Lynch v. Craney, 95 Mich. 199.

¶ 674. Where a case is not heard on testimony taken in open court there is nothing to settle, and a motion to dismiss such a case on the ground that it has not been settled will be denied.—Pardo v. Bittorf, 47 Mich. 644.

¶ 675. An appeal from a decree for a sale for delinquent taxes cannot be dismissed for appellant's failure to cause a case to be made and settled, when the case is one that will stand for hearing without the testimony.—Carney v. Baldwin, 95 Mich. 442.

¶ 676. Where errors are assigned without exceptions under Supreme Court Rule 11 a writ of error will not be dismissed because no bill of exceptions was settled, and signed, no case was made and settled, and the record was not signed and certified by the circuit judge, and no notice of settlement of a bill of exceptions or case made was ever served, and the record filed is not complete and does not contain all the evidence in the case.—King v. Harrigan, 142 Mich. 477.

¶ 677. Uncertainty and informality in the assignment of errors are no ground for quashing the assignment or for dismissing the writ.—Teller v. Wetherell, 6 Mich. 46.

§ 159. ——Failure to print or serve papers.

Failure to print testimony taken on appeal, see also post § 161.

Dismissal for failure to serve and file copies of printed record in time, see Sup. Ct. Rule 38.

¶ 678. A neglect to comply with Sup. Ct. Rule 32, requiring records and briefs to be printed, will, if no satisfactory excuse be offered, be sufficient ground to decline to hear the cause and to affirm the judgment of the court below.—Sanborn v. Robinson, 22 Mich. 92.

¶ 679. A writ of error will not be dismissed for failure to print and serve the record where neither party has ever noticed the case for hearing.—Leland v. Township of Blair, 97 Mich. 612.

§ 160. ——Default in Supreme Court.

¶ 680. The failure of a party to appear to argue a case was not, by itself, a sufficient default to deprive him of his right of appeal.—Stevens v. Townsend, 1 D. 77.

¶ 681. Where the appellant defaults at the hearing the decree below will be affirmed on motion.—Jackson Iron Co. v. Farrand, 5 Mich. 249.

¶ 682. Where the plaintiff in error makes default at the hearing in the Supreme Court, the judgment below will be affirmed on motion.—Scott v. Scott, 5 Mich. 249.

¶ 683. A record was filed and also a brief for defendant appellees, but complainant did not appear in person or by counsel, nor did he file a brief. The decree was affirmed without examining the case.—Woodward v. Chester, 42 Mich. 461.

¶ 684. A motion to dismiss a writ of error for want of prosecution, based upon (former) Supreme Court Rule 59, will be denied where it appears that neither party has ever noticed the case for hearing.—Leland v. Blair Twp., 97 Mich. 612.

Failure to send up documents as stipulated, see also post ¶ 697.

¶ 685. Depositions on appeal were taken by an appellant and these were turned over by the court stenographer to the appellant, instead of being returned into court. Appellant's purpose in doing this was to shorten the record by agreement with appellee to strike out immaterial portions, and appellee joined in these negotiations. After loss of considerable time the parties failed to reach an agreement. Appellant then proceeded with reasonable diligence to have the record printed and prepare it for filing. Held, in view of these circumstances, the Supreme Court would not on appellee's motion dismiss the appeal for appellant's failure to have the record printed and served within the time prescribed by Rule 57.—Detroit Lumber Co. v. The Petrel, 163 Mich. 245.

§ 162. ——Satisfaction or extinguishment of controversy.

Dismissal of appeal where divorce was for limited term which has elapsed, see also Divorce, VII.

¶ 686. Plaintiff in an ejectment suit over two strips of land, secured a judgment as to a corner of one of the strips against defendant railway. It then took out a writ of error, and also caused to be issued a writ of possession and of execution which were kept in its possession. Under threats of employing these writs, plaintiff induced defendant to pay the costs of the suit and partly remove its tracks from the said corner. Held, that plaintiff having taken advantage of the judgment, a motion in the Supreme Court to dismiss its appeal should be granted.—Clairview Park Improvement Co. of Grosse Pointe, Ltd. v. Detroit & L. St. C. Ry., 164 Mich. 74.

¶ 687. A writ of error to review an order committing a person accused of crime to the asylum for the dangerous and criminal insane, was dismissed as useless where, while it was pending, such person was discharged from the asylum and the prosecution against him nolle prossed.—People v. Maguire, 115 Mich. 65.

§ 163. Dismissal of case made.

¶ 688. The Supreme Court cannot dismiss a case made after judgment which has never been transmitted to and filed in that court.—Robertson v. Little, 10 Mich. 371.

¶ 689. A case made, submitted without exceptions, is dismissed with costs.—Wilkinson v. Earl, 39 Mich. 626.

¶ 690. A case settled for review on the facts after repeal of the statute authorizing such review was dismissed.—Heimbach v. Weinberg, 18 Mich. 48.

¶ 691. Where a party notices a cause for hearing in the Supreme Court as on case made, and the paper filed as a case made has never been settled and signed by the judge as such, the party who has given notice of hearing will not be precluded from moving to dismiss on that ground.—Farrand v. Bentley, 6 Mich. 281.

¶ 692. The time for bringing up a case made is so far analogous to that limited by statute for bringing writs of error that a case which has been returned and filed in the Supreme Court will not be dismissed merely on the ground of delay where the delay is less than two years.—Ackley v. Sager, 30 Mich. 264.

¶ 693. If the party who has caused the case to be made neglects for more than two years to cause it to be certified to the Supreme Court, that court will dismiss the case—at least unless the delay is sufficiently accounted for.—Van Blarcom v. The Aetna Insurance Co., 6 Mich. 299.

¶ 694. Neglect to serve a statement of errors relied on in taking up a case made was overlooked by the court where the omission had not been complained of.—Perkins v. Nugent, 45 Mich. 156.

§ 164. Reversal without review.

¶ 695. Where, after hearing a chancery case in which the testimony was taken in open court, the judge resigned, without settling within the time allowed a case to bring up the testimony on appeal, and the appeal was taken without the testimony, a motion for a reversal of the decree below was granted without costs, and the cause remanded for a new hearing.—Tucker v. Tucker, 26 Mich. 443.

¶ 696. The facts that the record is much larger than it need have been, and much of the testimony might have been omitted as being of little value, do not necessarily amount to a cause for reversal.—Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 145 Mich. 656.

¶ 697. By stipulation of the parties made in the bill of exceptions, plaintiff agreed to file certain tally books with the clerk of the Supreme Court. Plaintiff having failed to so file them, defendant entered a motion before said court to require him to file them, asking for an order reversing the judgment in plaintiff's favor upon his failure so to do. It appeared that said books had been accidentally lost without the fault of either party. Held, the motion should be denied, with the option in the defendant to treat the same as an application to remit the record to the trial court for the purpose of enabling either party to apply to said court for such an amendment to the bill of exceptions as might throw further light upon contents of said books.—Sullivan v. Godkin, 167 Mich. 663.

§ 165. Striking off cause or papers therein.

Motion and practice thereon, see post §§ 166-168.
Setting aside writ for want of return, see also ante ¶ 570.
Striking cause improperly on calendar, see ante § 134.

¶ 698. The Supreme Court cannot strike out a bill of exceptions on proof that it was settled without notice to defendant in error.—Scribner v. Gay, 5 Mich. 511.

¶ 699. A bill of exceptions will not be stricken out for delay in settling it, when the party presenting it was not responsible for the delay.—Detroit v. Blackeby, 20 Mich. 219.

¶ 700. Where, after the expiration of a term at which the cause was tried, a time was fixed by consent for settling a bill of exceptions, and the parties appeared at the time appointed and the bill was settled and came into the Supreme Court appended to the record, it was held that it would not be stricken out because there had been no order made during the trial term for extending the time for settling the exceptions.—Atlas Min. Co. v. Johnston, 22 Mich. 78.

¶ 701. Where, upon a petition for a writ of assistance as a purchaser from the state under a tax sale, the respondent filed an answer to the evidence, which he asked to have treated as a cross-bill, and included in the answer a prayer for relief, and made the auditor general a party, a motion to strike from the files a certificate obtained by respondent from the circuit judge will not be granted, where the certificate, as construed by respondent's counsel, was intended to affirm facts only as they are stated by the affidavit made by petitioner, and where the Supreme Court would in any event, before finally dismissing the proceeding, permit an amended return, to show the facts as stated in the affidavits.—McFarlane v. Simpson, 153 Mich. 193.

¶ 702. The bill of exceptions in one of two consolidated causes on appeal contained no assignments of error, and the many references therein to the record were left blank. In the other case the record contained no index and the bill of exceptions was not printed. The briefs contained numerous references inserted in ink to the record in the other cause. The records in both cases were uncertain and confusing. Held, the cases should be stricken from the docket.—In re Balluss' Estate, 168 Mich. 132; Jipson v. Balluss, Id.

Motion practice in Supreme Court, form of papers, and statement of grounds and objects, see Sup. Ct. Rules 27-32.
Motion calendar, docket, and days, see Sup. Ct. Rule 29.

¶ 703. A motion not called up on the day for which it was noticed cannot be taken up on any subsequent day in term, except by consent, unless it has been ordered to stand over to such subsequent day.—Ireland v. Spalding, 11 Mich. 455.

¶ 704. Where a chancery case is on appeal awaiting a hearing, a motion to remand the same to the circuit court for the purpose of introducing further testimony will be heard at the same time the appeal is considered.—Barthel v. Crippen, 154 Mich. 499.

¶ 705. When an appellee asks for the dismissal of an appeal from a decree of the old court of chancery on the ground of appellant's default below, the decree must recite all those facts, which by the rules and practice of the court of chancery, entitled a party to default his adversary.—Stevens v. Townsend, 1 D. 77.

¶ 707. On a motion for relief from delay in filing return, counter-affidavits may be read showing that it would be against good faith for the plaintiff in error to avail himself of the error complained of.—Lathrop v. Hicks, 2 D. 223.

¶ 708. On motion to dismiss for want of a sufficient bond, affidavits will not be received to enlarge or restrict the officer's certificate of approval.—Maynard v. Hoskins, 8 Mich. 260.

¶ 709. Counter-affidavits may be read in opposition to a motion without having been served.—Lathrop v. Hicks, 2 D. 223.

§ 167. ——Notice of motion.

Service of counter-affidavits, see ante ¶ 709.

Notice for argument of motions, see Sup. Ct. Rule 28.

Methods of serving notices and papers in Supreme Court, see Sup. Ct. Rules 22-26.

¶ 710. Notice of special motions is in all cases necessary where the opposite party has appeared in the cause.—Scribner v. Doseman, 5 Mich. 283.

¶ 711. A plaintiff in error is always in court and always entitled to notice of special motions.—Scribner v. Doseman, 5 Mich. 283.

¶ 712. Motion to strike from docket on ground that cause was noticed by counsel for defendant in error who had not caused an appearance to be entered in the Supreme Court will not be heard without notice in the absence of counsel representing the other side.—Frost v. Lawler, 33 Mich. 348.

¶ 713. When counsel has appeared notices must be served upon him and not upon the party.—People v. Houghton County Sup'rs, 19 Mich. 9.

¶ 714. Motions in causes not on the docket will not be heard without notice.—Carpenter v. People, 19 Mich. 9.

¶ 715. A motion to dismiss a writ of error in a cause not on the docket of the term when the motion is made will not be heard without notice.—Hill v. Bowers, 21 Mich. 303.

¶ 716. When notices are served upon an agent, the distance of the attorney's residence from the place of holding the court will determine the time for which notice must be given, and not the distance of the agent's residence from the court.—Maynard v. Penniman, 7 Mich. 333.

¶ 717. The usual route of travel must govern in the computation of the time required to be given by rule in the service of notices of motions, etc.—Raymond v. Hinckson, 15 Mich. 517.

¶ 718. Four days is the shortest time of notice allowable on ordinary special motions, except where the time has been shortened in cases already in court, and a longer time is necessary where service is made at a distance.—McCaslin v. Camp, 26 Mich. 390.

¶ 719. No agent for the service of papers can be recognized under the rules, unless residing at Detroit or Lansing.—Maynard v. Penniman, 7 Mich. 333.

§ 168. ——Issues, hearing and matters considered.

Nonconsideration of merits on motion for rehearing, see post § 547.

Arguments and briefs on motions, see Sup. Ct. Rules 27, 30.

¶ 720. The merits of a case cannot be considered on a motion to dismiss an appeal therein.—First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. E. T. Barnum Wire & Iron Works, 58 Mich. 315.

¶ 721. A question as to whether a principle heretofore settled by the court is or is not applicable to a case now pending is a question to be discussed at the hearing and not on motion to docket and dismiss.—Tower v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 7 Mich. 10.

¶ 722. Whether the plaintiff in error appeared and argued the cause in the court below, or consented to the judgment then entered, is one which cannot be raised on affidavit on motion to dismiss.—Tower v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 7 Mich. 10.

¶ 723. The contention that an appeal is frivolous and made for the purpose of delay cannot be considered on a motion to dismiss.—Detroit Society for Study & Prevention of Tuberculosis v. Detroit Society for Study & Prevention of Tuberculosis, 167 Mich. 97.

§ 169. Order on motion to dismiss, and effect of same.

Reinstatement of cause after dismissal, see post § 171.

Costs on dismissal, see Costs, V.

[Note. There are numerous paragraphs preceding in this division which mention that costs were allowed or denied on motion to dismiss. Such mention is merely incidental to the point, but references to such paragraphs will be found in Costs, V, along with the decisions on that point.]

Denial of dismissal on conditions, see also ante §§ 149-163, wherein will be found paragraphs showing incidentally that conditions were imposed.

Denial of motion on conditions, see Sup. Ct. Rule 9.

¶ 724. On a motion in the Supreme Court to set aside a stipulation dismissing the suit without consent of the moving attorneys, who claim a lien on the judgment, the motion was held under advisement, and the matter referred to the trial court to determine on issues whether there was any indebtedness to the attorneys.—Kirby v. LaDow, 102 Mich. 345.

¶ 725. A writ of error is of right, and its dismissal is equivalent to a nonsuit and does not bar the issue of a new writ.—Beller v. Stevens, 40 Mich. 168.

¶ 726. Where a writ of error brought by a party who had no right to maintain it is dismissed for that reason, such dismissal is no bar to a new writ sued out by a proper party who did not join in the former writ.—Taff v. Hosmer, 14 Mich. 249.

¶ 727. Dismissal of a writ of error leaves the judgment on which it was sued out operative and conclusive.—Hitchcock v. Pratt, 51 Mich. 263.

§ 170. Renewed or further motions.

¶ 729. Nonpayment of costs imposed on refusing to dismiss an appeal is no ground for another motion to dismiss if the refusal was not conditioned on payment.—Connorton v. Miller, 41 Mich. 1.

§ 171. Reinstatement of cause.

Right to new writ after dismissal, see ante § 169.

Dismissal of writ and remission of record with leave to sue out new writ, see ante ¶ 542.

¶ 730. When a motion is made to reinstate a cause at a term following its dismissal for want of prosecution, the party making the motion should show himself in position to proceed at once to the hearing if the motion should be granted.—Bingham v. Parsons, 9 Mich. 144.

¶ 731. A case which had been dismissed for want of prosecution was reinstated on terms, on affidavit of merit and of an oral agreement with counsel for defendant in error, giving time; and this, though the oral agreement, was denied.—Scott v. Scott, 5 Mich. 106.

¶ 732. An appeal dismissed for nonpayment of the register's fee within 30 days after settlement of the case, will not be reinstated under Pub. Acts 1905, No. 15, where an examination of the record satisfies the Supreme Court "that justice" does not "require a revision of the case upon the merits," as required by that act.—Collat v. Ives, 141 Mich. 500.

¶ 733. A motion by the surety of a plaintiff in error to reinstate and defend on its merits an appeal which has been dismissed for want of prosecution, is properly denied where made five months after notice of the intention of the plaintiff not to prosecute.—Galinski v. Security Fire Insurance Co., 147 Mich. 194.

XI. PRESENTATION AND ARGUMENT OF THE CAUSE.

A. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY OF RECORD OR ABSTRACT.

§ 172. In general; jurisdictional requisites.

Contents belonging to judgment roll, see ante §§ 99, 100.

Original bill as part of record on appeal from decree after demurrers and amendments, see ante § 99, ¶ 458.

Function of bill of exceptions or case in general, see ante § 90.

Jurisdictional questions extrinsic to the judgment roll, see post § 180.

Costs for prolixity or irregularity in form or substance, see Costs, V.

Record in certiorari, see Certiorari.

Doctrine that the review will not be extended beyond the record and the errors apparent thereby, see post XII, A, B.

The record must suffice to make the error appear without resorting to presumption that error was committed. See post XII, C.

Construction and effect of record, its conclusiveness, and the presumptions indulged on it, see post XII, C.

Treating amendments as made, see post § 369.

Sufficiency of record to support motion founded thereon, see also ante ¶ 705.

Abstract in lieu of originals, see 1919 C. C. Rule 68.

¶ 734. On review of a judgment of a justice of the peace the jurisdiction of the justice must appear affirmatively upon the face of the proceeding.—Hoben v. Citizens' Tel. Co., 176 Mich. 596.

§ 173. Showing of verdict, judgment or decree.

Necessity or remand when record does not afford means for rendering judgment, see post XIII, B.

¶ 735. The Supreme Court will not consider a record which fails to show any entry of judgment below and which is not certified by the trial judge.—In re Vetter's Estate, 162 Mich. 109.

¶ 736. A return showing a judgment entry and a reference in the printed bill of exceptions to a judgment sufficiently meets an objection that the record does not embody a judgment.—Lingle v. Dalzell, 141 Mich. 399.

¶ 737. An order of the circuit court in a chancery case, entered after an appeal from an order, incorporating therein a statement that it was entered by consent of the parties in open court, at least amounts to a certificate that the order appealed from was a consent order.—Weber v. Costigan, 139 Mich. 146.

¶ 738. The practice of omitting to have the printed record or its index make any allusion as to who recovered a verdict is condemned.—Hastings v. Boland, 136 Mich. 240.

§ 174. Printing and indexing the record.

Necessity of reproducing books, papers, etc., in printed record, see also ante § 104, ¶ 491.

Use of originals as copy for printing, see also ante ¶ 497.

Setting out and identifying matter in assignments, see post §§ 211-213.

Specific references in briefs to portion of record involved in point, see post § 235.

Dismissal for failure to print properly, see ante § 159.

Printing briefs and pointing out therein the points relied on, see post §§ 231, 232.

Matter to be included in typewritten record in certiorari, see Certiorari.

Form and contents of printed record, and style of printing type and paper, see Sup. Ct. Rule 35.

Indexing record, see Sup. Ct. Rule 36.

Preparation of printed record, service of copies of same, and number of copies to be served and filed, see Sup. Ct. Rule 38.

¶ 738a. The Supreme Court declined to allow a chancery cause to go to hearing without printing the entire record, there being no appearance by counsel on one side with whom to agree, subject to the court's approval, as to how much ought to be printed.—University of Michigan v. Rose, 45 Mich. 284.

¶ 739. Where no index is furnished to the record, or to the parts thereof to which assignments of error apply, as required by Sup. Ct. Rule 61, amended July 2, 1890, the record will not be examined critically for technical errors.—Pease v. Munro, 83 Mich. 475.

¶ 740. Under (former) Sup. Ct. Rule 61, assignments of error cannot be considered where the exceptions relied on to support them are not indexed, and where the pages containing them are not referred to either in the assignment of error or in the brief of counsel.—Reeder v. Moore, 95 Mich. 594.

¶ 741. The index to the record should in some way name or describe the exhibits so as to identify them.—Sprague v. Moore, 130 Mich. 92.

¶ 742. Where neither by index nor by other reference is the Supreme Court referred to all of the exceptions and specific errors complained of in the record, as required by (former) Sup. Ct. Rule 36, the court is not compelled to read the record until it finds them.—Barnard v. McLeod, 114 Mich. 73.

¶ 743. Where an appellant fails to index his assignment of errors, as provided by Supreme Court Rule No. 36, they will not be reviewed on appeal.—Duff v. Judson, 166 Mich. 386.

¶ 744. Assignments of error based on exhibits not printed in the record, or indexed as required by Supreme Court Rule 36 will not be considered on writ of error.—Showen v. J. L. Owens Co., 182 Mich. 26.

¶ 745. Exceptions which are not indexed in the record as required by Supreme Court Rule 36 will not be considered.—Niagara Sprayer Co. v. Wood, 186 Mich. 303.

B. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY OF CASE MADE OR BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

§ 175. General requisites.

Propriety and functions in general, see also § 90.

Contents of bill or case in general, see §§ 101-105.

Evidence or other matter proper to be included in bill, see 1916 C. C. Rule § 4.

Case on appeal, see 1916 C. C. Rule § 7.

Sufficiency of the bill to present particular objections and exceptions, see post §§ 179-195.
Sufficiency of the judgment roll or record proper, see ante §§ 172, 173.
Condensation of evidence or narrative rather than full transcript, see ante § 103.
Inclusion of maps or plans where essential to understanding of the record, see ante § 104.
Certified copy of judge's minutes as insufficient chancery case, see ante ¶ 510.
Necessity that bill or case be properly settled and signed, see ante § 110 et seq.
Return of record for additions or amendments, see ante § 118.
Necessity of showing matters in return to certiorari or mandamus to present same for consideration, see Certiorari; Mandamus, V.
In appeals from condemnation or highway proceedings, see Eminent Domain, VIII; Highways, II, B.

[The construction and effect of the bill as returned belongs and is treated with the rules for review (see post XII), being inseparable from the doctrine of presumptions on review. The following cross-references point out some of the leading phases of these rules.]
Construction and effect of bill or case, its conclusiveness and the presumptions arising on it or from its silence, see post XII, C.
Construction of the certificate by Supreme Court, see post § 340.
Conflict between printed record and original bill or case, see post § 341.
Conflict between two bills prepared on cross-error, see post § 341.
Presumptions as to contents and correctness, see post §§ 345-349.
Presumption as to evidence in narrative form, see post §§ 346, 347.
Presumption as to regularity of settlement and signing and conclusiveness as certified, see post §§ 348, 349.
Facts assumed to be true because of exceptions, see post § 351.
Presumptions of regularity and correctness of procedure, see post § 352 et seq.
Presumption as to effect of admission or exclusion of evidence not set out or answer not appearing, see ante § 358.
Presumption as to harm from improper argument, see post § 359.
Presumption as to matters not shown, see post §§ 361-393.
Presumptions as to admissibility of evidence where bill or case does not show it, see post §§ 370, 371.
Presumption as to other proofs or want of proof where record is not certified as complete, see post §§ 373-378.
Restriction of the review to the record, see post XII, B, 1.
Restriction of review to record proper where exceptions are not presented, see post §§ 319-321.
What questions are open on record partially insufficient, see post XII, B, 3.
Denial of dismissal and retention of cause to be heard on record, where no bill or case is settled, see ante § 157.
Dismissal or affirmance on hearing for want of any question presented, see post § 480.
Necessity of remand when record does not afford means of arriving at correct judgment, see post XIII, B.
Extraneous matters as ground for rehearing, see post § 538.

¶ 746. A bill of exceptions should show the precise theory of the case, and the issues should not be confused.—Maybee v. Tregent, 47 Mich. 495.

¶ 747. An exception which depends upon a preliminary question for the solution of which the record affords no data raises no point to be considered.—American Merchants' Union Exp. Co. v. Phillips, 29 Mich. 515.

§ 176. Showing as to completeness of evidence involved.

Certification of the bill by trial judge, see ante § 110.
Sufficiency to present error of effect of evidence, see post § 186 et seq.

¶ 748. The bill of exceptions must purport to contain all evidence necessary to a consideration of assigned error.—Connor v. Levinson, 115 Mich. 297.

¶ 749. The record must appear by a proper certificate to contain all the evidence or at least its substance in order that sufficiency to go to the jury on an issue may be reviewed.—Finkbinder v. Ernst, 126 Mich. 565.

§ 177. Showing as to objections, rulings and exceptions.

In case made, see post § 196.

¶ 750. Matters recited in the bill of exceptions cannot be reviewed unless they appear to have been excepted to and ruled on.—Ready v. Kearsley, 14 Mich. 215; Maclean v. Scripps, 52 Mich. 214.

¶ 751. An objection upon which the record shows no ruling made cannot be considered.—Julius King Optical Co. v. Treat, 72 Mich. 599.

¶ 752. Except as to the charge, questions which do not appear from the record to have been properly raised at the trial by exceptions to rulings or by failure of the court to correct objectionable matter when his attention was called to it, will not be considered by the Supreme Court.—Wiers v. Shaw-Walker Co., 171 Mich. 324.

¶ 753. An abuse of discretion in not allowing defendant to plead over after a demurrer has been overruled might be reviewed; but held there must be a showing of request and refusal in the case by the record.—Wyckoff, S. & B. Co. v. Bishop, 98 Mich. 352.

¶ 754. Error cannot be assigned upon a record showing that the court on inquiry said he did not desire to hear counsel upon questions of law involved in instructions requested. The desire of counsel for such hearing must have been brought to the court's attention.—Wildey v. Crane, 69 Mich. 17.

¶ 755. An assignment of error in arguing to the jury that plaintiff was discharged from employment at a given time is not supported by a record that merely shows that on an offer of evidence argument was made to the court and exception taken which touched on the question of a discharge.—Pinet v. Montague, 103 Mich. 516.

¶ 756. Argument of counsel is not presented for error, it seems, where the reporter has noted an exception but the record does not disclose that any action was requested of the trial court.—Lauder v. Township of St. Clair, 125 Mich. 479.

¶ 757. Assignments of error based upon improper argument of counsel will not be reviewed where the record does not show that objection was made at the time and that the court ruled upon such objection.—Pierson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 149 Mich. 167.

¶ 758. An assignment of error based on the erroneous exclusion of testimony cannot be noticed where the record fails to show an exception.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 759. Error in overruling a motion to strike out evidence cannot be reviewed where no exception to the ruling appears in the record.—Stauber v. Ellett, 140 Mich. 271.

¶ 760. The Supreme Court on writ of error cannot pass upon the question of variance between pleadings and proofs where the record does not indicate that said question was presented to, and passed upon by, the trial judge.—Minkkinen v. Quincy Min. Co., 169 Mich. 279.

¶ 761. Requests to charge appearing in the printed record, but not in the bill of exceptions, which does not show that any exceptions were taken to the refusal of the court to give them, or that the attention of the court was called to such requests, cannot be considered.—Lindner v. Hine, 84 Mich. 511.

¶ 762. To support the assignment of error that on the whole evidence a party is entitled to a verdict, it should appear that the court had refused to instruct the jury to find for him.—Hitchens v. Shaller, 32 Mich. 496.

¶ 763. An objection that an amendment to a bill of exceptions rendered the record unnecessarily large, will not be considered where no objection to the amendment is pointed out in the record.—Niagara Sprayer Co. v. Wood, 186 Mich, 303.

§ 178. Production of exhibits with record.

Reversal for failure to produce documents, see ante ¶ 697.

Manner of incorporating books, papers and exhibits, see ante § 104.

¶ 764. In making up the record for appeal in a suit in trover against defendant for cutting timber off plaintiff's land, the parties stipulated that plaintiff's tally books, purporting to show the amount of timber cut off by defendant, should be produced upon the hearing in the Supreme Court in view of the impossibility of making a copy which would accurately represent them. At the trial defendant objected to the admission of the tally books on the ground of unexplained erasures and suspicious alterations manifest on inspection and urged the same objections in the Supreme Court. On account of illness of plaintiff's counsel at the trial, his appealing counsel at the Supreme Court hearing was unable, through no fault of his own, to produce said books. No other evidence was presented as to the amount of timber cut by defendant. Held, the judgment in the plaintiff's favor must be reversed on account of the failure to produce the tally books.—Sullivan v. Godkin, 172 Mich. 257.

§ 179. Challenges and formation of jury.

¶ 765. Whether the court erred in overruling a challenge to the array of jurors will not be considered on error, where the record contains nothing but the challenge itself to show that the statements of fact set forth in the challenge are true, or that the jurors were in any way disqualified.—Tunnicliffe v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co., 107 Mich. 261.

§ 180. Questions of jurisdiction.

On the face of the judgment roll, see ante § 172.

¶ 766. A ruling sustaining jurisdiction will not be reviewed where the record on error contains neither the writs, the disclosure, nor the answers of the garnishee defendant, where service is obtained by garnishment and attachment; even though the court has no jurisdiction to render judgment against the principal defendant, if the garnishee defendant is not liable to such principal defendant. —Harrison Granite Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 145 Mich. 712.

¶ 766a. Even in proceedings in which jurisdiction of the trial court must be made affirmatively to appear, the court of appeal will not consider exceptions to a ruling sustaining jurisdiction without the evidence upon which the ruling was made.—Harrison Granite Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 145 Mich. 712.

¶ 767. Where the affidavit on which a special appeal by a claimant in garnishment proceedings from the justice's to the circuit court is not included in the record upon a further appeal by such claimant to the Supreme Court, an assignment that the circuit court erred in finding that the validity of the justice's judgment could not be raised on the special appeal, but should have been raised by certiorari, cannot be considered.—Dunkley v. City of Marquette, 157 Mich. 339.

¶ 767a. Where the record failed to disclose that a garnishee was a nonresident of the county wherein the principal action was brought and judgment against it rendered in garnishment, held that it could not object on appeal to the authority of the court to require it to appear and produce its books, etc., in such court.—Nichol v. Nevers, 196 Mich. 208.

§ 181. Change of venue or transfer of cause.

¶ 768. Upon a writ of error the court will not review the action of the court of one county in sending the case to another county for trial, where the proceedings before the first court are not in the record.—County of Montmorency v. Wiltse, 125 Mich. 47.

§ 182. Admission or retention of evidence.

Assigning admission as error, see post § 204.

¶ 769. An assignment of error that the court erred in permitting a witness to answer a given question will not be considered where the record fails to show that the question was answered.—Totten v. Burhans, 108 Mich. 6.

¶ 770. Admissibility of evidence as to which no exceptions are found in the record will not be considered in the court of appeal. —Harrison Granite Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 145 Mich. 712.

¶ 771. The objection that questions are leading cannot be noticed unless brought upon the record, and will not in general be noticed even if so brought.—Church v. John Davis & Co., 93 Mich. 477.

¶ 772. Where error assigned upon a refusal to strike out testimony is not discussed in appellant's brief, and it does not appear that exception to the action of the court was taken, such error will not be considered.—Priebisch v. Ottenwess, 176 Mich. 476.

§ 183. Exclusion of evidence.

Sufficiency of showing of objections, see ante § 177.

¶ 773. An allegation of error for excluding evidence must be supported by an affirmative showing in the bill of exceptions.—Reynolds v. Continental Ins. Co., 36 Mich. 131.

¶ 774. Though a defendant sued for assault and battery may show how he was dressed at the time, the exclusion of such a question will not be reviewed unless the importance of it is shown by the record.—Kuney v. Dutcher, 56 Mich. 308.

¶ 775. The Supreme Court will not review an alleged error in refusing to admit certain letters in evidence, when neither the letters nor their contents are preserved in the record.—Bachinski v. Bachinski's Estate, 152 Mich. 693.

¶ 776. Where the record does not show an offer of testimony, its rejection cannot be considered on appeal.—Eberts v. Mt. Clemens Sugar Co., 182 Mich. 449.

¶ 777. Where any documentary evidence is excluded or a part is admitted, and the claim is that the whole should have been introduced, such evidence excluded or not introduced should be made a part of the bill of exceptions, so that the Supreme Court can judge whether it is admissible.—People v. Coughlin, 67 Mich. 466.

¶ 778. Assignments of error that the trial court excluded evidence cannot be considered on appeal where no exceptions were taken, and the court is not informed by an offer to prove or otherwise what the testimony would have been, although it is asserted in the brief that the record makes the purpose of the evidence clear.—Henderson v. Agon, 148 Mich. 252.

¶ 779. Testimony, evidently irrelevant and immaterial, may, on motion, be ordered expunged with costs against a solicitor who insists upon its being taken; but it must be returned on appeal in order that the rule may be reviewed.—Meech v. Lee, 82 Mich. 274.

§ 184. Objections to argument or conduct of trial.

Sufficiency of showing of objection, ruling and exception, see ante § 177.
Necessity of ruling to support assignment, see also post § 197.

¶ 780. An objection to language used by an attorney in his opening statement to the jury cannot be considered on error where the record does not show what the language was. —Welch v. Palmer, 85 Mich. 310.

¶ 781. An assignment of error, based on alleged improper statements by the counsel in his argument to the jury, will not be considered where the language objected to is not set forth in the record.—Farrand v. Aldrich, 85 Mich. 593; Norris v. Detroit United Ry., 193 Mich. 578.

¶ 782. Error cannot be assigned upon the remarks of counsel to the jury where the record does not show any objection or exception, or what the remarks were, or that the court's attention was called to them.—Bokenfohr v. Bush, 117 Mich. 444.

¶ 783. Error assigned upon argument of counsel cannot be considered where on the trial counsel at once disclaimed having made the argument with which opposing counsel charged him, the judge said he did not hear him make it and the stenographer did not take the argument.—Grimme v. General Council of Fraternal Aid Ass'n, 167 Mich. 240.

¶ 784. Reversible error cannot be founded on improper remarks of plaintiff's counsel in a suit for negligently destroying property by fire, where the record simply discloses that defendant excepted to certain statements, and where it sets out said statements but does not show that the court's attention was called to the argument as it was being made, or that the court was asked to interrupt the same, or to make any ruling with respect thereto.—Close v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 169 Mich. 392.

¶ 785. Where the question of an excessive verdict has not been preserved for review the misconduct of counsel for plaintiff in a personal injury action in referring to the circumstances of an accident to a passenger alighting from a train, to a conversation with counsel for plaintiff in such other action as to the right of recovery and the subsequent death of the plaintiff in such other action, is not ground for reversal.—Sergeant v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 198 Mich. 385.

¶ 786. A charge of error based upon "plaintiff's seeking," in an action for alienating his wife's affections, "to show and parading before the jury that there was common and notorious neighborhood talk of defendant's relations with plaintiff's wife," cannot be considered where the record contains no evidence upon the subject.—Miller v. Lachman, 117 Mich. 68.

§ 185. Objections to instructions or refusal to charge.

Necessity and sufficiency of showing of objections, etc., see also ante § 177.
Assigning instruction as error, see post § 205.

¶ 787. A party complaining that the court charged the jury to the effect that a certain admission was made by such party on the trial should show by the record that no such admission was made.—Thompson v. Village of Quincy, 83 Mich. 173.

¶ 788. In the absence of the testimony from the record, the court has no means of knowing whether or not a charge which was conditioned upon the jury's belief as to what certain evidence tended to show, was erroneous.—Martin v. Curtis, 119 Mich. 169.

¶ 789. Objection that the charge told the jury there was no evidence on a certain issue, and that it permitted the jury to guess upon it, is not entertainable on a record that does not show what the rest of the charge was or that the objecting party made any requests to charge, and especially where it appears that there was some evidence on it. —Howe v. Morey, 141 Mich. 383.

¶ 790. Error in instructions as to the measure of damages cannot be considered in the Supreme Court where the record does not show what the judgment was, and leaves it impossible to determine the amount recovered.—MacKinnon Boiler & Machine Co. v. Central Michigan Land Co., 156 Mich. 11.

¶ 791. Where the parties in a trover suit have a stipulation with reference to damages, but the same does not appear in the record, the Supreme Court will not consider an assignment of error based on the failure of the trial court to give the correct rule of damages.—Hennes v. Charles Hebard & Sons, 169 Mich. 670.

¶ 793. Where an exception is taken to a refusal to charge that there is no evidence tending to prove a certain point, plaintiff in error, desiring to bring up for review this exception, is entitled to have incorporated into the bill of exceptions all the evidence bearing upon the point in question.—People ex rel. Crane v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 24 Mich. 513.

§ 186. Effect or sufficiency of proof or writings.

Sufficiency of showing as to fulness, see ante § 176.

¶ 794. Where a bill of exceptions does not show that any exception was taken or error assigned on the plaintiff's failure to prove a certain point, and the request made by the defendant below and the whole frame of the bill imply that the point was not contested, but either clearly proved or admitted, the Supreme Court will not consider the question if raised before it for the first time.—Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32.

¶ 795. The merits of a case cannot be considered on appeal where it is manifest that the evidence is not contained in the record.—Rumney v. Detroit & Montana Cattle Co., 129 Mich. 644.

¶ 796. The court will not, on error, construe a foreign statute unless the record shows proof below.—Belleville Sav. Bank v. Richardi, 56 Mich. 453.

¶ 797. The question whether a navigable stream has been dammed without permission of the board of supervisors will not be considered on error when the record does not show it was raised in the court below.—Nelson v. Cheboygan Nav. Co., 44 Mich. 7.

¶ 798. A purchaser's lien upon lumber for saw bills cannot be claimed to be discharged, in a replevin action, where the purchaser claims that he succeeded to the rights of a mortgagee at a defective sale, when the record does not disclose when the saw bills were paid.—Walbridge v. Barrett, 118 Mich. 433.

¶ 799. Whether a judgment was res adjudicata cannot be determined when dependent on the records and files thereof which are not put in evidence, and where the oral evidence of the prior decision leaves it doubtful whether it was on the merits.—Sherman v. Spalding, 126 Mich. 561.

¶ 800. An assignment of error in that the tax roll on which assumpsit for recovery of village taxes was brought showed on its face that the village treasurer had no authority to institute the action is not open to consideration where the tax roll is not in the return and so not before the court.—Village of Wayne v. Goldsmith, 141 Mich. 528.

¶ 801. The question of sufficiency of a tender in a justice's court is not preserved for review where the record does not show extensively the proceedings in such court, or the amount of the tender, and no request to the circuit judge on appeal to charge on the subject was made and his attention was not directed to the subject.—Gleason v. Stone, 200 Mich. 187.

¶ 802. The general objection on an appeal in proceedings to quiet title, that the sheriff's deed on foreclosure, under which complainant claims and which was not contained in the record, was incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial as evidence, will be disregarded.—Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Soule, 51 Mich. 312.

¶ 803. On chancery appeal the statement of the circuit judge contained in the record calling attention to the very high standing of one witness and the relatively poor credence of the other opposed cannot be considered in reviewing the weight to be given their testimony; it must appear by evidence in the record that their relative credibility is as stated before the Supreme Court can consider it.—Tomlinson v. Cornett, 128 Mich. 171.

¶ 804. Evidence in a chancery case which is not taken down nor returned pursuant to Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, Chap. XVII, § 5, relating to the exclusion of testimony by the trial court, and providing that the court may, in its discretion, if the excluded evidence is brief, permit the same to be taken down by the stenographer separate and apart from other testimony and to be returned to the appellate court under certificate of the trial court, on appeal, is not reviewable.—Pellston Planing Mill & Lumber Co. v. Van Wormer, 198 Mich. 648.

¶ 805. Documentary evidence submitted to the court by consent at the hearing is to be considered in the same light as evidence taken by deposition, and does not require to be authenticated by the judge for the purposes of an appeal, as does evidence taken on a trial in open court.—Stone v. Welling, 14 Mich. 514.

¶ 806. Where the determination of the legality of paving assessments depends on documents, the court will not pass upon it without full proof of the documents themselves. It will not accept the inferences and conclusions of parties or counsel, but will construe them for itself.—Wilkins v. City of Detroit, 46 Mich. 120.

¶ 807. Affidavits that are not made part of the record or inserted in the settlement of the case, cannot be considered on appeal.—Holton v. Holton, 116 Mich. 669.

§ 188. Directing or refusing to direct verdict.

Sufficiency of showing of request and refusal or action, see ante § 177.
Assigning action as error, see post § 206.

¶ 808. Where the record does not contain all the testimony an assignment of error upon the court's refusal to direct a verdict cannot be considered.—Van Werden v. Winslow, 117 Mich. 564.

¶ 809. Upon a writ of error the court will not pass upon the question of the insufficiency of the plaintiff's case so as to take the case from the jury where the record fails to show that the defendants made any such request.—County of Montmorency v. Wiltse, 125 Mich. 47.

¶ 810. Error in directing a verdict for plaintiff, as to some of the notes in suit upon which recovery was claimed to have been had, will not be reviewed where it involves questions of fact the determination of which depended upon evidence, and where the record did not show that it contained all the evidence introduced upon the trial.—Marvin v. Bowlby, 135 Mich. 640.

¶ 811. Upon appeal where the error assigned is the direction of a verdict, the bill of exceptions should incorporate at least the substance of all the testimony, since error is not presumed but must be made to affirmatively appear.—Goldsmith v. Lichtenberg, 139 Mich. 163.

§ 189. Correctness and propriety of verdict or findings.

To review refusal to find, see post § 190.
Assigning the error, see post § 207.

¶ 812. The objection that the evidence does not support the finding cannot be raised unless where a case is made for review on the whole facts.—Gray v. Howard, 12 Mich. 171.

¶ 813. Where, upon a trial by jury, judgment has been rendered under Comp. L. 1871, § 6026, How. St., § 7606, upon special findings and against the general verdict, it is necessary to incorporate the material evidence bearing upon the special findings into a bill of exceptions that the Supreme Court may be enabled to stand in the same light as the trial court, otherwise the judgment will be presumed warranted.—Gilbert v. American Ins. Co., 30 Mich. 400.

¶ 814. Where, upon a trial by jury, judgment has been rendered under Comp. L. 1871, § 6026, How. St., § 7606, against the general verdict and in accordance with special findings returned by the jury, on the ground that such findings were inconsistent with the verdict, a record that brings up only the pleadings, the verdict and findings, and the judgment, is inadequate to warrant a determination that the ruling as to such inconsistency was erroneous.—Gilbert v. American Ins. Co., 30 Mich. 400.

¶ 815. Where the evidence upon which findings are based is not given, the facts found cannot be reviewed.—Fisher v. Seventh-Day Adventist Pub. Ass'n, 85 Mich. 472; Watts v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 47 Mich. 540.

¶ 816. Where the record does not show that all of the testimony taken upon the trial was included, the findings of fact cannot be disturbed.—Hoffman v. Buschman, 95 Mich. 538.

¶ 817. The Supreme Court will not, in suits at law, look into the evidence upon which a finding of fact is based, except where the evidence has all been returned on an exception that the finding has no evidence to support it.—Scotten v. Sutter, 37 Mich. 526.

¶ 818. A party excepting to a finding must make it appear that his exception is well taken. So held where the objection was that the facts were found on parol proof duly objected to, and not on certain documents which the party bringing error did not include in the record.—Odd Fellows v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Mich. 461.

¶ 819. A court's conclusion of fact in favor of the validity of a judgment introduced in evidence cannot be reviewed if there are no facts or exceptions which would raise a doubt on the subject.—Tharp v. Allen, 46 Mich. 389.

¶ 820. Where it had been stipulated upon the trial of a case that either party might read in evidence the testimony of any witness he pleased, as such testimony had been printed for use in another designated case; but the record on error does not show what part, if any, of such testimony was read, objections that the evidence did not support the findings of the trial court cannot be considered.—Hoffman v. Estate of Pope, 74 Mich. 235.

¶ 821. A finding of no undue influence or mental incompetency alleged as grounds for setting aside a deed from grantor to his wife was not disturbed where it was not shown in the record that such grounds existed.—Trombley v. Hoffmann, 115 Mich. 14.

¶ 822. A contention that a verdict is a compromise cannot be ascertained on an appeal where the record does not contain all the evidence.—Stevenson v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 118 Mich. 651.

¶ 824. If the bill of exceptions to a case pending on a referee's report does not show all the facts material to a decision on the exceptions taken, the fact should be shown by affidavit; and it should also be shown that the referee's attention was seasonably called to the defect, or an excuse given for not doing so. Otherwise the denial by the circuit court of a motion to send back the report for correction must be held to have been proper.—Cool v. Snover, 38 Mich. 562.

¶ 825. Where no bill of exceptions is settled of the evidence before a referee, and the evidence is not returned with his report, the Supreme Court cannot ascertain whether his findings of fact are supported by any evidence or not.—Garver v. Bement, 69 Mich. 149.

§ 190. Refusal of finding.

To review grant or denial of rehearing in equity, see post § 191.

¶ 826. When the record does not show that any special finding was asked of the court and refused, judgment will not be reversed for the want of such finding.—Hooper v. Hooper, 26 Mich. 435.

¶ 827. Assignments of error upon the neglect and refusal of the circuit judge to find facts claimed to have been proved cannot be reviewed where no bill of exceptions has been settled, and where the evidence is not returned.—Baldwin v. City of Hastings, 83 Mich. 639.

¶ 828. Where a ruling of the trial court on a request after judgment to open the case and permit a request for findings to be filed, does not appear in the record, it will not be considered on appeal.—Wickes v. Pulfrey, 131 Mich. 407.

¶ 829. Where upon writ of error the brief, in which a party claims to have presented the points of law deemed material for findings in alleged compliance with Circuit Court Rule 26, is not made a part of the record, it is not before the Supreme Court for consideration.—Silfver v. Daenzer, 167 Mich. 362.

§ 191. Grant or refusal of new trial.

¶ 830. Under Pub. Acts 1893, No. 134, providing that there may be incorporated in the bill of exceptions a record of the proceedings on a motion for a new trial, including the reasons for the refusal thereof, and that exceptions may be taken and error assigned thereon, the action of a trial court cannot be reviewed in the absence from the bill of the reasons therefore and exceptions to the decision.—Stevenson v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 118 Mich. 651.

¶ 831. Certain affidavits filed in support and in opposition to a motion for a new trial which were not made part of a bill of exceptions, but extracts from which were printed in the record, held proper to be considered on appeal as part of the record where they were considered and referred to by the trial court in passing on the motion and thereby brought in.—Hampton v. Van Nest's Estate, 196 Mich. 404.

¶ 832. The refusal of the trial judge to grant a new trial will not be reviewed where the record does not show why he refused and where no request was made to him for his reasons for the denial.—Griffin v. McKnight, 116 Mich. 468.

¶ 833. The court will not review a denial of a motion for the new trial where the record does not show the reasons for such denial nor that any exceptions were taken.—Tobin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 126 Mich. 161; Mahder v. Wax, 192 Mich. 479.

¶ 834. The action of the circuit judge in refusing to grant a motion for a new trial will not be reviewed where his reasons for such refusal are not incorporated in the bill of exceptions as a part of the record of the proceedings had on said motion.—McRae v. Garth Lumber Co., 102 Mich. 488.

¶ 835. The action of a circuit judge in refusing to grant a new trial will not be reviewed on error where the record does not disclose that he was requested to give his reasons for refusing a new trial, nor that he gave such reasons, nor that any exceptions were taken.—Gillett v. Burns, 131 Mich. 616.

¶ 836. An assignment of error upon the refusal of the court to grant a new trial cannot be considered in the court of appeal, where no reasons of the trial judge for overruling the motion appear in the record.—Moerman v. Clark-Rutka-Weaver Co., 145 Mich. 540.

¶ 837. Assignments of error based upon the refusal of the trial court to grant a new trial will not be considered where the reasons for the court's refusal do not appear in the record and it does not appear that a timely request was made therefor.—Bennett v. Denton, 194 Mich. 610.

¶ 838. Where a party appealing from an order of the circuit court denying a new trial, failed to file a request to the judge for his reasons, in writing, for his decision, and where the record does not disclose such reasons, the Supreme Court will not review the trial court's ruling.—In re Bender's Estate (Appeal of Look), 159 Mich. 108.

¶ 839. A record in the Supreme Court did not indicate that defendant objected to the allowance of damages under the Survival Act, and contained no exception to any ruling upon such damages. The trial court was not requested to charge the jury that the suit was under the Death Act and not under the Survival Act. In discussing the admission of evidence at the trial, defendant apparently acquiesced in the court's statement that the suit was under the Survival Act. The plea was the general issue. The record did not show that the point was raised on a motion for a new trial. Held, defendant could not in the Supreme Court object that damages were awarded under the Survival Act on the ground that the declaration stated a case under the Death Act.—Gates v. Beebe, 170 Mich. 107.

§ 192. Grant or denial of rehearing.

¶ 840. An appeal from an order denying a rehearing will be dismissed, with costs, where the testimony before the court upon the hearing is not presented, although the application was based on the ground that the complainant was prevented by adverse circumstances from being present at the hearing in the lower court.—McDonald v. Born, 121 Mich. 595.

Assigning the error, see post § 209.

¶ 841. An objection that the circuit judge did not decide the case within 6 months after it was submitted (Comp. L. 1897, § 558) is not tenable where the record shows when testimony was taken and decision was made, but does not show when it was submitted.—Barkume v. Phelps, Brace & Co., 141 Mich. 545.

¶ 842. It is not necessary to decide whether a decree is void because the opinion was not filed within 6 months after the final submission of the case, as required by Comp. L. 1897, § 558, where after the testimony was in, time was given counsel to file briefs and it does not appear on the record that the opinion was filed more than 6 months after such briefs were filed, which would constitute the "final submission" of the case.—Hoste v. Dalton, 137 Mich. 522.

¶ 843. A judgment against an executor on an accounting must be affirmed on error if the record does not enable the court to settle equities and does not furnish sufficient material to determine accounts.—Duvernois v. Kaiser's Estate, 75 Mich. 481.

§ 194. Awards and allowances in equity.

¶ 844. A sum allowed as alimony in gross will not be reviewed on appeal, where appellant had failed to furnish the trial court the material facts for determining a just award.—Ferguson v. Ferguson, 145 Mich. 290.

§ 195. Accountings and references.

Remission of record for further showing, see ante ¶ 541.

Assigning error in reference, see post § 208.

¶ 845. The record on appeal in a suit for an accounting should show what items were allowed and what disallowed, with exceptions pointing out the disputed items and the rulings of the court thereon. Either party may ask the court to follow this practice, and failure to do so may reasonably be treated as a waiver of the right to raise such questions by appeal.—Loveland v. Peter, 108 Mich. 154.

¶ 846. Complainant, a contractual vendee of land, brought a bill to enjoin an ejectment suit, and for specific performance. The circuit court ordered a reference to a commissioner to determine how much complainant owed on the contract, to which order defendant did not consent. Such reference was unnecessary, as the computation was simple. From a decree for complainant, defendant appealed, without including in his record any account of the proceedings before the commissioner, and complainant on this ground moved to dismiss the appeal. Held, since the reference to the commissioner was unnecessary, the record was sufficiently complete, and the motion should be denied.—Lafrance v. Griffin, 160 Mich. 236.

Contents and substance, see ante § 105.

Dismissal for defects, see ante § 163.

Sufficiency of settlement, see ante § 110 et seq.

Presumptions as to contents and correctness, see post §§ 345-349.

¶ 847. The Supreme Court cannot review a case made after judgment where no exceptions appear on the record.—Wilkinson v. Earl, 39 Mich. 626.

¶ 848. Questions to be raised on case made must be distinctly presented in the record.—Probasco v. Cook, 39 Mich. 714.

¶ 849. No question for review arises upon a record brought up as a case made, and containing only a statement of the facts found by the court and the judgment thereon.—Hedges v. Hibbard, 46 Mich. 551.

¶ 850. A mere recital showing the facts of a case at law, the nature of the judgment, and the fact that a party excepted to it, presents no question for the Supreme Court, if there are no findings and the judgment is good in form.—Chatterton v. Parrott, 46 Mich. 432.

¶ 851. Where the record in ejectment shows no finding of facts or exceptions to the rulings of the judge, but merely recites that the parties proved certain things and that the judge decided for plaintiff, and rendered judgment in his favor that he recover of defendant the possession of the premises, there is no case made for review.—Wertin v. Crocker, 47 Mich. 642.

¶ 852. Where a case is made after judgment for review by the Supreme Court upon the whole facts, it should embody all the evidence given at the trial.—King v. Moore, 10 Mich. 538; Gray v. Howard, 12 Mich. 171.

C. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY OF ASSIGNMENTS.

§ 197. Objections and exceptions as basis for assignments.

That there must be objection and exception in order to save the question for review, see Saving Questions for Review.

Sufficiency of bill or case to sustain assignments, see ante XI, B.

Want of basis for assignments as reason for denying further time to file return, see ante § 129.

Assignment on exception on findings, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 12587.

Assignment without exception on rulings and charge to jury, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, § 60; Comp. L. 1915, § 12632; and see also Comp. L. 1915, § 14576.

Assignments of error where no bill of exceptions is settled, see Sup. Ct. Rule 11.

¶ 853. Rulings not excepted to cannot be assigned for error, and assignments thereon cannot be noticed.—Lee v. Hardgrave, 3 Mich. 77; Hill v. Robinson, 23 Mich. 24; Roberts v. Fitzgerald, 33 Mich. 4; Snyder v. Willey, 33 Mich. 483; Hall v. People, 39 Mich. 717; Larkin v. Mitchell & Rowland Lumber Co., 42 Mich. 296; Manistee Township School Dist. No. 1 v. Cook, 47 Mich. 112; Prescott v. Patterson, 49 Mich. 622; Barton v. Gray, 57 Mich. 622; Cotherman v. Cotherman, 58 Mich. 465; People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277; Banks v. Cramer, 109 Mich. 168.

¶ 854. No notice will be taken of an assignment of error that is too general to connect it with any exception.—Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Walker, 41 Mich. 239.

¶ 855. The propriety of Laws 1885, Act No. 101, authorizing assignments of error upon the charge of the court without exceptions taken, doubted, and the unfortunate working of the statute pointed out.—Just v. Porter, 64 Mich. 565.

¶ 856. Laws 1885, Act No. 101, permitting assignment of errors to a charge without exceptions thereon, applies to cases pending when it took effect as well as to those begun afterwards.—Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 64 Mich. 631.

¶ 857. Error may be assigned upon the record without exceptions, where the only question is whether the facts found support the judgment, the finding being treated in such cases as a special verdict.—Trudo v. Anderson, 10 Mich. 357; Peck v. City Nat. Bank of Grand Rapids, 51 Mich. 353; and see Amboy, L. & T. R. R. Co. v. Byerly, 13 Mich. 439.

¶ 858. An assignment of error in allowing a hypothetical question is untenable where it sets out a departure from the evidence differing from the objection made on the trial and neither the one nor the other is borne out by the record.—Boehm v. City of Detroit, 141 Mich. 277.

¶ 859. Unless a ruling is required of, or made by the court, an assignment of error based upon an exception to improper argument by counsel will not be entertained.—Gungrich v. Anderson, 189 Mich. 144.

§ 198. Findings as basis.

On findings without exceptions, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 12587.

¶ 860. A general assignment of error that the facts found do not support the judgment may be based upon the record, without any bill of exceptions.—Hubbard v. Garner, 115 Mich. 406.

¶ 861. Where the party moving for a new trial has filed a request that in case the motion is denied the court file in writing its reasons for denying the same, and findings are not filed by the court, and exception to the denial of the motion has been duly filed, error may be assigned upon such refusal, regardless of the absence of such findings.—Clark v. Onaway-Alpena Tel. Co., 196 Mich. 168.

§ 199. Sufficiency of assignments in general.

Number of assignments, see ante § 120.

Making the assignments, see ante VI, E.

Pointing out and connecting matters in record bearing on question, see post §§ 211-213.
Separate party assigning, see post § 209, ¶ 917.
Amendments and additional assignments, see ante § 124.
Dismissal for want of sufficient assignments, see ante § 158.
Striking cause for want of proper assignments, see ante § 165.
Costs for excessive or irregular assignments, see Costs, V.

¶ 862. Assignments of error should clearly raise the questions of law to be considered. —Finch v. Karste, 97 Mich. 20.

¶ 863. An assignment of error in trespass that the court erred in finding certain tax-deeds void does not entitle plaintiff in error to a review of the facts where such was a conclusion of law excepted to as matter of law.—Hecock v. Van Dusen, 96 Mich. 573.

§ 200. Specification of error relied on.

Particular errors and sufficiency of the assignment, see post § 202 et seq.
Statement of errors in brief, see post § 232.
Dismissal of case made for want of statement of errors, see ante § 163.
Assigning and specifying errors, see 1916 C. C. Rule 66, § 5.

¶ 864. Assignments of error must be specific.—Polhemus v. Ann Arbor Savings Bank, 27 Mich. 44; Burt v. Olcott, 33 Mich. 178; Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 Mich. 292; Webber v. Billings, 184 Mich. 119.

¶ 865. Under Circuit Court Rule 47, an appellant is required to make a detailed assignment upon all of the alleged errors upon which he proposes to rely, and the Supreme Court will ordinarily not consider assignments not made in conformity with this rule. —People v. Lewis, 166 Mich. 513.

¶ 866. An assignment of error is not sufficiently specific if the error relied on is not singled out by the assignment or by the exception on which it rests.—Baylis v. Stout, 49 Mich. 215.

¶ 867. Assignments of error are not open to the objection that the errors are not specifically assigned where the ground of error is fairly indicated, though not precisely stated. —Genrow v. Modern Woodmen of America, 151 Mich. 250.

¶ 868. An assignment of error which embraces several subjects is too general to warrant a review.—Greenleaf v. Lambert, 192 Mich. 411.

§ 201. ——In cases heard by circuit on appeal or certiorari.

¶ 869. Where error is brought to review a judgment rendered upon certiorari to a justice, an assignment of errors in referring to the errors stated in the affidavit for certiorari makes such errors a part of the assignment. —Berry v. Lowe, 10 Mich. 9.

¶ 870. Where error is brought in the Supreme Court upon a judgment in the circuit, in a case brought there by certiorari to a justice of the peace, an assignment of errors that "the circuit judge erred in holding that the justice's judgment was erroneous in the several causes of error assigned in the affidavit for certiorari" is a sufficient special assignment.—Berry v. Lowe, 10 Mich. 9.

¶ 871. No assignments of error other than those contained in the affidavit for certiorari are essential in certiorari cases removed to the Supreme Court by writ of error.—Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Campbell, 47 Mich. 265; overruling Burnham v. Van Gelder, 32 Mich. 490.

¶ 872. Where a justice's rulings have been objected to, but his judgment affirmed at the circuit, it is enough to assign the rendition of judgment as error; if the rulings were all passed on, the enumeration of them is surplusage, as a review of the judgment must bring them under examination.—Conley v. Winsor, 41 Mich. 253.

¶ 873. Where a justice certifies that his return to a certiorari contains all the testimony, the question whether any substantial part of the cause of action is unsupported by proof is sufficiently raised by assigning error on the affirmance of the judgment.—Chicago & C. S. R. Co. v. Peters, 45 Mich. 636.

¶ 874. Where a justice's judgment in a case tried without a jury had been reversed on certiorari and there were no findings of law, the only assignments of error that were considered were general, viz.: that the court had erred in sustaining the writ of certiorari and in giving judgment against the surety for costs.—Boatz v. Berg, 51 Mich. 8.

¶ 875. Under an assignment of error that the circuit court on certiorari erred in affirming the judgment rendered in justice's court, the only question which the Supreme Court can consider is whether the justice had jurisdiction to render the judgment he did.—Village of Vicksburg v. Briggs, 85 Mich. 502.

¶ 876. On error from the affirmance of a justice's judgment on certiorari the plaintiff cannot assign errors not alleged in the affidavit for certiorari.—Lee v. Hardgrave, 3 Mich. 77.

¶ 877. On error from a judgment for defendant in a certiorari to review drain proceedings, an assignment that the court erred in not granting plaintiff's motion for an amended return is too general, where no record is shown to be omitted from the return, and there is no reference to a particular amendment which should have been allowed.—Lickly v. Bishopp, 150 Mich. 256.

§ 202. Disqualification of judge or jurors.

¶ 878. Where it is assigned as error that the circuit judge entered the various judgments and heard and determined motions to vacate the same when he was disqualified by relationship with one of the parties, affidavits as to such relationship being offered, such an assignment of error is sufficient in form to raise the question of the disqualification of the judge, and the consequent invalidity of the judgments.—Bliss v. Caille Bros. Co., 149 Mich. 601.

§ 203. Rulings on the pleadings.

§ 204. Rulings on admission or exclusion of evidence.

Sufficiency of the record, see ante §§ 182, 183.

¶ 880. An assignment of error that "the court erred in admitting improper evidence to go to the jury on the part of the plaintiff" does not comply with the rules and will not be considered.—O'Neil v. Newman, 132 Mich. 489.

¶ 881. Where in a cause tried by the court the plaintiff on appeal assigns errors in admitting testimony without pointing out how the testimony resulted in his injury, he cannot secure a reversal for such alleged errors.—Markey v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins Co., 164 Mich. 350.

¶ 882. An assignment of error to admission of evidence that a street car at the time of an accident was running faster than other cars, does not cover an objection to testimony to the effect that the car was stopping as it did on other days.—Purulewski v. Detroit United Ry., 181 Mich. 133.

§ 205. Instructions and disposal of requests.

By assigning ruling on new trial motion, see post § 216.

Exclusion of objection by assigning insufficiency of verdict, see post ¶ 942.

Sufficiency of the bill or case, see ante § 185.

Identifying the instruction by reference to the record, see post §§ 211-213.

¶ 883. Where several exceptions were taken to the charge of the court, an assignment that the judge "gave the several instructions to the jury asked by the defendant, and refused to give the several instructions, or any or either of them, asked for by the plaintiffs," is sufficiently special, and the words "several instructions" must be rendered distributively, and as applying to each.—Niles v. Rhodes, 7 Mich. 374.

¶ 884. An assignment of error for refusal to give each and every one of defendant's requests is sufficiently specific.—People v. DeFore, 64 Mich. 693.

¶ 885. Assignments of error should clearly raise the questions of law to be considered, and it is objectionable to allege errors upon the charge, sentence by sentence, consecutively, and including nearly all of the charge itself.—Finch v. Karste, 97 Mich. 20.

¶ 886. Where the refusal to give a request to charge is justified, but the court, in connection with such refusal, instructs the jury that a certain fact exists which is not shown by the evidence, and error is assigned only upon the refusal to give the request, the erroneous instruction, though prejudicial, does not afford a basis for relief.—Schmittdiel v. Moore, 101 Mich. 590.

¶ 887. The charge cannot be regarded as erroneous in that it ignored objector's theory of the case, where the error, if any, laid in refusing two out of nine requests, and such refusal was not specifically assigned as error, but the assignment was for error in giving instructions.—Totten v. Burhans, 103 Mich. 6.

¶ 888. In an action by a servant for personal injuries sustained by the operation of a dredge, where there were specific requests to charge that under neither count of the declaration could a recovery be had and exceptions to the refusal to so charge were made, and error specifically assigned upon such refusal and, on refusal to charge the fellow servant rule, this is sufficient to permit the Supreme Court to consider the question of the application of the fellow servant rule.—Hartnett v. Owosso Sugar Co., 147 Mich. 650.

¶ 890. The failure of the trial court to leave to the jury the question whether defenses had been waived, will not be considered by the Supreme Court where the alleged error in so doing is assigned only in general terms.—O'Toole v. Ohio German Fire Ins. Co., 159 Mich. 187.

¶ 891. Where error is claimed in mere general terms for the trial court's failure to give a number of requested instructions, without specifying the particulars in which such failure constitutes error, the assignment will not be considered on appeal.—Duff v. Judson, 160 Mich. 386.

¶ 892. Claimed errors in instruction and remarks of the trial court not specifically pointed out will not be considered on appeal.—Detroit United Ry. v. City of Pontiac, 193 Mich. 466.

¶ 893. Where the charge of the court on the measure of damages fills two printed pages, a general assignment of error thereupon is too broad.—Plumb v. Hecla Co., 157 Mich. 562.

See also post §§ 215, 216.
Sufficiency of bill or case, see ante § 188.

¶ 894. An assignment of error that the court "erred in directing the jury to find a verdict in favor of the defendant" is too general.—Johnson v. Ballou, 25 Mich. 460.

¶ 895. Under (former) Sup. Ct. Rule 12, requiring assignments of error to be special, an assignment that the court erred in refusing to direct a verdict for defendant is too general to be considered.—Alberts v. Village of Vernon, 96 Mich. 549.

¶ 896. Where, on a trial of a suit upon a promissory note, the defense is confined to a denial of the execution of the note and of a consideration therefor, defendant cannot interpose, under an assignment that the court erred in refusing a general request to direct a verdict in his favor, the defense that plaintiff failed to comply with an accompanying agreement that payment should not be compelled during the lifetime of the maker, unless he failed on demand to secure such payment.—Shattuck v. Hart, 98 Mich. 557.

¶ 897. An assignment of error "that the court erred in directing a verdict for the defendant" is not too general to preclude its consideration (former Sup. Ct. Rule 12), where it is apparent from the record that the error relied on is that there were facts in the case upon which a jury might find plaintiff entitled to recover.—Conely v. Dudley, 111 Mich. 122.

¶ 898. Under 1897 C. C. Rule 47 and Sup. Ct. Rule 11, assignments of error that the court erred in directing a verdict for plaintiff and in not directing a verdict for the defendant, are not sufficiently specific.—Jackson Bridge & Iron Co. v. Lancashire Ins. Co., 122 Mich. 433.

¶ 899. Where a claim for an annuity had been presented to an estate and disallowed and there were but two questions litigated, that the statute of limitations had run against the claim, and that if allowable no interest could be included, an assignment of error that the court had erred in directing a verdict for the plaintiff is sufficiently specific and complies with the rule as to necessity of specifically assigning particular error.—Stringer v. Stevens' Estate, 146 Mich. 181.

¶ 900. An assignment of error in that "the court erred in directing a verdict in favor of the said defendant of no cause of action," is not too general to be considered, where no one has been misled, and the case has been throughly briefed on both sides, and where the court and counsel both understood that the question was whether, upon the testimony offered by plaintiff, the case should be submitted to the jury.—Wolfe v. Stack, 153 Mich. 445.

¶ 901. An assignment that the court erred in refusing to direct a verdict for defendant is not sufficiently specific to require consideration by the Supreme Court.—Canerdy v. Port Huron, St. C. & M. C. Ry. Co., 156 Mich. 211.

¶ 902. An assignment of error, "for that the court erred in not directing a verdict for the defendant," is too general to require consideration on appeal.—Gold v. Detroit United Ry., 169 Mich. 178.

¶ 904. An assignment of error that defendant in the circuit court was not allowed an opportunity of defending upon the merits was held frivolous where the record showed the court permitted defendant to offer his defense, and he declined, and he had asked no continuance, but announced himself ready for trial, and after plaintiff rested stated he had nothing further to offer.—Bitzer v. Wagar, 83 Mich. 223.

§207. Improper verdict or findings.
Sufficiency of bill or case, see ante §§ 189, 190.

¶ 905. The assignment of error that there is no evidence to support the finding covers the whole group of facts found, and is too broad where the finding contains some unquestioned facts.—Behler v. Drury, 51 Mich. 111.

¶ 906. Assignments of error that the verdict was not warranted by the evidence, that the judgment was not warranted by the evidence, that the court erred in rendering judgment are insufficient and will not be considered.—Bills v. A. W. Stevens Co., 146 Mich. 515.

¶ 907. An assignment of error upon the finding that judgment should be entered for plaintiff is sufficient as an assignment that the findings do not support the judgment. —White v. Schaberg, 131 Mich. 319.

¶ 908. An assignment of error that the verdict is contrary to the evidence does not raise the question that it is contrary to the overwhelming weight thereof.—Eberts v. Mt. Clemens Sugar Co., 182 Mich. 449.

¶ 909. An assignment of error that there is no evidence in the case to support a verdict for plaintiff is definite.—Sandstrom v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 198 Mich. 99.

¶ 910. Nothing is presented for review by assignments of error which do not allege either that the findings of fact are not supported by testimony, or that the facts found do not sustain the conclusions of law.—Niagara Sprayer Co. v. Wood, 186 Mich. 303.

¶ 911. Assignments of error as presented and construed by counsel for the appellant, held not to raise the question whether the finding of the trial court was supported by the evidence.—In re Hoffman's Estate, 183 Mich. 67.

¶ 912. Where a court has tried a cause without a jury and has filed a special finding under the rule, an assignment of error that there was no evidence of a fact found does not raise any question that the Supreme Court can consider on error where it is tantamount to urging that the facts require a contrary judgment to that rendered on the general evidence.—Peabody v. McAvoy, 23 Mich. 526.

§ 208. Proceedings and judgment on reference.

Question presented by exception to referee's report, see post ¶ 1377.

¶ 913. A general assignment of error in rendering judgment upon a referee's report will not sustain the objection that the report was bad for want of specific findings. —Berwick v. Fletcher, 39 Mich. 25.

¶ 914. Where a cause was tried before a referee and several exceptions taken, and the circuit court refused to set aside the referee's report, and rendered judgment thereon, an assignment of error that "the court overruled the motion of the counsel for the plaintiff to set aside the report of the referee and confirmed the same," was held too general.—Altman v. Wheeler, 18 Mich. 240.

Assigning refusal to give judgment non obstante, see also post ¶ 946.

¶ 915. An assignment that judgment should have been for the plaintiff in error is too general to be noticed by the court.—Webster v. Fisk, 9 Mich. 250; Altman v. Wheeler, 18 Mich. 240; Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Walker, 41 Mich. 239.

¶ 916. An assignment that the "court erred in rendering judgment for the defendants" is general and bad under (former) Sup. Ct. Rule 12.—Hecock v. Van Dusen, 96 Mich. 573.

¶ 917. An error concerning but one of two defendants in a joint judgment in tort cannot be reached by a general assignment that the finding does not support the judgment, for if the judgment is good against either of the defendants, the error touching the other must be specifically pointed out.—Continental Improvement Co. v. Ives, 30 Mich. 448.

¶ 918. Where the only allegation of error is that the facts do not support the judgment, the Supreme Court will not entertain the objection that there is no regular finding.—Fletcher v. Moore, 42 Mich. 577.

¶ 919. An assignment of error held sufficient to present the question whether a judgment was supported by the stipulated facts on which it was rendered.—Kooman v. DeJonge, 186 Mich. 292.

§ 210. Showing connection and context of matter.

¶ 920. It is bad practice to assign error in parts of a charge designated by quotation marks without at least indicating typographically that there is an omission of the connective matter, and it is better to show what the connection was.—Bettys v. Township of Denver, 115 Mich. 228.

§ 211. Setting out or identifying matter objected to.

Indexing the assignments in the record and briefs, see ante § 174, post §§ 231, 232.

¶ 921. An assignment of errors in the following form, "the court erred in overruling the objection of defendant's counsel numbered one on the margin of the record," is insufficient.—Carby v. Combs, 166 Mich. 347.

§ 212. ——Describing instructions by numbers or pages.

See also post ¶ 1026.

¶ 922. An assignment of error on the refusal to grant certain requests for instructions as designated by numbers is insufficient, if meant to be taken distributively, and is immaterial if the substance of the requests is given in the charge.—People v. Sweeney, 55 Mich. 586.

¶ 923. An assignment "that the circuit judge erred in charging the jury and in giving the requests for plaintiff found on pages 134-140 of record," cannot be considered, where the pages cited contain many statements by the court in which the law is correctly stated, whatever may be said of the rest.—Wanner v. Mears, 102 Mich. 554.

¶ 924. Where the charges given by the court appear in the record in paragraphs numbered consecutively, error on such charges may be assigned by referring to them by number instead of repeating their language.—In re McMaster's Estate, 163 Mich. 210; Cooper v. Harlow, Id.

¶ 925. Where requests to charge are numbered in the record, an appellant may assign as error the failure to give such requested charges by referring to them by number instead of repeating their language. —In re McMaster's Estate, 163 Mich. 210; Cooper v. Harlow, Id.

§ 213. ——Instructions described as a whole.

¶ 926. It is not proper practice to assign error "upon the charge as a whole."—Snyder v. Patton & Gibson Co., 143 Mich. 350.

¶ 927. An assignment of error which points to the whole of a charge composed of distinct propositions is too general to be considered—Tupper v. Kilduff, 26 Mich. 394.

¶ 928. An assignment that "the charge of the court, on his own motion, as a whole, was error," was held too general.—People v. DeVore, 64 Mich. 693.

¶ 929. An assignment of error "that there was manifest error in the charge of said court as given to said jury" is not sufficiently specific, where the whole charge is not set forth in the record.—Green v. Brookins, 23 Mich. 48.

¶ 930. An assignment of error that "the court erred in charging the jury upon its own motion as a whole, its entire tenor and effect being prejudicial to the rights of the plaintiff" without pointing out in what respect the charge is erroneous will not be considered.—Thompson v. Citizens' St. Ry. Co., 125 Mich. 249.

¶ 931. An assignment of error setting out the charge of the court at length is not sufficiently specific in alleging error in charging the jury, where said charge contains conclusions of fact as well as of law.—Weston v. Dunn, 168 Mich. 563.

¶ 932. An assignment of error directed to an entire charge, held too general, where the instruction was correct in many respects.—Brown v. Mitts, 187 Mich. 469.

¶ 933. An assignment of error predicated upon defendant's general exception to the whole charge of the trial court is too general to reach a specific objection that an instruction in said charge, relating to the duty of defendant's motorman with reference to sounding the gong, was erroneous.—Nissly v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 676.

¶ 934. An assignment of error stating that "the court erred in his charge to the jury," is to indefinite to require consideration.—Van Leuvan v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 167 Mich. 355.

¶ 935. Assignments of error upon instructions claimed to have been argumentative, and to have laid too much stress upon, given undue prominence to and emphasizing rules of law, issues, claims and testimony favorable to the opposite party, held too general to be considered where a consideration of the subject would necessitate going through the entire charge and picking out sentence by sentence matters to which the attention of the court was not directed.—Kaaro v. Ahmeek Mining Co., 178 Mich. 661.

¶ 936. Assignment that "the court erred in his charge to the jury and did not leave to the jury to decide, if it was a question for the jury, the vital issues in this case," held too indefinite.—Springer v. Fuller, 19 Mich. 628.

¶ 937. Where a charge of the court includes a number of requests, most of which are correctly given, an assignment of error upon the whole charge is too general.—Pratt v. Burhans, 84 Mich. 487.

§ 214. Construction of assignments.

Of joint and several assignments, see post § 217.

Conflict between record and assignment of error, see post § 341.

¶ 938. An ambiguous assignment of error should be construed most favorably for the party against whom it is made.—Browne v. Moore, 32 Mich. 254.

¶ 939. A general assignment of error that the findings of fact "do not support the findings and conclusions of law" will be treated on review as alleging that the facts do not support the judgment.—Union Tel. Co. v. Ingersoll, 178 Mich. 187.

§ 215. Scope of assignments; errors covered.

Restriction of review to the errors assigned, see post § 311.

¶ 940. An exception to a charge may be supported in the Supreme Court by the assignment of any reasons which the record will justify, whether they were stated in the court below or not.—Vanneter v. Crossman, 39 Mich. 610.

¶ 941. Where the correctness of the ruling of the court in directing a verdict depends entirely upon the correctness of prior rulings admitting certain evidence, error should be assigned upon such earlier rulings as well as upon such direction.—McCammon v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 103 Mich. 104.

¶ 942. Where a plaintiff securing a verdict brings error on the ground of the insufficiency thereof, he cannot base anything on the failure of the trial court properly to state the rule as to preponderance of evidence.—Mills v. Warner, 167 Mich. 619.

¶ 216. ——Direction of verdict or refusal of new trial.

Assignment of previous errors as well as direction, see also ante ¶ 941.

¶ 943. An assignment of error that a certain charge having been given at defendant's request, the jury should have found a verdict for defendant, cannot be made the basis of an argument that the charge so given was inconsistent with other portions of the charge.—Plumb v. Hecla Co., 157 Mich. 562.

¶ 944. An assignment of error that the court erred in overruling a motion for a new trial based on the failure to charge a jury as requested by the defendant in its several requests, is too general, where some of the instructions requested were actually given, and others were improper.—Eberts v. Mt. Clemens Sugar Co., 182 Mich. 449.

¶ 945. Where at the close of the plaintiff's case, the defendant's motion for a directed verdict, because of the insufficiency of the evidence, was denied with leave to renew at the close of the case, which was done without any reason for the motion being then given, an assignment of error that the court erred in refusing to direct a verdict as requested by the defendant at the close of the case, refers to the reasons stated as the basis for the first motion.—Nelson v. Michigan Tanning & Extract Co., 184 Mich. 108.

¶ 946. Where defendant fails to assign error on the refusal of the court to enter judgment for him non obstante veredicto, he cannot raise the point on appeal, by reason of the fact that he assigned errors involving the same theory on other separate and distinct matters.—Beauerle v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 152 Mich. 345.

General assignment by one party to judgment good against coparty, see ante ¶ 917.

Separate consideration of separate questions comprised in assignments, see post § 271.

¶ 947. In an action of tort where several defendants unite in bringing a writ of error, and assign errors jointly, the assignment will be considered joint and several, or joint or several, as the nature of the errors assigned and the interest of the respective parties require.—Fisher v. Thirkell, 21 Mich. 1.

D. ERRORS PRESENTED; WHO MAY URGE ERROR.

Right dependent on relation of the party objecting as appellant or appellee, see post §§ 219-223.

Waiver or estoppel cutting off right, see post §§ 225-230.

Who may notice cause for hearing, see ante § 133.

Sufficiency of the record or bill of exceptions to present error and the accompanying matter essential to its review, see ante XI, A, B.

Sufficiency of the assignments to present the error, see ante XI, C.

The doctrine that the review will not be extended beyond those questions presented by the appeal or writ and necessary to dispose of it is treated post XII, B.

One cannot complain of an error that has been favorable to him or that has not prejudiced him or has been prejudicial, if at all, to another party not united in interest, nor which though prejudicial in the beginning has been cured by something else in the course of the trial or by the verdict or the judgment. These general principles, sometimes phrased in the form of a statement that the appellant cannot complain of them, are really the doctrine of Harmless Error, and are treated in that topic.

¶ 948. An objection that the verdict in an action for slander failed to specify the amount awarded for damages to feelings separately from the amount awarded for damages, as required by Pub. Acts 1895, No. 216, § 2, comes too late, where the case was pending when the act went into effect, and the point is raised for the first time in a supplemental brief.—Hewitt v. Morley, 111 Mich. 187.

§ 219. Nonappealing parties.

Where objector is not united in appeal or interest with appellant, see post §§ 222, 223.

Declination of questions affecting nonappellants, see post §§ 265, 315.

Denial of relief by modification to nonappellants, see post § 520.

¶ 949. The Supreme Court usually does not consider alleged errors made against a nonappealing party.—Bowsher v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 174 Mich. 339.

¶ 950. The Supreme Court, on appeal will not consider contentions by a party made in the trial court which were overruled, where objector did not appeal.—Lowe v. Schuyler, 187 Mich. 526.

¶ 951. A defendant as to whom the bill has been dismissed cannot, where he has not appealed, raise on appeal the question of costs on the dismissal.—Macomb v. Prentis, 78 Mich. 255.

¶ 952. Where a respondent in proceedings on the auditor-general's petition to collect delinquent taxes has not appealed, his claim that his tender before the hearing of the amount which the court found to be due should have prevented a decree against him cannot be considered.—Aplin, Auditor-General v. Baker, 84 Mich. 113.

¶ 953. Complaints that an instruction below was erroneous, raised in the brief of counsel for a party who has not brought or assigned error cannot be considered.—Smith v. Detroit Loan & Building Ass'n, 115 Mich. 340.

¶ 954. Where a fact does not affect the issue it does not concern appellants. So held where, pending suit, one of the appellees had reconveyed to another his interest in the subject-matter of the suit.—Hill v. Mitchell, 40 Mich. 389.

¶ 955. Defendants in a bill in aid of execution who have not appealed from a decree, entered after a hearing on the merits, cannot on an appeal by the complainant, claim for the first time that the proceeding was not brought in time under Comp. L. 1897, § 9167, and that it should have been dismissed.—Cleland v. Clark, 123 Mich. 179.

¶ 956. On appeal from a decree for an accounting, objections urged by a nonappellant cannot be considered.—Bundy v. Youmans, 44 Mich. 376; Sweeney v. Neely, 53 Mich. 421.

¶ 957. Complainant in an action for an accounting between partners, who has not appealed, will not be heard to ask for an increase of the amount allowed him by the decree.—Snyder v. O'Beirne, 132 Mich. 340.

¶ 958. An interest account cannot be scrutinized on appeal to see if the party who has not appealed has not paid more than was due.—Voigt v. Beller, 56 Mich. 140.

¶ 959. An appellee on appeal from allowance of a claim against an estate, it alone appealing, cannot assign error in disallowing an item of the claim.—Wilkinson v. Estate of Baxter, 97 Mich. 536.

¶ 960. A garnishee defendant who does not appeal from the judgment of the trial court finding that he has in his possession a certain sum for which he is liable cannot complain of such judgment on appeal.—American Steel & Wire Co. v. Dedrick, 196 Mich. 731.

§ 220. ——Right to urge matter making error harmless.

Offsetting rights of nonappellants against changes in appellant's favor, see post § 521.

¶ 961. The defendant in error is in no position to dispute a finding of the court below and claim that the error therein rendered the other errors immaterial.—Scotten v. Sutter, 37 Mich 526.

§ 221. Urging one's own error to sustain result.

Right of appellee to urge harmlessness, see ante § 220.

Urging that nominal damages only could have been allowed, and hence that judgment for defendant should be sustained, see post § 481, ¶ 2140.

¶ 962. Plaintiff will not be heard on appeal to urge that certain testimony used to obtain the verdict in his favor, should be disregarded as hearsay and also because the witness was disqualified, in order to sustain the verdict.—Card v. Fowler, 120 Mich. 646.

§ 222. Errors affecting opposite party.

Consideration of point to prevent reversal, see post § 316.

¶ 963. Where complainant appeals from a decree, and is denied additional relief, the relief granted him will not be examined if defendant did not appeal.—Tapert v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 50 Mich. 267.

¶ 964. As a general rule errors claimed to have been committed against the appellee will not be considered.—Eames v. Barber, 193 Mich. 1.

¶ 965. On writ of error questions not decided adversely to complainant by the trial court will not be considered.—Wolverton v. Village of Saranac, 171 Mich. 419.

¶ 966. Questions decided adversely to one who does not appeal from a decree against him, will not be reviewed on the appeal of the opposite party.—Beach v. Rice, 186 Mich. 95.

¶ 967. Where a case rests upon several grounds, some of which are negatived by the charge or by waiver, and the party presenting them nevertheless recovers, it is unnecessary to consider them in reviewing the case at the instance of the other party. —De Mill v. Moffat, 49 Mich. 125.

¶ 968. A foreclosure complainant cannot, on an appeal by a defendant, where he himself has not appealed, raise the question that the decree erroneously gives a lien of certain nonappealing defendants priority over his own mortgage.—Tomlinson v. Gates, 5 Mich. 49.

¶ 970. A decree for complainant, whose mortgage was declared void, adjudging instead a lien on the dower interest of one of defendants whose dower right it was intended to extinguish with the money realized from the mortgage, cannot be complained of because of the fact that part and not all of the dower interest was to be applied to the lien, where complainant has taken no appeal from the decree, the appeal being by the defendants.—Campbell v. Smith, 103 Mich. 427.

¶ 971. On an appeal by a wife from a decree for her separate maintenance, her solicitor will not be heard to complain that her former solicitor was decreed an excessive amount since the amount allowed concerned defendant alone who did not appeal. —Wagner v. Wagner, 132 Mich. 343.

§ 223. Errors separately affecting coparty.

Errors affecting party opposed in interest but involving party on same side with appellant, see ante § 222.

Joint and several assignments of error, see ante § 217.

Separation by assignment of error, see ante §§ 200, 209, ¶ 917.

¶ 972. An appellant cannot be heard to urge as a ground for reversing the decree the equities of codefendants who have not joined in the appeal.—Abbott v. Alsdorf, 19 Mich. 157; Oliver v. Shoemaker, 35 Mich. 464.

¶ 973. If only one of several joint parties appeals, only such questions as affect his interests can be considered on the appeal. —English v. Carney, 25 Mich. 178.

¶ 974. Where defendants to a bill in equity file different answers and only one appeals, a point made only in the answer of a nonappellant is not at issue in the appellate court.—Fairbairn v. Middlemiss, 47 Mich. 372.

¶ 975. A joint defendant solely served who stipulates for taking a deposition cannot assign as error the rejection of the deposition at the instance of the other defendant, who afterwards appeared.—French v. Canada Southern R. Co., 42 Mich. 64.

¶ 976. In a suit by a mortgagee of an undivided half interest of timber land to enjoin the co-owner from cutting timber, a codefendant cannot raise the question of the validity of the mortgage taken pro confesso as executed by a corporation defendant to secure the debt of an individual.— Collins v. Rea, 127 Mich. 273.

¶ 977. In an action against a railroad company and the Pullman Company for the death of a passenger by being thrown through the door of a vestibule between sleepers, the railroad company was not interested in the question of error in directing a verdict for the Pullman Company, as the verdict and judgment were not conclusive of the liability of the Pullman Company to the railroad company under the contract between them as to the use of sleepers.—Robinson v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 135 Mich. 254.

¶ 978. Assignments of error as to which the plaintiff in error is not concerned but which relate to a defendant against whom no judgment was taken, and who does not occupy the position of plaintiff in error will not be considered.—Bickle v. Jameson, 146 Mich. 483.

¶ 979. Claims of fraud, duress, and usury in the execution of instruments can be set up only by the party injured, are not assignable, and cannot be taken advantage of on appeal, by others than the injured party. —Schmidt v. Gaukler, 156 Mich. 243.

§ 224. Errors affecting infant or insane parties.

Duty of court to consider question on its own motion, see post § 258.
Decision of questions injurious to infants though not saved or presented on appeal, see post § 314.
Waiver as affecting error injurious to infant, see post § 225.

¶ 980. Courts are bound to consider the interests of infant legatees on an appeal from a construction of the will whether the infants have appealed or not.—Toms v. Williams, 41 Mich. 552.

§ 225. Waiver of error; stipulations.

Waiver of right to bring error or to appeal, see ante § 63.
Elimination of questions for review by concessions or stipulations, see post § 266.
Waiver of error in instructions by assigning error in inadequate verdict, see ante ¶ 942.
Assigning failure to follow charge as waiver of error in such charge, see ante ¶ 943.
Estoppel to urge error when based on the invitation, inaction or inconsistent action of the objector in the court below with respect to the error or ruling in question is really a phase of the doctrine that the error must be properly objected to in order to save it for review. The waiver of error by having chosen an inconsistent course of action below is also a phase of that doctrine. See full treatment in Saving Questions for Review.

¶ 981. Errors in an order that affect prejudicially the rights of infants, or that go to the jurisdiction of the court to make any such order, cannot be waived by consent.—Smith v. Smith, 13 Mich. 258.

¶ 982. Error lies to review a judgment of the circuit on appeal from a justice, claimed to have acquired no jurisdiction, though the plaintiff in error appeared specially in the circuit to question the jurisdiction, that not having constituted a waiver. —McCaslin v. Camp, 26 Mich. 390.

¶ 983. A bill of exceptions in a civil case can include no ruling made after verdict. Taking out a writ of error and filing a stay-bond cannot therefore be treated as a voluntary waiver of the right to relief for matters subsequent to the verdict.—Churchill v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 56 Mich. 536.

¶ 984. Where counsel for both parties at the conclusion of a case state that only questions of law are involved for determination by the court, they cannot complain upon appeal that questions of fact are involved. —Kyselka v. Northern Assur. Co. of Michigan, 194 Mich. 430.

¶ 985. Stipulations consolidating trials and regulating the mode of trial cannot be set aside on error.—Harris v. Sweetland, 48 Mich. 110.

¶ 986. The defendant cannot upon appeal complain of a provision in a decree suspending the operation of a perpetual injunction, upon the filing of a certain bond by the defendant, where the giving of the bond was optional and was voluntarily given by the defendant.—Decker v. Pierce, 191 Mich. 64.

§ 226. ——By omission to brief and argue point.

Jurisdictional errors, see also post ¶ 1054.
By failure of brief to point out portion of record containing objectionable matter, see also post § 235.
Points made for first time in supplemental brief or on oral argument, see post §§ 238, 239.

¶ 987. An assignment of error is supposed to be abandoned if not argued or otherwise insisted upon in the Supreme Court.—Van Middlesworth v. Van Middlesworth, 32 Mich. 183; Roberts v. Wilkinson, 34 Mich. 129; Irwin v. Schlief, 48 Mich. 237; Estey Mfg. Co. v. Runnels, 55 Mich. 130; Shippy v. Village of Au Sable, 85 Mich. 280; Sullivan v. Hall, 86 Mich. 7; Lynch v. Craney, 95 Mich. 199; Graves v. City of Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266; Ferguson v. Wilson, 122 Mich. 97; Carmer v. Hubbard, 123 Mich. 333; Hathaway v. Washington Milling Co., 139 Mich. 708; Shaw-Walker Co. v. Fitzsimons, 148 Mich. 626; Kincade v. Peck, 193 Mich. 207; Ward v. Carey, 200 Mich. 217.

¶ 988. Assignments of error not argued in the brief of plaintiff in error or referred to in the oral argument will be regarded as waived though the brief states that they are not so waived.—Ashman v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 90 Mich. 567.

¶ 989. Assignments of error that are not discussed in the brief will be treated as abandoned, notwithstanding the assertion therein that all of the assignments are relied upon.—Warnes v. Brubaker, 107 Mich. 440.

¶ 990. Under Sup. Ct. Rule 40 the Supreme Court will not notice errors not argued in the brief.—Lubbers v. Township of Manlius, 172 Mich. 387; Smith v. Michigan Realty & Construction Co., 175 Mich. 600; In re Warring's Estate, 196 Mich. 720; McGinnis v. McCarn, Id.

¶ 991. Failure to present brief precludes consideration of errors assigned by plaintiff in error.—Busch v. Fisher, 89 Mich. 192.

¶ 992. A question which is not raised in the trial court or in the original brief cannot be raised on appeal.—Lake Erie Land Co. v. Chilinski, 197 Mich. 214.

¶ 993. Where an assignment of error is sufficiently specific, it is waived by the failure of counsel to refer to it in their brief, under Supreme Court Rule 40.—Nissly v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 676.

¶ 994. Complaints in appellant's brief containing no argument will not be considered.—Greenman v. O'Riley, 144 Mich. 534.

¶ 995. An error which, though complained of in appellant's brief, is not argued, nor the ground on which it is based stated, will not be considered on appeal.—Eberts v. Detroit, Mt. C. & M. C. Ry., 151 Mich. 260.

¶ 996. Objections to rulings on evidence are considered on review as abandoned if the bill of exceptions does not show their basis and the briefs do not notice them.—Hurd v. Newton, 36 Mich. 35.

¶ 997. Assignments of error stated in the brief, but not argued by the appellant in the Supreme Court or supported by reasons will not be considered.—Walker v. Mack, 129 Mich. 527.

¶ 998. Where in a suit for personal injuries against a street railway, defendant on appeal relies for reversal on the erroneous instruction of the court with respect to the duty of the motorman in sounding the gong, but raises said point neither in its assignments of error nor in its brief, said point cannot be considered by the Supreme Court.—Nissly v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 676

¶ 999. Assignments of error based upon the improper admission of testimony but not argued will not be considered on appeal.—Bilakus v. Kelley, 200 Mich. 125.

¶ 1000. An assignment of error upon the admission of correspondence in relation to specified transactions will be disregarded, where a large number of letters were introduced, and those to which reference is had are not pointed out in the briefs of counsel.—Ranson v. Weston, 110 Mich. 240.

¶ 1001. Assigned error on a refusal to strike will not be considered if not discussed.—Priebisch v. Ottenwess, 176 Mich. 476.

¶ 1002. An assignment of error reading "the court further erred in refusing to charge the jury as requested by the plaintiff in 14 requests to charge, and erred in each several instance and as appears by the exception to such refusal" without being accompanied by argument and without pointing out in what the error consists will not be considered.—Pichler v. DeHate, 125 Mich. 247.

¶ 1003. In an action for the balance due on a land contract and for the amount of a promissory note alleged to have been given to the vendor by the purchaser upon receiving back a part of the original payment as a loan, the question of whether or not the payments extending over several years amount to a full satisfaction of the debt will not be determined on appeal in the absence of discussion and computation by counsel.—McLeod v. Hunt, 128 Mich. 124.

¶ 1004. The contention that the verdict is against the weight of evidence cannot be raised on error where such point is not made in the brief.—Williamson v. Hannan, 200 Mich. 658.

¶ 1007. Whether or not, when the capacity of a testator is assailed on the ground that he is a monomaniac, the competency of a nonexpert witness to express an opinion is determined by a different rule than that which is applied when testator's capacity is assailed on the ground of general incompetency, will not be considered where the contention is not urged in appellant's brief.—O'Dell v. Goff, 153 Mich. 643.

¶ 1008. Where an appellant makes several assignments of error, and then states in his brief that there is only one question before the court, the other assignments of error are thereby waived.—Rosenthal v. Rosenthal, 154 Mich. 533.

§ 227. ——By pleading over demurrer or plea.

¶ 1009. Where a plaintiff has taken advantage of a discretionary order permitting him to amend his declaration, and has not objected to the terms of the order, such terms cannot thereafter be made a ground of error.—Tupper v. Kilduff, 26 Mich. 394.

¶ 1010. Where a defendant does not elect to stand upon his demurrer, when overruled, but pleads issuably and goes to trial on the merits, an assignment of error on the overruling of the demurrer will not be considered.—Ashton v. Detroit City R. Co., 78 Mich. 587.

¶1011. Points raised by a plea in abatement will be waived unless the pleader stands upon his plea.—Steel v. Clinton Circuit Judge, 133 Mich. 695.

¶ 1012. The right to a review of an order overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement to the special count of a declaration consisting of the common counts and such special count was waived, where the general issue had been pleaded without any indication that it was pleaded to the common counts only, and where the case went to trial under the general issue.—Griffin v. Wattles, 119 Mich. 346.

¶ 1013. Even though the right to a review of an order overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement to a special count of a declaration consisting of the common counts and such special count, might not have been waived by the filing of a plea to the merits, the action of the defendant in having a default upon the special plea set aside on the ground that a plea to the merits was on file, was equivalent to a new plea to the merits to the special count.—Griffin v. Wattles, 119 Mich. 346.

§ 228. ——By remitting portion of verdict or judgment.

Remission imposed as condition of affirming, see post § 485.

¶ 1015. The amount of a judgment in excess of the ad damnum clause can be remitted even after error brought.—McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. McKee, 51 Mich. 426.

¶ 1016. As to effect of indorsing down judgment after error brought, see Olcott v. Hanson, 12 Mich. 452.

¶ 1017. Where one who has recovered judgment in justice's court for more than $100 remits the excess to save a reversal and the case is nevertheless appealed, it cannot thereafter be claimed that plaintiff had released so much of the demand in suit as had been remitted.—Manistee Township School District No. 1 v. Cook, 47 Mich. 112.

¶ 1018. Where a plaintiff claiming damages for the wrongful removal of timber from land as to a portion of which his ownership was disputed remitted a portion of the damages claimed, corresponding to the amount taken from the disputed tract, errors committed by the trial court in rulings relating to the true boundary became immaterial.—Tuttle v. White, 49 Mich. 407.

¶ 1019. Remission upon the record, after error brought, of excess of judgment over ad damnum clause precludes complaint of such excess and cannot be objected to by plaintiff in error.—Hubbell v. Palmer, 76 Mich. 441.

§ 229. Waiver by coparty.

¶ 1020. Where two partners sued on a partnership account, employ the same counsel, who admits the liability of one of them at the trial, complaint cannot be made by the other of a direction of the court to the jury to find a verdict against his partner, in any event.—P. Hoffmaster Sons Co. v. Hodges, 154 Mich. 641.

Preclusion of question by estoppel, see also post ¶ 1300.
Preclusion to claim error on point settled by law of the case, see post XII, G.

Right to urge one's own error to support judgment, see ante § 221.
The doctrine of estoppel by act done on trial to claim error is a phase of the duty to save the error by proper and timely objection below, and is treated in Saving Questions for Review.

¶ 1021. A judgment rendered in favor of A. and B. against C., upon the award of arbitrators, on filing the same pursuant to the statute (R. S. 1838, p. 532, How. St., § 8481), will not be reversed on error on the ground that B. had no claim against C., he having joined with A. in executing the submission to arbitration of all matters arising out of a contract between A. and C., for the faithful performance of which contract by A. he was recited, in the submission, to be bound to A. by a separate instrument, and the award having been made in favor of both A. and B.—City of Detroit v. Jackson, 1 D. 106.

¶ 1022. Where the record fails to show the positions taken by counsel on the trial of a case in which the court directs a verdict in favor of defendant upon his own motion, defendant is not barred from raising in the Supreme Court the question of a variance between the declaration and the proofs.—Pennington v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 90 Mich. 505.

¶ 1023. In an action for negligence, the only error alleged was that the court refused to direct a verdict for defendant. Upon oral argument counsel stated that a new trial was not desired, and if reversal could not be granted without new trial the error would be waived. The evidence did not affirmatively and conclusively show that there was no negligence. Held that, since if there was error upon the trial, a new trial would be granted, the error was waived and judgment was affirmed.—Strong v. Weber, 139 Mich. 512.

¶ 1024. Failure of complainant to appeal from a finding that a cross-complainant's demand was not barred as alleged is not conclusive that the full amount remains due on it, where the appealing cross-complainant seeking to enforce such demand has raised issues under the cross-complaint as to the amount due by alleging payments to toll the statute.—Carr v. Carr, 138 Mich. 396.

E. BRIEFS AND ORAL ARGUMENTS.

§ 231. Printing, style, filing, and service of briefs.

Substance of briefs as printed, statement, arguments, citations, etc., see post § 232 et seq.
Printing and indexing the record, see ante § 174.
Service of briefs as waiver of notice of appeal, see ante § 70, ¶ 312.
Dismissal for failure to print and serve briefs, see ante § 159.
Striking cause for want of proper briefs, see ante § 165.
Loss of brief from files as ground for rehearing, see post ¶ 538.
Rules respecting printing and indexing, see Sup. Ct. Rules 35, 36.
Service of copies of printed briefs, see Sup. Ct. Rule 41.
Filing copies of brief, and number to be filed, see Sup. Ct. Rule 42.

¶ 1025. The court cannot interfere with the printing of briefs by counsel, unless perhaps where it is manifest that the counsel has unnecessarily extended his brief for the express purpose of adding to the costs, which would be unlikely to happen in any case.—George W. Roby Lumber Co. v. Gray, 73 Mich. 363.

¶ 1026. Where a record and brief of plaintiff in error are printed and served at the same time, it is permissible to call attention to the clauses of the charge which are objected to by enclosing them in brackets, to which the assignments of error refer by numbers.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 83 Mich. 218.

§ 232. Statement of facts and points.

Mode of traversing facts stated in brief, see post § 233.
Making points for first time in supplemental brief, see post § 238.
Statement of points without argument as waiver of them, see ante § 226.
Necessity that errors be assigned, see ante VI, E.
Omission of statement of facts in opinion when not made in brief, see post § 488.

¶ 1027. A brief of an appellant not containing a statement of the errors relied upon, or of the questions involved or of the manner in which they were raised does not comply with Rule 40 of the Supreme Court.—Keenan v. City of Mt. Pleasant, 176 Mich. 620.

¶ 1028. Supreme Court Rule 40 relative to the requisites of printed briefs should be complied with, as obedience to the rule not only saves labor on the part of the court, but aids the court in apprehending the precise points which are involved and the appellant's contentions.—Davis v. Saginaw-Bay City Ry. Co., 191 Mich. 131.

¶ 1029. A statement of facts citing disconnected excerpts from the testimony is not a compliance with Supreme Court Rule 40.—Carby v. Combs, 166 Mich. 347.

¶ 1030. Where the errors relied on in a record are discovered in appellant's brief only after reading a general discussion preceding any reference to them, the rule of court requiring the brief to state such errors is violated.—Ruttle v. Foss, 161 Mich. 132.

¶ 1031. Where a brief merely states that the charge of the court "was prejudicial to the rights of defendants and not based on the testimony in the case," the Supreme Court will not review the charge in a search for possible errors.—McKerchey v. McIlvenna, 161 Mich. 57.

¶ 1032. A mere general statement in defendant's brief that the court declined to grant requested instructions will not be considered on appeal.—In re Johnson's Estate, 160 Mich. 585; Beecham v. Wetherbee, Id.

¶ 1033. For the plaintiff in error to urge an alleged error with a bare statement that a refusal to instruct was error, citing no authorities, and the defendant to ignore it in his brief, is condemned as needlessly adding to the labor of the court.—Gerardo v. Brush, 120 Mich. 406.

¶ 1035. Where appellant in his brief on appeal fails to show, distinct from argument, a statement of the errors relied upon, the questions involved and the manner in which they are raised, as required by Supreme Court Rule 40, the court will not search the record to discover whether errors have been committed by the trial court in the trial of a case without a jury, in rendering its findings as it is for counsel to point out the errors claimed to have been committed in such manner that the Supreme Court may find particular exceptions well grounded and particular errors well assigned.—Couple-Gear Freight Wheel Co. v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 196 Mich. 429.

¶ 1036. The practice of mixing up fact with arguments and conclusions drawn from facts is criticized as in violation of Supreme Court Rule 40, which requires appellant in his statement of facts, and distinct from the argument, to state the errors upon which he relies, the questions involved and the manner in which they are raised.—Ferguson v. Wilson, 122 Mich. 97.

¶ 1037. Appellant's brief should comply with Rule 40 of the Supreme Court, and contain a statement of the errors relied upon, the question involved, and the manner in which it arose, distinct from the argument.—Gould v. Young, 143 Mich. 572.

¶ 1038. The statement of facts in a case does not comply with the requirements of Rule 40 where the same is not distinct from argument.—Reed v. McCready, 170 Mich. 532.

¶ 1040. Sup. Ct. Rule 40 requires that the appellant's main brief contain, distinct from argument, a statement of the errors relied upon, the questions involved, and the manner of their being raised, so that the members of the court may at once be apprised of what is before them for decision other than being put to the necessity of searching the record for errors.—Couple-Gear Freight Wheel Co. v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 196 Mich. 429.

¶ 1041. Where appellant's statement of facts in a brief fully complies with Sup. Ct. Rule 40 with references to support the statement, appellee cannot make a statement from his point of view and leave the court to examine the record and both statements and determine which is correct, and in such case appellant's statement will be taken as correct.—Shinglemeyer v. Wright, 124 Mich. 230.

¶ 1042. Under Sup. Ct. Rule 40, requiring inaccuracies in the appellant's statement of facts to be specifically pointed out, it is better practice to so point them out in the beginning of appellee's brief; and to state at the opening of appellee's brief in general terms that the statement "is partial and incorrect," but since the facts are few that such inaccuracies "can be pointed out in the argument" and therefore need not be presented "here," comes short of the spirit of the rule.—Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 145 Mich. 683.

¶ 1043. Where no objection is made to the statement of the case by appellant in his brief, it will be taken as correct, although counsel for appellee also made a statement.—Cobe v. Summers, 143 Mich. 117.

¶ 1044. A statement of facts made by an appellant in its brief will be considered by the Supreme Court as sufficient and accurate where the appellee has not pointed out anything to the contrary, as provided by Rule 40 of the Supreme Court.—Chase v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 165 Mich. 493.

¶ 1045. Where, instead of pointing out errors in appellant's statement of facts, appellee's statement is entirely distinct and raises questions not involved in appellant's statement, only the questions raised by the statement in appellant's brief will be considered.—Haden v. Closser, 153 Mich. 182.

¶ 1046. Under the Supreme Court Rule 40 the appellant's statement of fact will be followed where the appellee does not show there has been a misstatement, and new statement of facts by the appellee will be disregarded.—Berry v. Harbor Springs Ry. Co., 173 Mich. 181.

¶ 1047. Where prospectuses, which are the basis of an action for fraudulent sale of corporate stock, are not printed in the record, and the appellant, in his statement of facts, declares that they contain no representations of existing facts, but only expressions of intentions or opinions, and this statement is not amended or excepted to in appellee's brief, the statement in appellant's brief, will, under Supreme Court Rule 40, be accepted as true.—Bartholomew v. Walsh, 191 Mich. 252.

§ 234. Arguments and citations of authorities.

Intermingling statement and argument, see also ante § 232.

Failure to argue point as waiver of it, see ante § 226.

Dismissal for failure to argue cause, see ante § 160.

Restriction of review to the errors argued, see post § 312.

Right to pass on questions argued but not answered by opposing brief, see post § 313.

Concessions in argument as making decision unnecessary on particular points, see post § 266.

Duty to affirm on the issues though appellee refrains from argument, see post § 476, ¶ 2125.

New points as ground for rehearing, see post § 539.

Exclusion of arguments to the merits on motion for rehearing, see post § 547.

Costs for undue prolixity, see Costs, V.

Substance and contents of printed briefs, and mode of questioning same, see Sup. Ct. Rule 40.

Arguments and briefs on motions, see Sup. Ct. Rules 27, 30.

¶ 1048. Under former Supreme Court Rule 61, which requires the errors relied upon to be argued in the brief of plaintiff in error, that in which the error is claimed to consist should at least be pointed out, and it is not sufficient to say, in support of assignments relating to the charge of the court, that all of said assignments are well taken, and that the instructions upon which error has been assigned tended to mislead and did mislead the jury, as the verdict shows.—Mason v. Partrick, 100 Mich. 577.

¶ 1049. Where counsel for the plaintiff in error devote the major portion of their brief to the discussion of the main question involved in the case, and simply refer, without discussion, to the remaining questions, the court is not called upon to elaborate upon such latter questions.—French v. Ryan, 104 Mich. 625.

¶ 1050. Counsel must cite Michigan cases by the regular reports where such cases have been officially reported.—Webber v. Hayes, 117 Mich. 256.

¶ 1051. Citations of cases in the briefs should be to the official Michigan reports, wherever possible, and not to such cases as reported in other publications.—People v. Jamieson, 124 Mich. 164.

¶ 1052. The practice of citing cases in briefs without giving the names of parties is confusing and in violation of the rules.—Schulte v. Kelly, 124 Mich. 330.

§ 235. References to and quotation of record.

Connecting assignments with matter in record by citation, see ante §§ 211-213.

¶ 1053. Briefs making a contention of fact as shown by the evidence should refer to the pages of the record where the fact appears, and it should also appear that the bill of exceptions contains all the evidence on that subject.—Sloman v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co., 112 Mich. 258.

¶ 1054. A decree may be reversed on appeal for jurisdictional defects, notwithstanding they are not pointed out on the argument.—Smith v. Smith, 13 Mich. 258.

¶ 1056. Assignments of error upon the admissibility of testimony will not be considered where no reference is made, either in the assignments or in the brief, to the pages of the record, an examination of which is necessary to the investigation of the questions raised.—Zimmerman Mfg. Co. v. Dolph, 104 Mich. 281.

¶ 1057. A contention that the court erred in instructing the jury that there was no evidence upon a certain branch of the case will not be considered unless the testimony in the record which is claimed to controvert the statement of the court is pointed out.—Rogers v. Ferris, 107 Mich. 126.

¶ 1058. Upon the review of a case involving the validity of tax deeds covering taxes for several years, the briefs of counsel should carefully collate the statutes and decisions applicable to each point raised, and contain references to the testimony, objections, rulings, and exceptions.—Hoffman v. Pack Woods & Co., 114 Mich. 1.

¶ 1059. Conduct of counsel in asking of a defendant why a witness was not brought to court will not be considered if neither in the brief nor in the assignments any reference is made to the record.—Bowen v. Chandler, 172 Mich. 678.

¶ 1060. Improper conduct on the part of the attorney for an interurban railroad in interrupting counsel for plaintiff during the examination of plaintiff on the question of his injuries received as the result of being thrown from defendant's car and in making improper comments during the course of such examination will not be deemed to be reversible error where either side might have been prejudiced as much as the other, although a verdict in favor of the defendant is returned, where counsel for the plaintiff does not point out any particular conduct, ruling, or failure to rule which can be said to be reversible error.—McKenzie v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 195 Mich. 218.

¶ 1060a. An objection that a charge gave an improper measure of damages cannot be considered, where plaintiff's counsel does not advise the Supreme Court as to what he deems the proper measure of damages.—Brown v. Spiegel, 167 Mich. 645.

§ 236. References to extrinsic matters.

Attaching photographs to brief, see post ¶ 1116.

¶ 1061. A weather report dated one year after the trial of a case and not a part of the bill of exceptions has no place in the brief, and will not be considered by the court.—Monyhan v. Detroit & Saline Plank-Road Co., 129 Mich. 549.

§ 237. Impertinence and acrimony.

Intemperate or disrespectful language as contempt, see Contempt.

¶ 1064. It is contrary to professional ethics for counsel in the brief to make vituperative attacks on the motives of the trial judge in making rulings complained of, and to charge that the judge was "gunning for game on his own account" and had committed a "wanton prostitution" of his office.—Blumeno v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 101 Mich. 325.

¶ 1065. In error to a judgment for complainant in a summary proceeding to reverse it because it was brought pending garnishment of the tenant by a creditor of the landlord, it is not proper to make comments in the brief about the oppressiveness of forcing litigation of the landlord's claim of exemption indirectly by such a summary proceeding where such comment has no helpful bearing on the sole question of law whether a summary proceeding will lie pending garnishment.—O'Connor v. White, 124 Mich. 22.

¶ 1066. Strictures in the brief upon the trial judge which are unwarranted by the record are to be strongly condemned.—Henrich v. Saier, 124 Mich. 86.

¶ 1067. While due allowance will be made for partisanship of counsel, the administration of justice is not aided by the use of acrimonious language in briefs.—Feldkemp v. Ernst, 177 Mich. 550.

§ 238. Additional and supplemental briefs.

See also ¶ 1075.

¶ 1068. A point mentioned for the first time in a supplemental brief need not be considered on appeal.—Hart v. Doyle, 128 Mich. 257.

¶ 1069. Questions first raised in the supplemental brief will not be considered.—Foster v. East Jordan Lumber Co., 141 Mich. 316; Lewis v. Jacobs, 153 Mich. 664.

¶ 1070. A question not raised in the original brief cannot be brought in by the supplemental brief.—Anketell v. Hayward, 1 Mich. 525.

¶ 1071. The ground for reversal stated in appellant's original brief is the only ground to be considered upon appeal.—South Arm Lumber Co. v. Silverthorne, 138 Mich. 465.

¶ 1073. Where the original brief was filed August 1st, and a reply brief August 29th, a new point, first set up in a supplemental brief filed November 7th, with the explanation that "The feature of the law now to be suggested did not occur to us before," might be disposed of by refusing to consider it because not made earlier.—Bartle v. Houghton County St. R. Co., 132 Mich. 290.

Waiver of errors by omission from original brief, see also ante § 226.
Rehearing of cause after decision, see post XIV.
Right to oral argument in calendar causes, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 12010.
Argument of counsel on request of counsel or court, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 12016.
Submission without argument, see Sup. Ct. Rules 45, 47.
Time allowable for oral argument, see Sup. Ct. Rule 46.
Necessity of reargument to decide on material points not argued, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 12016.

¶ 1074. Calling the attention of the court in the oral argument, to a part of the general charge of the trial judge, brings up no question for review where the record fails to show the taking of an assignment of error.—Perry v. Detroit United Ry., 135 Mich. 515.

¶ 1075. The Supreme Court will not consider questions raised for the first time on oral argument, and in a supplemental brief, but will limit its review to questions determined by the court and raised by counsel in the original brief.—Escanaba Timber Land Co. v. Rusch, 147 Mich. 619; writ of error dismissed in 214 U. S. 528, 53 L. ed. 1069, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 693.

F. AMENDMENTS AND ADDITIONAL RECORDS, PAPERS AND EVIDENCE.

§ 240. In general; power to allow amendment or additions.

Sending record back for correction or amendment, see ante § 118.
New proofs or evidence as ground for rehearing, see post § 542.
Amendments and additional assignments of error, see ante § 124.
Power to call for oral testimony in Supreme Court, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, § 29; Comp. L. 1915, § 12034.
Procedure for discovery of books, etc., see Jud. Act, Chap. I, §§ 17-22; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12022-12027.

¶ 1076. The general power of the Supreme Court to allow amendments to the record for the purpose of correcting mistakes, and errors of haste and inadvertence, considered.—Farrand v. Bentley, 6 Mich. 281.

¶ 1077. The Supreme Court has no authority to amend the record sent up on error, but it may, in a proper case, compel correction by the court below.—Sweetzer v. Mead, 5 Mich. 33; Scribner v. Gay, 5 Mich. 511; Evans v. Norris, 6 Mich. 69.

¶ 1079. Leave to amend the pleadings can be granted only by the court below.—Bank of Michigan v. Niles, W. 398.

§ 241. Additional testimony under Water Craft Act.

Dismissal for irregularity in taking proofs on appeal, see ante § 161.
Taking additional testimony in water craft cases on appeal, see Sup. Ct. Rule 57.

¶ 1080. Supreme Court Rule 57 requires that an appellant desiring to take additional testimony must give notice to the other party within ten days after the filing of the return. Held, that the failure to comply with this rule is waived where the other party appears and participates in the taking of depositions.—Detroit Lumber Co. v. The Petrel, 163 Mich. 245.

§ 242. Application to amend.

¶ 1081. The proper practice when such an amendment is desired is to apply to the Supreme Court, on affidavit showing the reasons for the amendment, to remit the record for that purpose; and the court can then judge whether the case is a proper one to prevent an amendment with a view to affect proceedings already taken in the Supreme Court.—O'Flynn v. Holmes, 7 Mich. 454.

¶ 1082. Where, six months after errors had been assigned in the Supreme Court, the defendant in error obtained, without leave from the Supreme Court, an amendment to the record in the court below, with a view to obviate the errors assigned, and then moved the Supreme Court for an order for a further return to bring up the amendment, it was held that the application was too late. —O'Flynn v. Holmes, 7 Mich. 454.

¶ 1083. Where, after error assigned in this court, defendant in error without leave of this court obtained an amendment to the record in the court below with a view to correct the error assigned, this court refused to amend the transcript to make it correspond with the amended record, nor would it award a certiorari to bring up the amendments; but under the circumstances of the case defendant in error was allowed to make a new application below for leave to amend, with leave to plaintiff in error to discontinue at the cost of defendant.—O'Flynn v. Eagle, 8 Mich. 136.

¶ 1084. A motion to amend the return comes too late if made after the cause is on hearing, and six months after the defect was known to the party who claims to have been prejudiced by it.—Verplank v. Hall, 21 Mich. 469,rehearing denied, 22 Mich. 80.

¶ 1085. Where a petition was presented for leave to amend, by inserting additional facts, after a decree sustaining a demurrer to the bill had been affirmed by the Supreme Court on the same reasons which had governed in chancery, leave was refused.—Bank of Michigan v. Niles, W. 398.

§ 243. Propriety of sending back the record.

Return of record for additions or amendments, see ante § 118.

¶ 1086. Though the court may, on a proper showing, compel bills of exceptions to be corrected so as to conform to the facts, it will not do so until it is shown that mistakes exist which are injurious to the party applying for the correction.—Scribner v. Gay, 5 Mich. 511.

¶ 1087. Where the judge who signed the bill of exceptions had since gone out of office, it was not remanded for correction.—Scribner v. Gay, 5 Mich. 511.

¶ 1088. Where a circuit judge omits to include in the bill of exceptions matter believed by appellant to be material, and exception to such course is taken by appellant, but the latter causes the bill of exceptions to be settled and signed by the judge, to be printed, and the record to be filed in the Supreme Court, said appellant is not entitled to have the record remanded for amendment, since it was his duty to make a motion in the court below that the bill be amended in the desired particulars, in order that action of the trial court in denying said motion might be reviewed in the Supreme Court by mandamus.—McIntire v. Carr, 168 Mich. 462.

§ 244. Compelling amendment or correction.

¶ 1089. Correction of the bill to include all the evidence bearing on a refusal to charge that there is no evidence tending to proof of a given issue, may be compelled by mandamus.—People ex rel. Crane v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 24 Mich. 513.

¶ 1090. A plaintiff in error who has delayed making his application until after the lapse of one term from the filing of the bill of exceptions, and has, in the meantime, filed assignments of error to the bill as settled, has thereby waived his right to mandamus to compel an amendment of the bill of exceptions.—People ex rel. Fowler v. Manistee Circuit Judge, 31 Mich. 72.

§ 245. Form and manner of amendment.

¶ 1091. The original files should not be altered even by the consent of the parties. If an addition is desired, it should be by stipulation, or other separate paper, without changing the original.—Farrand v. Collins Iron Co., 8 Mich. 136.

¶ 1092. An assignment of error based upon the refusal to give certain requests to charge is not available, where the requests appear to have been added to the bill of exceptions without authority, and are not certified to by the court.—People v. Macard, 109 Mich. 623.

¶ 1093. Where a so-called judgment contained purported findings but the record showed no request for findings and no exceptions, held that such record was not amendable on appeal by an offer to supply stated proposed findings and exceptions said to have been furnished to the court subsequently to the judgment.—Federal Audit Co. v. Sawyer, 196 Mich. 566.

¶ 1094. In a proceeding in equity to which a mortgagee was a party and wherein he sought payment of his mortgage, the omission to introduce the note below, was remedied by its being filed in the Supreme Court with an affidavit explaining why it was not introduced below and by the admission in the mortgagor's answer that the amount was due and unpaid. Proof of the amount due is thereby supplied.—Van Vleck v. Conklin, 123 Mich. 442.

§ 246. Amendable matters.

Amendments to show matters improperly returned under certificate, see also ante ¶ 701.

¶ 1095. The Supreme Court may permit a bill of foreclosure, filed to enforce void securities, to be so amended after the hearing as to ask for an accounting for the debt.—Burton v. Schildbach, 45 Mich. 504.

¶ 1096. Where return has been made to a chancery appeal, the Supreme Court having obtained jurisdiction will give opportunity to make good such defects as were not due to appellant's negligence; and if the transcript has not been signed, it will allow the filing of a certificate from the trial judge that the case was settled and that the proofs are correct.—Gram v. Wasey, 45 Mich. 223.

¶ 1097. Where defendants, in a bill to remove cloud from title, have not been prejudiced or surprised, an amendment may be granted in the Supreme Court on appeal to make the description of the land conform to the proofs, e. g., where the land is described in the bill as a "sand-bar" or "a piece of middle-ground" and the proofs show it to be an island.—Butler v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 85 Mich. 246, affirmed in 159 U. S. 87, 40 L. ed. 85, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 991.

¶ 1098. The record in an action on an executor's bond which had been prosecuted to judgment in name of probate judge for use of a contingent residuary legatee, who had no definite interest, was amended in Supreme Court so as to show administrator as party in interest.—Cranson v. Wilsey, 71 Mich. 356.

¶ 1099. An amendment of the declaration in regard to the character in which plaintiff sues will not be allowed in the Supreme Court when, the amount due not being conceded, the case cannot be disposed of upon the merits in that court.—Wheeler v. Stewart, 94 Mich. 445.

¶ 1100. An amendment to an answer permitting defendants to aver estoppel will be allowed even on appeal under the circumstances of the suit.—Union Trust Co. v. Detroit & R. St. C. Ry., 127 Mich. 252.

¶ 1101. Amendment of a bill for specific performance making a radically different case from that presented to the lower court, is not permitted on appeal.—Lewandowski v. Althouse, 136 Mich. 631.

¶ 1102. In a suit in equity by a township to enforce rights relative to a cemetery, where an objection that the board of health should have been joined, is first made on appeal, the absent party may be brought in by amendment, if necessary.—Township of Oneida v. Allen, 137 Mich. 224.

¶ 1103. The lower court refused to sign the plaintiff's bill of exceptions except upon his agreement to attach thereto a certain Exhibit D which the court understood to embody a certain bill of sale. Exhibit D as attached to the bill of exceptions did not contain said bill of sale. Held, defendant's motion to amend the bill of exceptions by adding the bill of sale should be allowed.—Suchocki v. Calumet Ins. Co. 158 Mich. 62.

¶ 1104. A bill of exceptions cannot be revised on error to meet a conflict with the stenographer's minutes.—Bates v. Kitchel, 166 Mich. 695.

¶ 1105. It is within the power of the Supreme Court to permit amendment of pleadings to conform with the testimony where the subject is related and has been fully gone into and there is no claim of surprise.—Atkinson v. Akin, 197 Mich. 289.

¶ 1106. In an action to recover damages for injuries alleged in the declaration to have been due to certain negligent acts of the defendant, where the proof showed that such injuries were due to certain other negligent acts of the defendant, and the court charged the jury that the only negligence to be considered by them was that alleged in the declaration, resulting in a verdict for the defendant, and plaintiff made no motion in the trial court to amend the declaration, held that amendment was not allowable on writ of error under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10273, How. 2nd Ed., § 12974, providing for amendments to cure omissions, imperfections, variances and defects not against the right and justice of the matter of the suit and not altering the issue between the parties or the trial.—Johnson v. Muskegon County, 195 Mich. 722.

¶ 1107. Where there is a variance between the bill and the proof in a suit for specific performance of an agreement for a lease an amendment to the bill setting out the oral agreement so as to correspond with the proof may be made on appeal, although the question of variance is first raised on appeal.—Charlet v. Teakle, 197 Mich. 426.

§ 247. Counter amendments and additions.

¶ 1108. In a suit to remove a cloud on title consisting of a deed made to the defendant upon an execution sale where the complainant is permitted to amend his bill by alleging that the defendant has taken no steps to determine the rights and equity of the judgment debtor under Comp. L. 1897, § 9167, defendant was allowed, upon appeal, twenty days within which to file in the Supreme Court a certified copy of proceedings taken in pursuance of the act, in default of which, a decree for the complainant will be affirmed.—Kunze v. Solomon, 126 Mich. 290.

§ 248. Stipulations and consents.

Exclusion of extraneous writings and stipulations on review, see post § 285.

¶ 1109. The court will not, by consent of parties, treat that as a part of a bill of exceptions which is not actually incorporated therein by the judge who settled the same.—Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 10; Wessels v. Beeman, 66 Mich. 343; and see People ex rel. Dickinson v. Sackett, 14 Mich. 243.

¶ 1110. New facts cannot—even by stipulation—be introduced into the record on appeal.—King v. Carpenter, 37 Mich. 363.

¶ 1111. The record as sent up cannot be amended by stipulation of counsel.—McDonald v. Lewis, 42 Mich. 135.

¶ 1112. The record on appeal to the Supreme Court is the matter duly certified, and it cannot be amended by stipulation of counsel.—Rabior v. Kelley, 194 Mich. 107.

§ 249. Affidavits and documents supplementary to record.

Effect of certificate of clerk accompanying record of judgment on certiorari to justice, see post ¶ 1227.

Affidavit and showing on motions, see ante § 166.

Affidavits on rehearing, see post § 548.

Depositions to bring in excluded testimony, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVII, § 5: Comp. L. 1915.

¶ 1113. The Supreme Court has no power to allow the appellant to supply, by a sworn copy, a paper discovered, after the appeal, to have been lost from the files of the court below. But it seems that the court below would have power even after the appeal, to supply the paper in order to give effect to the appeal.—Sears v. Schwarz, 1 D. 504.

¶ 1114. On the hearing of an equity cause the Supreme Court will not allow affidavits to be read to supply alleged defects in the return as to the merits of the controversy.—Verplank v. Hall, 21 Mich. 469; rehearing denied, 22 Mich. 80.

¶ 1115. The affidavit of counsel as to what is shown by the tax return roll, it not being returned on certiorari to a judgment of the justice and error to the judgment of the circuit court thereon, cannot be regarded to sustain an assignment of error that such roll showed on its face that the village treasurer had no authority to institute the action for delinquent personal taxes.—Village of Wayne v. Goldsmith, 141 Mich. 528.

¶ 1116. Photographs attached to the brief, but not submitted in the court below, will not be considered on appeal.—Carley v. Jennings, 131 Mich. 385.

§ 250. Return of amendments and additions.

¶ 1117. Where an amendment has been made in the court below since the cause was removed to the Supreme Court by writ of error, but no further return has been made, the court cannot entertain a motion based upon such amendment on an affidavit that such an amendment has been made.—O'Flynn v. Eagle, 7 Mich. 306.

XII. REVIEW AND CONSIDERATION OF CAUSE BY COURT.

A. HEARING AND GENERAL NATURE OF REVIEW.

§ 251. Hearing and scope in general.

To be reviewable the action or suit must be one which by law is the subject of a writ of error or of an appeal as a chancery cause, and the judgment or decree must have been "final" and not merely interlocutory. This, however, goes to the right of review and the character of judgment which is reviewable, and has been treated, ante I, III.

In order that the case may be reviewed there must be a sufficient record to show the judgment below and the errors complained of with the objections, rulings thereon, and evidence material to the decision of each question. For the sufficiency of such record, see ante XI, A, B.

Being revisory in its object an appeal or error does not reach any errors but those pertinent to the judgment or decree under review, which must appear by the record and bill or case, and be presented for consideration by proper objections, exceptions and argument. As to these restrictive rules of review, see post XII, B.

Adherence to theory of case, see post §§ 267-270.

Unnecessary questions, see post §§ 261-266.

Consideration of matters tending to sustain judgment, see post § 316.

Review of record alone where exceptions are lacking, see post §§ 319-321.

A further restrictive principle is that error will not be presumed, and hence the record must be read and considered subject to that presumption and the intendments will be so taken as to sustain the judgment or decree. This principle is treated post XII, C.

Decisions based on the discretion of the lower court in a matter within its discretion are legally correct, if the discretion was not abused; and hence the review is not extended to disturb such decisions. See post XII, D.

Nature of the decision on review, see post XIII.

Dismissal or other disposal of case before hearing without examination of questions presented, see ante X.

Rehearings, see post XIV.

Avoidance of merits on motions, see ante § 168.

¶ 1118. A chancery appeal and a separate proceeding in an action at law brought up by writ of error, cannot be consolidated and heard together.—Stevens v. Stevens, 181 Mich. 449.

§ 252. ——In appeal cases.

The review of the evidence on appeals is on the whole record with the object of making such decree as the chancellor should have made on the evidence shown in the record. As to the review of the conclusions of fact found by the chancellor, see post XII, E, 1.
Restriction to record, see generally post § 272.
Trial de novo, see post XII, H.
Review of discretionary orders, see post XII, D.
Consolidation of law and equity hearings, see ante ¶ 1118.

¶ 1119. The Supreme Court in appeal cases follows principally the practice of the English House of Lords.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 490.

When error is proper remedy, see ante I.
The object of the writ being to reach errors of law and not of fact, unless the sufficiency of facts is presented as a question of law, the sufficiency of the evidence adduced on trial to sustain the verdict or findings of fact is not primarily open to review. The decision of the jury or the trial judge on the facts, accordingly will be examined only to see if the same is legally supported by the evidence. See post XII, E, 2.
Jurisdiction over errors of fact, see also ante ¶ 50.
Orders based on discretion, see post XII, D.
Restriction to record, see generally post § 273.
On error to judgments on appeal or certiorari from justice or probate court, see also post §§ 458, 459.
See also cross-references, ante § 251.

¶ 1120. The Supreme Court reviews judgments in law cases upon questions of law only.—De Mill v. Moffat, 45 Mich. 410.

¶ 1121. Error of fact, e. g., the death of one of the defendants before the suit was brought, may be assigned in the Supreme Court on the common writ of error.—Teller v. Wetherell, 6 Mich. 46.

What matters reviewable, see ante § 5.
Review of findings, see post § 463.
Restriction to record, see generally post § 276.

¶ 1122. The act of 1851, p. 311, which was repealed in 1853, did not intend that parties to suits in circuit courts should be at liberty to have a case at law reheard in the Supreme Court upon the merits, like an appeal in chancery. The court was to judge of the case as if it were an application for a new trial, and to ascertain from an inspection of the whole case whether the circuit judge manifestly erred, either in his conclusions upon the facts, or in respect to the law applicable to them.—Hill v. Lafayette Ins. Co., 2 Mich. 476.

¶ 1123. Only those questions are before the Supreme Court which appear to have been passed upon by the court below.—Van Kleek v. Eggleston, 7 Mich. 511.

¶ 1124. Under Comp. L. 1857, § 3421, How. St., § 6469, other questions of law besides those arising upon the evidence may be reviewed on case made.—Sallee v. Ireland, 9 Mich. 154.

§ 255. Nature of error; law or fact.

Generally a decision of fact on the effect or sufficiency of the evidence will not be reviewed, since the decision below is conclusive in an action at law, unless by a proper objection and exception the sufficiency has been made a question of law and ruled on as such. As to such matters, see post XII, E.
In chancery appeals, where the trial is de novo on the record, it will be reviewed accordingly. See post XII, H, and also post XII, E.
Construction of findings as of fact or law, see post § 336, and see also Verdicts and Findings.
What are law and what fact questions, see generally Trial, VI, and see specific topics treating of the subject-matter of the question.

¶ 1125. There is an error of law where findings are not supported by evidence or are contrary to the undisputed testimony.—In re Hoffman's Estate, 183 Mich. 67.

¶ 1126. If a fact is not found, or found but not supported by evidence necessary to sustain a judgment, it is an error of law.—In re Hoffman's Estate, 183 Mich. 67.

¶ 1127. Whether stipulated facts support a judgment rendered thereon is open to review when properly assigned as error.—Kooman v. De Jonge, 186 Mich. 292.

§ 256. Matters not considered or ruled on below.

General rule that question must be presented on trial and ruled on to make reviewable point, see Saving Questions for Review.
Restriction of review to matters tried and determined, see post § 289.
Questions affecting infants, see post § 258.

¶ 1128. Error cannot be based upon the legal positions taken in the argument of counsel unless the trial court adopted them.—Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co., 50 Mich. 168.

¶ 1129. No question can arise in the Supreme Court upon a point of law not passed upon in the finding of the court below.—Just v. Township of Wise, 42 Mich. 573.

¶ 1130. The Supreme Court is limited to reviewing rulings of the trial court on such questions of law as were distinctly presented and passed upon.—Chatterton v. Parrott, 46 Mich. 432.

¶ 1131. Upon a directed verdict for the plaintiff in an action on an insurance policy, the question of the amount of damages will not be decided on appeal where the trial court asked counsel to say whether there was any dispute on this question and received no definite answer.—Lord v. National Protective Society, 134 Mich. 357.

¶ 1132. Under a stipulation and record and the opinion and finding of the trial court in assumpsit to recover personal property tax from which the court concluded that the sole question before the court was whether the assessment being to an individual, instead of the corporation defendant, the assessment roll was conclusive, the question whether the finding and judgment were erroneous because plaintiff did not show that the necessary proceedings for equalization, apportionment, assessment, etc., were had, was not open for review.—City of Menominee v. S. K. Martin Lumber Co., 119 Mich. 201.

¶ 1133. Where the trial court did not in its findings pass upon certain questions urged on appeal for the reason same had been eliminated by concessions of counsel, held that such questions would not be open for consideration on such appeal.—In re Reh's Estate, 196 Mich. 210.

¶ 1133a. A decree of the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal for equities or facts arising after its rendition.—Slote v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 182 Mich. 260.

§ 257. Questions raised on court's motion.

Questions affecting infants, see post § 258.

¶ 1134. A point made by the Supreme Court on its own motion, pursuant to Comp. L. 1897, § 193, may be considered though not raised or passed on below, if the record has all of the facts necessary to such consideration.—Auditor General v. Bolt, 147 Mich. 283. [Distinguishing Gadd v. City of Detroit, 142 Mich. 683, where requisite testimony was not shown by the record to have been sent up.]

§ 258. Questions affecting infants.

Consideration without complaint from infants, see also ante § 224.
Passing on questions though not saved or presented, see post § 314.

¶ 1135. The interests of nonappellant infant legatees must be considered on appeal from construction of will.—Toms v. Williams, 41 Mich. 552.

§ 259. Moot questions.

Dismissal or affirmance on hearing for want of reviewable question or substantial grievance, see post §§ 480, 481.
Dismissal on satisfaction of judgment or decree, see ante § 162.

¶ 1136. Where a decree has been entered declaring certain liens against a building, and an appeal is taken on a stipulation of facts that the contractor had agreed with the lessees to offset the cost of construction with a debt owing from him to them, and there is evidence denying such agreement, and no evidence to the contrary, such appeal is on a moot question and will not be considered.—Pittsburg Plate Glass Co. v. Charles Klein Co., 177 Mich. 399.

¶ 1137. The question whether an officer of a corporation is rightfully holding his office becomes a moot question which will not be determined on appeal in a quo warranto proceeding where, after a judgment of ouster and pending appeal, the respondent is legally elected as an officer of the corporation, and the case will be dismissed where no other questions are involved.—Brown v. Lawrence, 197 Mich. 178.

§ 260. Questions made by consent.

Stipulation to limit jurisdiction or fix principles of decision, see ante § 12, ¶ 60.

¶ 1138. The parties cannot, by stipulation, confer on the Supreme Court jurisdiction to review, on case made, findings on the weight of evidence.—Schmidt v. Miller, 22 Mich. 278.

§ 261. Unnecessary questions.

Moot questions, see ante § 259.

Questions not considered below, see ante § 256.

Omission of discussion in opinion, see post § 487.

¶ 1138a. Where the state of the case is such that the contention is speculative, and no rights of the parties can be changed, it is not incumbent on the court to formulate opinions.—People v. Leavitt, 41 Mich. 470.

¶ 1138b. The Supreme Court is not inclined to express its opinion on questions in the record that are not necessary to a final determination of the case.—Phillips v. Village of Kalamazoo, 53 Mich. 33.

¶ 1139. Irregularities in receiving a verdict were not considered on review where the case had to go back for a new trial anyway, and it was unlikely that the same questions would again arise.—Petrie v. Lane, 58 Mich. 527.

¶ 1140. An unnecessary question need not be considered where reversal must be ordered on other grounds and the question may be eliminated on the new trial.—Williams v. Bresnahan, 66 Mich. 634.

¶ 1141. On reversal for error other errors not likely to occur in a new trial will not be discussed by the court.—Leach v. Detroit Elec. Ry., 125 Mich. 373.

¶ 1143. An objection for multifariousness was not considered on appeal from an order overruling a general demurrer grounded on want of equity and multifariousness, where the bill stated a case for equitable relief, and the defendants were not particularly injured by the multifariousness complained of, and the costs in the case were within the control of the trial court, and could be adjusted on final decree.—Storrs v. Wallace, 54 Mich. 112.

¶ 1144. The Supreme Court, upon affirming an order of the circuit judge overruling a demurrer to a bill in equity, with leave to defendant to answer over, declined to pass upon certain questions discussed by counsel, which might or might not arise in the case, depending upon the nature of the proofs.—Allen v. Conklin, 112 Mich. 74.

¶ 1145. The finding in an ejectment suit tried without a jury of no adverse possession by defendant is conclusive on appeal in the absence of the testimony as to such adverse possession, and therefore questions as to the sufficiency of the notice of such defense attached to the plea need not be determined.—Norris v. Hall, 124 Mich. 170.

¶ 1146. The correctness of other reasons stated by the trial judge for overruling a motion for a new trial, will not be considered where one reason is sufficient to support the decision.—Wilson v. Medler, 140 Mich. 209.

¶ 1147. The construction of Pub. Act 1905, No. 129, in connection with 1897 C. C. Rule 47, was withheld because not directly involved in this case.—City of Detroit v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 144 Mich. 696.

¶ 1148. A judgment will be affirmed where it appears in a case tried without a jury that the record contains all the evidence and no exceptions were taken to any of the findings, and it was neither assigned nor contended that the facts found do not support the conclusions of law. Questions as to the admissibility or rejection of evidence and a claim that there was no evidence to support certain findings of fact will not be reviewed under such circumstances.—Ironton Cross Tie Co. v. Evans, 146 Mich. 197.

¶ 1149. On appeal from a decree on an accounting, where the Supreme Court has found on the proofs that a partnership existed, it will not consider the question whether the trial court's decree, finding a right to an accounting and ordering a reference thereon, was final upon the question of existence of the partnership as found.—Chase v. Angell, 148 Mich. 1.

¶ 1150. The question of the admissibility of testimony explaining a transaction with a deceased person claimed to be a fraud upon him, offered but objected to as being matter equally within the knowledge of the deceased, will not be passed upon, where there is an entire failure to prove that such transaction was a fraud as claimed.—Bangs v. Browne, 149 Mich. 478.

¶ 1151. The question whether it was error to direct a verdict for defendants will not be considered where, under the ruling of the court, the record upon a retrial will be different from the one then presented to the court.—Rosethal v. Rosenthal, 151 Mich. 493.

¶ 1152. A court of review will not consider whether the remedy sought in proceedings to collect a judgment is the best so long as it is admissible.—Regg v. Burnham, 55 Mich. 39.

§ 262. ——Secondary or controlling questions.

Decision of secondary questions because of importance or public interest, see post § 263.

¶ 1153. Where, on a writ of error, an objection is taken which goes to the jurisdiction of the court below, and is fatal to the judgment brought up for review, the court will not pass upon the other question raised by the record.—Fessenden v. Hill, 6 Mich. 242.

¶ 1154. The settlement of the main point in a case having affirmed the judgment below, the Supreme Court declined to consider the questions raised on minor points, however erroneous the rulings.—Thompson v. Howard, 31 Mich. 309.

¶ 1155. When a question of law as to the right of appellant to maintain the bill depends on a question of fact found against his position, the law question need not be decided.—Popendick v. Frobenius, 66 Mich. 317.

¶ 1156. A verdict plainly contrary to the weight of the evidence will be reversed without passing on other questions.—Wiethoff v. Shedden Cartage Co., 142 Mich. 264.

¶ 1157. Where no one appeared for the defendant in error and the record showed that hearsay evidence had been admitted against objection, the judgment was reversed without considering the other questions raised. —Brownell v. Groesbeck, 36 Mich. 501.

¶ 1158. Error in a ruling on a motion for new trial will not be considered where the case must be reversed upon another point.—Brucker v. Manistee & G. R. R. Co., 166 Mich. 330.

¶ 1159. Where an answer to a bill for an accounting raises the question of the propriety of the remedy sought, but the point is not pressed, either in the answer or in the argument of counsel for defendant, and it is clear that an adjustment of the whole matter involved is desired, such question will not be considered by this court, although it is doubtful if the bill states a case for a court of equity.—Young v. Potter, 150 Mich. 375.

¶ 1160. Where prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in an action against the warden of a state penal institution, which necessitates a reversal of a judgment for the plaintiff, it is unnecessary to determine the effect of the repeal by Act No. 219, Public Acts 1911, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 15279, of the enabling act permitting the action, section 2091, Comp. Laws 1887, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 15229, pending an appeal by the defendant to the Supreme Court from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff.—McDowell v. Fuller, 183 Mich. 639. (Per Brooke, C. J., McAlvay, Stone, JJ., Ostrander, J., holding that repeal did not deprive court of jurisdiction. Moore, and Steere, JJ., holding that court was deprived of jurisdiction and that proceedings abated.)

§ 263. ——Questions of importance or public interest.

Constitutional questions of importance, see post § 264.

¶ 1161. Where both parties desire, and the public interest demands, that a court pass upon the merits of a case, and preliminary objections do not go to the jurisdiction, the main question may be disposed of.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. People, 46 Mich. 193.

¶ 1162. The court will treat as properly before it a question raised by an objection to testimony, although not sufficiently specific, where the same question is likely to arise on a second trial, and the judgment must be reversed on other grounds.—Sauers v. Giddings, 90 Mich. 50.

¶ 1163. An irregular plea in chancery can be considered on appeal if important to the final disposition of the case.—People ex rel. Hunt v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 41 Mich. 5.

§ 264. ——Constitutional questions.

Courts in general will avoid decision on grounds which question the constitutionality of a statute, if there are other grounds which primarily dispose of the case. See cases collected in Constitutional Law, I.

Refusal of all but constitutional question affecting the validity of the proceeding see also post ¶ 1228.

¶ 1164. Constitutional questions will not be considered nor passed upon, on appeal when other decisive questions are raised by the record which dispose of the case.—North Michigan Water Co. v. City of Escanaba, 199 Mich. 286.

¶ 1165. Constitutional questions will not be considered on error when other decisive questions are raised by the record which will dispose of the case.—Port Huron Engine & Thresher Co. v. Township of Port Huron, 191 Mich. 590.

§ 265. ——Questions affecting nonappellants and third persons.

Declination to consider errors not affecting appellant, see also ante §§ 219-223.
Party entitled to assign or urge error, see ante XI, D.
Decree or relief as to nonappealing parties, see post § 495.
Offsetting errors against nonappellants to meet changes in appellant's favor, see post § 521.

¶ 1166. A defense to a bill in equity need not be considered on appeal if the particular defendant who made it has not appealed.—Southern Michigan Cedar Lumber Co. v. McDonald, 57 Mich. 292.

¶ 1167. On appeal in chancery the rights of such defendants as have allowed the bill to be taken as confessed cannot be considered, except so far as necessary to determine the rights of those who appeared and defended.—Morgan v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 57 Mich. 430.

¶ 1168. On an appeal from a decree in an accounting none but the appellant's objections will be considered except where a restating of the account requires that because of a different method of computation an apparent error should be corrected.—Cutcheon v. Corbitt, 99 Mich. 584.

¶ 1169. The right of foreclosure purchasers who are not made parties and do not complain will not be considered on appeal.—Macomb v. Prentis, 57 Mich. 225.

§ 266. ——Questions eliminated by concessions.

Eliminated by concessions below, see also ante ¶ 1133.
Eliminated by estoppels, see also post ¶ 1300.
Adherence to conceded or assumed facts, see post § 269.
Waiver of right to urge error in general, see ante §§ 225-229; and see also Saving Questions for Review.
Nonwaiver of jurisdictional error, see ante § 225.
Passing on questions briefed but not answered in opposing brief, see post § 313.
Presumption as to admissions or concessions made below, see post § 350.
Addition to or amendment of record by stipulation, see ante § 248.

¶ 1170. Where counsel for defendant in error concedes that there are errors in the record and that the judgment must be reversed therefor, an argument on other points will not be heard.—Michigan Southern & Northern I. R. Co. v. Davis, 7 Mich. 10, note.

¶ 1171. Where one party concedes that the judgment of the court must be for his adversary, to the full extent of what he could claim on argument, the court will not hear an argument for the purpose of expressing their opinion on points thus rendered unnecessary to a decision of the cause.—Sanger v. Truesdail, 7 Mich. 9.

¶ 1172. Where, throughout a trial, parties have waived formal proofs and confined the controversy to the vital points in the case, objections that do not clearly go beyond the scope of such concessions and waiver will not be considered.—Earle v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co., 29 Mich. 414.

¶ 1173. Questions raised by one of the parties, both bringing error, will not be disposed of where he voluntarily waives them unless the case is to be reversed on the adverse party's appeal and where it is affirmed.—Chamberlain v. Detroit Stove Works, 103 Mich. 124.

¶ 1174. A concession of fact as to the adoption of resolutions by a city council which if made in an original bill would not have authorized an injunction, may be regarded as part of the bill when made.—Bogert v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 118 Mich. 457.

¶ 1175. Where plaintiff in error asks that the judgment be reversed without granting a new trial, or else that it be affirmed, the court will not consider the doubtful legal questions involved, where the case is not one in which the court would refuse a new trial on reversal.—Daniels v. Bay City Traction & Electric Co., 153 Mich. 96.

¶ 1176. Where after argument of a point on appeal, counsel for the appellant announced that there was no disagreement on the point between him and the opposing counsel and the trial court seemed to have been in accord with them, held that such point should not be considered.—Detroit United Ry. v. City of Pontiac, 193 Mich. 466.

§ 267. Adherence to theory of trial.

To issues made below, see post § 289.
Change of theory as departure from law of the case as laid down on former review, see post § 468.
Changing theory on retrial, see post § 559.
Shifting ground for directed verdict to avoid error, see also post ¶ 1494.

Necessity that bill or case should show theory of the case, see ante § 175.

¶ 1177. Cases will be reviewed and disposed of in the Supreme Court upon the points and theories presented in the court below.—Rivard v. Rivard, 109 Mich. 98.

¶ 1178. A party cannot upon review recover upon a theory upon which the case was not tried, and as to which his requests contained no allusion.—Truax v. Heartt, 135 Mich. 150.

¶ 1179. Where it is apparent from the record that plaintiff's recovery in a suit against a railroad company for the value of cattle killed was based upon the theory of conversion—the cattle being valuable for beef and the company having refused to allow plaintiff to take their carcasses—the case will be treated from this standpoint by this court.—Sampsell v. Chicago & G. T. Ry., 51 Mich. 606.

¶ 1180. A mortgagor cannot on appeal object to the finding in a foreclosure decree that one of the beneficiaries refused to accept the security of the mortgage and was therefore not entitled to participate, and demand a finding that, as such beneficiary agreed to assign the interest to a certain bank but failed to do so, such interest should inure to the bank, where the latter was not a party and the pleadings nowhere asserted the claim.—Gillam v. Barnes, 123 Mich. 119.

¶ 1181. In an action for damages caused by defendant's servants no question of master and servant will be considered on appeal where no such theory was advanced in defense on the trial below.—Canton v. Grinnell, 138 Mich. 590.

¶ 1182. A claim for services rendered quantum meruit, in a suit for breach of contract, not made in the trial court, will not be considered on appeal.—Kingston v. Decatur Township School District No. 5, 140 Mich. 603.

¶ 1183. On appeal the act of a passenger in sleeping, so that he was awakened at his station and thus tardily left the train and was hurt in an altercation between the conductor and riotous passengers occurring after a wait of 10 or 15 minutes at that station, cannot be considered as contributory negligence, where no such question was made on the trial. The same is true of a claim that he was negligent in getting too close to the place of the altercation.—Bass v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 142 Mich. 177.

¶ 1185. Where an action for slander was not tried upon the theory that the spoken words were privileged, the Supreme Court will not reverse a decision upon that theory although it may be said that the occasions when the words were first spoken might well bring them within the rule of privilege, when it also appeared from the defendant's own testimony there were other occasions when the words were repeated by him not within the protection of that rule.—Slater v. Walter, 148 Mich. 650.

¶ 1186. Where an action for negligence in leaving an unguarded ditch or excavation upon certain premises was tried without reference to the theory that the defendant was a mere licensee of the premises, such theory cannot be first urged on appeal.—Habina v. Twin City General Elec. Co., 150 Mich. 41.

¶ 1187. Where the defendants try the case upon the theory that plaintiffs were not entitled to recover because the declaration did not permit a recovery and was not amendable, they cannot urge upon appeal an entirely different theory of the case.—Howland v. Caille, 153 Mich. 349.

¶ 1188. A party cannot urge on appeal that parol evidence was admissible upon the ground of establishing fraud and deceit in the securing of a written contract, where such theory was not presented at the trial.—International Text-Book Co. v. Marvin, 166 Mich. 660.

¶ 1189. Where a plaintiff tries his case on a certain theory and is defeated on account of the incorrectness of such theory, he cannot ask for a reversal of the judgment against him on the ground that there were other theories upon which he was entitled to succeed.—L. Starks Co. v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 165 Mich. 642.

¶ 1190. The theory of defendant's case can not be changed on appeal and a new state of facts relied on in the court above to support his argument against the ruling of the court in refusing to admit an answer to question put to a witness by defendant.—Ketchell v. Keene, 171 Mich. 108.

¶ 1191. Where in an injunction suit a certain theory of recovery is not advanced in t bill of complaint or by counsel for complainant at the hearing, the Supreme Court will not consider same on appeal to sustain a decree for complainant.—Preston v. National Bank of Ionia, 169 Mich. 571.

§ 268. ——Inconsistent claims.

¶ 1192. A party cannot be permitted to occupy inconsistent positions where the exercise of assertion of one involves the abandonment of the other; he cannot take part in trial and still insist that case was not properly on docket for trial.—Peninsular Stove Co. v. Osmun, 73 Mich. 570.

¶ 1193. A plaintiff cannot maintain inconsistent positions; he cannot commence and prosecute suit upon one theory and then abandon that theory and adopt another entirely inconsistent with the first, where the assertion of the latter would positively negative the former.—Hinchman v. Weeks, 85 Mich. 535.

¶ 1194. A plaintiff in error cannot claim damages for a cause of action not urged below, e. g., where the declaration counted upon statutory liability for an injury caused by a defective sidewalk, and the declaration was not within the statute, plaintiff's position cannot be shifted so as to ask damages for an injury occasioned by a defective street.—Cooper v. City of Big Rapids, 67 Mich. 607.

¶ 1195. A claim that money was paid under duress cannot be considered on appeal when presented for the first time where the theory was payment under mistake.—Lamb v. Rathburn, 118 Mich. 666.

¶ 1196. Where in ejectment the plaintiff at the trial disclaimed all claim of adverse possession he cannot make such a claim when the cause is brought before the Supreme Court on error.—Coleman v. Robens, 146 Mich. 333.

¶ 1197. Where plaintiff tries a suit upon the theory that under defendant's amended notice attached to the general issue all liability is denied, he cannot on appeal demand judgment in his favor on the ground that the original notice filed under the general issue admits liability.—Hickey v. Lundy, 168 Mich. 336.

§ 269. ——Conceded or assumed facts.

¶ 1198. The want of averments necessary to set forth the special grievance relied on in a declaration for damages based on personal injury will not be considered for the first time on review if the case was not disposed of on such ground and if court and counsel below had treated the declaration as proper.—McKone v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 51 Mich. 601.

¶ 1199. A declaration twice in the circuit and once in the Supreme Court treated by all parties as containing a count for false imprisonment, upon a second review, is not open to the objection that it does not contain such count, and that the count relied upon is in fact a count for malicious prosecution.—Moore v. Thompson, 108 Mich. 283.

¶ 1200. An appellate court will not feel bound to consider whether it was technically proper to implead a particular defendant, if the written stipulations of the parties and their mode of conducting the litigation have been such as to practically waive the point, and no demurrer has been interposed.—Hopkins Mfg. Co. v. Ruggles, 51 Mich. 474.

¶ 1201. An insurance company which has defended an action upon an accident policy on the theory that there was a question for the jury as to whether the conduct of the insured had been such as to avoid the policy cannot, after an adverse judgment, complain that the court did not, on its own motion, decide the question and direct the verdict in its favor.—Johnson v. London Guarantee & Acc. Co., 115 Mich. 86.

¶ 1202. A suit in ejectment having been tried on the theory that plaintiffs were in possession, such possession being under an executory contract of sale, it cannot be first urged on appeal that plaintiffs have failed to show title in fee as set out in the declaration and therefore have failed to make their case.—Olin v. Henderson, 120 Mich. 149.

¶ 1204. Plaintiff in ejectment could not urge on appeal that she was in any event entitled to recover because no legal foreclosure of the mortgages in question was shown, where both parties led the trial court to understand that the controlling question was the validity of such mortgages, and the court directed a verdict for defendants on that assumption.—Shreeves v. Caldwell, 135 Mich. 323.

¶ 1205. Where both plaintiff and defendant in an action proceeded upon the theory that Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy's book, "Science and Health," is true, the case will be determined on that assumption.—Meyer v. Knott, 137 Mich. 714.

¶ 1206. In a suit on a contract with a corporation against a director of the same, on the ground that he had failed to sign the annual report, as required by Act No. 232, § 12, Pub. Acts 1903; as amended by Act No. 194, Pub. Acts 1905, the defendant cannot on appeal object that plaintiff failed to prove the corporation to be a Michigan corporation and subject to said statutes, where his counsel in his conduct of the trial went on the theory that it was a Michigan corporation.—Deloria v. Van Winkle, 162 Mich. 660.

§ 270. Questions settled on former appeal.

Former appeal as law of the case, see post XII, G.

¶ 1207. Where it is determined on an appeal from an order overruling a demurrer, that grounds for equitable relief were disclosed by a bill of complaint, the only question open for consideration on a subsequent appeal from a decision on the merits, is whether the proof sustains the allegations of the bill.—Olson v. Williams, 185 Mich. 294.

§ 271. Separate consideration of separate questions.

Errors not affecting all parties, or affecting opposite party in interest, who may complain, see ante §§ 222, 223.

Separation and exclusion of questions not pertinent to the decree or judgment appealed from, see post XII, B, 2.

¶ 1208. For the purpose of review on assignments that a deed was never delivered and that it was materially altered, the distinctness of the questions must be kept in mind; since if altered it was vitiated, even if delivered, and the question of delivery in that case would be an unnecessary one to consider.—Comstock v. Smith, 26 Mich. 306.

B. SCOPE AND SUBJECTS OF REVIEW.

1. In General; Restriction to Record and Bill or Case.

§ 272. On appeal generally.

Consideration of rejected evidence on trial de novo, see post § 474.

Contents and sufficiency of record proper, see ante §§ 99, 172, 173.

When case should be settled on appeal, what orders, see ante § 90.

Retention of appeal to be heard on record where no case was settled, see ante ¶ 675.

Certified copy of judge's minutes as insufficient chancery case, see ante ¶ 510.

Additions and amendments to record, see ante XI, F.

Impropriety of relief by modification as to nonappellants, see post § 520.

¶ 1209. The Supreme Court can only review or hear a case on the record as it comes up from the court below.—Bank of Michigan v. Niles, W. 398; Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 490; Adams v. Field, 25 Mich. 16; Booth v. Thompson, 49 Mich. 73.

¶ 1209a. Unless under very peculiar circumstances, and when all the facts are before it, the court, when the bill has been dismissed below on other grounds, will not pass upon the merits.—Kerr v. Lansing, 17 Mich. 34.

¶ 1210. Only questions properly raised by the record will be considered by the appellate court.—Trombley v. Kiersy, 147 Mich. 370.

¶ 1211. The Supreme Court in reviewing a chancery cause is confined to the case alleged; and if the proofs do not sustain it, or if they make out a different case, the bill will be dismissed.—Booth v. Thompson, 49 Mich. 73.

¶ 1212. Where the testimony in a chancery suit is taken in open court, and no case has been settled under the statute, it must stand for hearing on appeal upon the pleadings, orders, files and decree alone, and it will be presumed that there was evidence in the lower court to sustain the decree as made.—Sheldon v. Weatherwax, 75 Mich. 418; Stebbins v. Patterson, 108 Mich. 537.

¶ 1213. Either of the parties has the right to procure a case to be settled; and if the appeal is regularly taken, and neither party takes steps to have a case made and settled, the cause will stand for hearing without the testimony, and it will then devolve upon the appellant to show that the decree is not warranted by the pleadings, the presumption being that there was evidence below to authorize it.—Wright v. Dudley, 8 Mich. 74.

¶ 1214. Appeals in equity must be heard on the identical facts shown in the lower court, and the trial judge must settle the testimony, which he may do with the aid of the stenographer's minutes and on hearing counsel; but the stenographer's notes are not admissible as evidence on the appeal, and the judge must set out his own statement.—People's Ice Co. v. The Excelsior, 43 Mich. 336.

¶ 1215. The Supreme Court is bound by the record, and cannot take notice of allegations made by counsel on the hearing and not appearing of record.—Michigan & Ohio Plaster Co. v. White, 44 Mich. 25.

¶ 1216. The Supreme Court, upon an appeal in an action for an accounting, is limited to an examination of such evidence of mistake in the theory of making up an account, and to such evidences of improper allowance or disallowance of items as counsel are able to point out and sustain by the record where it does not have before it the details, books and memoranda which were before the trial court.—Steward v. Traverse City State Bank, 187 Mich. 387.

§ 273. On writ of error generally.

Contents, requisites and sufficiency of record proper, see ante §§ 99, 100, 172, 173.

Additions and amendments to record, see ante XI, F.

What questions may be reviewed on the record, where it is in some respects deficient, see post XII, B, 3.

Matters tending to sustain judgment, see post § 316.

Restriction to questions appearing on record proper, where exceptions are not apparent, see post §§ 319-321.

Restriction to evidence on review of directed verdict, see post § 388.

Restriction of rehearing to record, see post § 548.

The doctrine that the review will not be extended beyond matters apparent by the record, bill or case is also applied in the holdings that the record must suffice to show the matters urged as error. These cases are collected ante XI, B.

Preparation of the record, bill or case, see ante VI, D.

Sufficiency of record to present particular errors, see ante XI, A, B.

Sufficiency of the record to present jurisdictional points, see ante §§ 172, 180.

Inefficacy of recitals in judgment to present matter, see ante § 93.

Improper matters in the record, see post §§ 279-282.

¶ 1217. Such decisions only are reviewed in civil cases upon writ of error as are apparent upon the record, or as have been excepted to at the trial and have been made a part of the record by bill of exceptions.—Pearsons v. Eaton, 18 Mich. 79; People ex rel. Wiley v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 29 Mich. 487.

¶ 1218. Matters not in the record cannot be passed upon.—Duvernois v. Estate of Kaiser, 75 Mich. 431.

¶ 1219. Matters argued but not contained in the bill of exceptions will not be considered by the Supreme Court on error.—Holmes v. Smith, 149 Mich. 327.

¶ 1220. On writ of error, the Supreme Court exercises appellate jurisdiction and must dispose of the case on the record as made.—Boston Piano & Music Co. v. Pontiac Clothing Co., 199 Mich. 141.

¶ 1221. Allegations of error cannot prevail unless supported by the record.—Snyder v. Willey, 33 Mich. 483.

¶ 1222. A statute of another state cannot be construed in this court except upon the showing as made thereof in the trial court.—Belleville Sav. Bank v. Richardi, 56 Mich. 453.

¶ 1223. The objection that questions were leading cannot be noticed if not brought upon the record; nor, in general, if it is on the record.—Lyon v. Chamberlain, 41 Mich. 119.

¶ 1224. It cannot be maintained on error that defendant should be subrogated to the rights of a former mortgagee to pay whose claim a second mortgage was given, where it fails to appear that at the trial the second mortgagee claimed any rights growing out of the first mortgage.—Gregg v. Fox, 117 Mich. 495.

¶ 1225. An objection that an action for damages for causing death was erroneously sought under the "Death Act" instead of the "Survival Act," was not considered on appeal, where the bill of exceptions stated that the question was not raised during the trial.—Hewitt v. East Jordan Lumber Co., 136 Mich. 110.

§ 274.——To judgment on certiorari from justice.

Scope of the questions open, see post § 302.

¶ 1226. On error from the affirmance of a justice's judgment on certiorari, the review is confined to the grounds set forth in the affidavit for the certiorari.—Lee v. Hardgrave, 3 Mich. 77; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Russ, 47 Mich. 500; Wilson v. McCrillies, 50 Mich. 347.

¶ 1227. On error bringing up a case affirmed on certiorari to a justice, the case is to be heard on the justice's return alone; the Supreme Court cannot regard a certificate by the county clerk that part of the judgment was collected by justice's execution before the decision in the circuit. Questions of payment can arise only when it is sought to enforce the judgment.—Dooley v. Eilbert, 47 Mich. 615.

¶ 1228. Where, on error to review an order of the circuit court quashing a writ of certiorari issued to review proceedings for the opening of a street and condemning land therefor, it appears that the only question raised by the affidavit for certiorari was the alleged unconstitutionality of the act under which the proceedings were taken, only that question will be considered.—Woodmere Cemetery v. Roulo, 104 Mich. 595.

§ 275. ——On consolidated record.

¶ 1229. Where actions have been properly consolidated a writ of error will not bring up matters preceding the consolidation.—Harris v. Sweetland, 48 Mich. 110.

§ 276. On case made.

Nature of remedy by case made, and propriety of it as compared with other remedy, see ante § 5.

Contents and sufficiency of case made, see ante §§ 105, 196.

Matters improperly in case, see post § 283.

Review of findings, see post § 463.

§ 277. Omissions from record.

Omissions to find facts, see post §§ 455, 456.

Presumptions as to omitted matters, see post §§ 361-393.

¶ 1230. An affidavit for a default is no part of the record, and its absence is no ground of error; its purpose is only to inform the court that no plea has been filed, of which fact the court is bound to take judicial notice.—Leonard v. Woodward, 34 Mich. 514; Steers v. Holmes, 79 Mich. 430.

§ 278. Acts, evidence or demeanor not reducible to record.

Manner of incorporating books, papers, etc., in bill, see ante § 104.

¶ 1231. The manner of the circuit court in charging the jury, or the emphasis used, cannot be reviewed where the words employed are not prejudicial or misleading.—Gibbs v. Johnson, 63 Mich. 671.

¶ 1232. Defendant introduced in evidence a demonstration to show that plaintiff could not have been injured in the way he claimed. The trial court did not deem it conclusive in favor of the defendant, and submitted it along with the other evidence to the jury. Held, that the Supreme Court was not in a position to reverse him on the point.—Lehto v. Atlantic Min. Co., 152 Mich. 412.

§ 279. Improper or extraneous matters in record.

Consideration of matters in record but not properly saved for review, see post § 317 et seq.

In record of arbitration, see also post ¶ 1310.

Additions and amendments to record, see ante XI, F.

¶ 1233. Matters appearing in the transcript filed, but which constitute no proper part of the record, cannot be considered by the court, e. g., a motion to set aside the service of a declaration, appearing in the return to a writ of error.—Millerd v. Reeves, 1 Mich. 107.

¶ 1234. Failure to file an affidavit of defendant's default for neglecting to plead to the declaration cannot be taken advantage of on error, being no part of the record.—Steers v. Holmes, 79 Mich. 430; Leonard v. Woodward, 34 Mich. 514.

§ 280. ——Affidavits to motions.

Affidavits on appeal from justice as foreign matter, see ante § 100.

¶ 1235. Affidavits relating to a motion, but not regarded by the court in deciding it, are not part of the record and will not be regarded on error from the order made.—Noble v. Bourke, 44 Mich. 193.

¶ 1236. An omission in the record cannot be supplied by an ex parte affidavit, and such affidavits when filed are not considered except as they relate to the application on which they are made.—Wardle v. Cummings, 86 Mich. 395.

¶ 1237. In an action for injuries to goods in transit, counsel for defendant filed with his motion for a new trial certain affidavits to the effect that the goods in question had been received in good condition, from defendant, by a connecting carrier. The trial judge having certified that the affidavits were not considered because copies of them were not served upon counsel for plaintiff, they will not be considered by this court, although copies of them have been improperly incorporated in the printed record.—Reason v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 150 Mich. 50.

§ 281. ——Recitals in orders or judgments.

Sufficiency of recitals and excerpts in new trial order to carry affidavits into record, see ante ¶ 831.

¶ 1238. Recitals in an order denying a motion for a new trial are no part of the record in error.—Monnier v. Mizner, 17 Mich. 271.

§ 282. ——Evidence improperly presented.

Necessity that bill or case be properly settled, see ante § 110 et seq.

¶ 1239. The evidence is no part of the record unless embodied in a case made, or bill of exceptions, and should not be returned with or among the findings of the court; and if it is, the Supreme Court will not consider it.—Peabody v. McAvoy, 23 Mich. 526.

¶ 1240. Where the evidence is not made part of a bill of exceptions, but is merely printed with it, the Supreme Court will not examine it to ascertain the facts.—People v. Cline, 44 Mich. 290.

¶ 1241. Where the only assignments of error are that the findings of fact do not sus-tain the conclusions of law, the evidence is no part of the record and cannot be examined.—Vyne v. Glenn, 41 Mich. 112.

§ 283. Improper matters in case made.

Proper contents, see ante § 105.

¶ 1242. Mere deductions from the evidence that the "facts proven" were as stated, made after judgment as a basis for review, are not part of the record and cannot be brought up on a case made after judgment. —Hedges v. Hibbard, 46 Mich. 551.

§ 284. Resort to other records or cases.

Judicial notice in aid of record, see post § 344.

Reference in brief to other record, see ante § 236.

¶ 1243. Where for some reason not shown by the judgment a verdict had been directed in a former suit between the same parties, it is competent to resort to the record of such other case to show why the court had directed a verdict and what was the issue upon which the direction was made.—Lansing v. Mich. Cent. R. Co., 143 Mich. 48.

¶ 1244. Where mandamus was denied without any written opinion being filed, the court cannot, on appeal in a subsequent proceeding, ascertain by consulting their recollections, the ground upon which the decision was made in order to determine if it was res adjudicata of the case at bar since they can avail themselves of no evidence which was not presented to the lower court. —Hoffman v. Silverthorn, 137 Mich. 60.

§ 285. Extraneous matters; stipulations and admissions.

Making questions by consent, see ante § 260.

Reference in brief to extrinsic matters, see ante § 236.

Necessity of resort to court below for relief from alimony decree on basis of subsequent facts, see Divorce, X, E.

¶ 1245. The court is confined to an examination of the errors found in the transcript, and cannot assume, as a part of the case, facts not appearing by the transcript, though assumed by the counsel on the argument, and though, in virtue of a parol admission, they were treated as a part of the case in the court below.—Bailey v. De Graff, 2 D. 169.

¶ 1246. The Supreme Court cannot resort to evidence outside of the record to add to, or test the correctness of, the finding of facts made by the court sitting without a jury.—Peabody v. McAvoy, 23 Mich. 528.

¶ 1247. The Supreme Court cannot decide whether there are facts to support a verdict without having before them all the facts producible by a finding; and they cannot, for the purpose of learning all the facts, investigate statements agreed upon by counsel and submitted, in connection with only partial testimony, as the sole basis for a verdict.—Watts v. Tittabawassee Boom Company, 47 Mich. 540.

¶ 1248. The Supreme Court cannot go outside of the bill of exceptions even to save error.—Alderton v. Wright, 81 Mich. 294.

¶ 1249. The Supreme Court cannot undertake to construe an insurance policy or other contract upon mere stipulations of counsel as to its legal effect.—American Ins. Co. v. Reed, 40 Mich. 622.

¶ 1250. The court cannot, on appeal, draw any inference contrary to the findings of the court below, from statements in counsel's brief or from correspondence printed therein which was not put in evidence at the trial.—Hoffman v. Silverthorn, 137 Mich. 60.

¶ 1251. The court of appeal will be governed by the record rather than the claim of counsel as to an agreement of counsel at the trial upon an issue of fact.—Spacek v. Schaub, 140 Mich. 212.

2. Nature of Cause and of Judgment, and Matters Brought Up With It.

[Note. The question, whether a particular judgment, decree or order is appealable or is subject to a writ of error, is distinct from the question what errors may be brought up by appealing from a given decree or by writ of error to a given judgment. The former question is treated ante III, and the latter in this division.]

Questions not open because not saved and presented by objections, assignments and argument, see post XII, B, 3.

Sustaining action for different reason than one assigned by trial court, see post ¶ 1345.

Trial de novo in appeals, see post XII, H.

Consideration of rejected evidence on chancery trial de novo, see post § 474.

Extraneous matters as ground for rehearing, see post § 538.

¶ 1252. Where appeal is taken from a final decree all previous orders connected with the decree and affecting the merits are open to review.—Benedict v. Thompson, 2 D. 299.

§ 287. Matters anterior to cause.

¶ 1253. The assignee with notice of a fraudulent chattel mortgage given in anticipation of a general assignment by the mortgagor of his property for the benefit of creditors is not concerned with the avails of the mortgaged property, and cannot, on appeal from the final decree made in a suit brought to set aside said mortgage, in which the appointment of a receiver by the circuit judge at chambers is confirmed, object to such appointment as beyond the power of the circuit judge to make, no appeal having been taken therefrom.—Burnham v. Dillon, 100 Mich. 352.

¶ 1254. While the appointment at chambers of a receiver in a suit brought to set aside an alleged fraudulent chattel mortgage, executed by an insolvent debtor in anticipation of an assignment of his property for the benefit of creditors, is irregular, the objection is not available to the assignor on his appeal from the final decree in the case, made upon a full hearing, in which the appointment is confirmed.—Burnham v. Dillon, 100 Mich. 359.

§ 288. Removal and remand from federal court.

¶ 1255. On appeal from a final decree entered in a circuit court of this state the action of a federal court whereby the cause was remanded to such circuit court is not reviewable.—Lewis v. Weidenfeld, 114 Mich. 581.

§ 289. Matters not in issue and not tried.

¶ 1256. An issue not presented by the pleadings below cannot be considered on appeal.—Langley v. Harmon, 97 Mich. 347.

¶ 1257. Assignments of error relating to the admission of evidence to prove the manner of execution of an instrument expressly counted upon in the declaration will not be considered where no affidavit denying execution was filed.—Jennison v. Haire, 29 Mich. 207.

¶ 1258. The Supreme Court cannot on error pass upon a defense of fact not submitted to the jury, and not admitted by the opposite party.—Castner v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 46 Mich. 15.

¶ 1259. The objection that instead of a suit on a residuary legatee's and executor's bond to pay all debts proceedings should have been taken by scire facias on the footing of a former judgment for the penalty of the same bond is disregarded on review, if not properly raised by the pleadings.—Durfee v. Abbott, 50 Mich. 479.

¶ 1260. A plaintiff in error cannot claim damages for a cause of action not urged below, e. g., where the declaration counted upon an injury caused by a defective sidewalk, but was insufficient, plaintiff's position cannot be shifted so as to ask damages for an injury occasioned by a defective street.—Cooper v. City of Big Rapids, 67 Mich. 607.

¶ 1261. Where a bill complained of nine real estate transactions, the issue on appeal could not be broadened so as to cover more than the number averred in the bill.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 1262. An appealing defendant who applied under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10995, 10996, for the allowance in ejectment of the value of improvements, cannot after plaintiff has elected under section 10997 to take the value of the land, as he might under that statute, claim that such statute, being the general law applicable in ejectment, does not apply where the defendant holds under a tax homestead in view of the statute (Tax Law, § 104), which specially gives to tax purchasers a right to recover for improvements and a lien for same. The applicability of the general law not having been questioned on trial cannot be questioned on error.—Platz v. Englehardt, 138 Mich. 485.

¶ 1263. Objections to a special assessment not contained in contestant's answer to the petition of the auditor general cannot be considered on appeal.—Auditor General v. Hoffman, 132 Mich. 198.

¶ 1264. A defense not contained in the defendant's plea and notice of special defense will not be considered on appeal.—City of Kalamazoo v. Perrin, 194 Mich. 484.

¶ 1265. Comp. L. 1897, § 826, establishing the presumption of execution of a negotiable instrument unless denied under oath at the time of pleading, cannot be urged first on appeal to impose a liability on a school district order, where the plaintiff declared orally on the common counts and there was no suggestion either in justice court or in circuit court that the testimony of non-execution was incompetent under the pleadings.—First Nat. Bank of Cassopolis v. Carter, 138 Mich. 421.

¶ 1266. Claims not set up in a bill to vacate a foreclosure decree cannot be raised on appeal.—Gaines v. Simons, 124 Mich. 47[illegible]

¶ 1267. In an action to recover taxes paid under protest, grounds for reversal were not considered which were not covered by the protest filed.—Aurora Iron Min. Co. v. City of Ironwood, 119 Mich. 325.

¶ 290. Rulings relating to summons or capias.

¶ 1268. Proceedings on a motion to set aside a capias ad respondendum constitute no part of the record proper, and are, therefore, not subject to review on writ of error on final judgment.—Miller v. Rosier, 31 Mich. 475.

¶ 1269. The question of jurisdiction of the trial court, the defendant not having waived the same by appearing, is properly raised in the court of appeal through a writ of error and assignments to review the judgment; where, in an action against a fraternal benefit association, the proceedings and judgment had by declaration and rule to plead are void on the face of the record for want of jurisdiction, irrespective of the question whether defendant's motion in the lower court to quash the affidavit of service and the order denying the motion are part of the record proper.—Monger v. New Era Ass'n., 145 Mich. 688.

¶ 1270. The denial of a motion to quash a writ of capias ad respondendum is not subject to review by writ of error after final judgment.—Miller v. Du Val, 191 Mich. 386.

¶ 1271. Any error of a court in overruling a motion to quash a writ of capias ad respondendum for insufficiency of the affidavit for the writ may not be reviewed on writ of error after final judgment.—Baxter v. Woodward, 191 Mich. 379.

¶ 291. Questions of practice at trial.

Review of discretionary rulings, see post XII, D.

Review of orders regulating reception and order of proof, see post § 405.

¶ 1272. Appeal will not review rulings of the court on matters of practice not affecting the merits.—Hess v. Final, 32 Mich. 515.

¶ 1273. The question of the validity of a notice of trial will not be reviewed on writ of error.—Worth v. Hand, 30 Mich. 264.

¶ 1274. The question of double costs, under Comp. L. 1871, § 4246, How St., § 5704, granting a penalty for refusal, on tender and request, to discharge a mortgage, more properly arises on the final hearing in the circuit than on an appeal from a decree on demurrer.—Collar v. Harrison, 28 Mich. 518.

¶ 1275. The affirmance by the trial court, on appeal, of the clerk's taxation of costs, cannot be considered upon writ of error to review the judgment.—Moore v. Daiber, 92 Mich. 402.

§ 293. Judgment on plea or demurrer.

Review of demurrer with appeal from final judgment, see post § 296.

¶ 1276. On appeal from an order overruling a general and special demurrer, the statute authorizing such appeal (Laws 1883, Act No. 58) only allows a consideration of the questions raised by the general demurrer.—Shaw v. Chase, 77 Mich. 436.

¶ 1278. Grounds of demurrer to a bill for partition that it did not specifically set forth a party's source of title were not considered on appeal, where the demurrer did not specify such ground.—Martens v. Cook, 135 Mich. 35.

¶ 1279. An objection that a bill is improperly framed cannot be considered upon an appeal from an order dismissing it on demurrer for multifariousness and want of equity.—Proctor v. Plumer, 112 Mich. 393.

¶ 1280. On error by respondent to review a judgment which was rendered providing for the forfeiture of the rights and franchises of a private corporation under Comp. L. 1897, § 9950, which judgment was rendered pursuant to a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the questions proper to be considered and determined are those arising upon the practice followed and upon the information and plea.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Grand Rapids Sticky Fly Paper Co., 144 Mich. 221.

§ 294. Judgment without findings.

¶ 1281. A question not raised by the record and without any finding of facts to support it cannot be considered.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 Mich. 453.

¶ 1282. Where, on appeal from a judgment in a case tried without a jury, the record contains no findings of fact, the question whether the evidence sustains the judgment will not be considered.—Wickes v. Pulfrey, 131 Mich. 407.

¶ 1283. A case begun by attachment, tried by the court without requests for findings and taken up on error from a judgment without findings presents nothing to review.—Daniels v. Crane, 141 Mich. 499; McDonell v. Union Trust Co., 139 Mich. 386.

§ 295. Interlocutory decrees reviewable with final decree.

Matters reviewable on appeal from intermediate final order, see post § 307.
Reviewableness with final decree as test of appealability of judgment on dilatory plea, see ante § 40, ¶ 184.
Review of discretionary rulings, see post XII, D.

¶ 1284. There are interlocutory orders the merits of which are not open to re-examination on appeal from the final decree.—Miller v. McLaughlin, 135 Mich. 646.

¶ 1285. Where the proceedings are such as to give rise to more than one appealable final order or decree, it is questionable how far the court, on an appeal from the later order or decree, could interfere with matters settled by the prior one from which no appeal had been taken, if the subsequent proceedings had developed no new facts bearing upon the matters originally determined.—Brown v. Bronson, 35 Mich. 415.

¶ 1286. An order denying a petition for leave to file a supplemental bill in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien is not subject to review on appeal from the decree, adjudging a lien, where no appeal was taken from the order denying such petition.—Zilz v. Wilcox, 190 Mich. 486.

¶ 1287. A motion to dismiss a petition to set aside tax sales is in no sense a demurrer, and on appeal from a decree granting the petition, the Supreme Court cannot consider the chancellor's order denying the motion or the ex parte affidavits submitted by the defendant in support of his motion to be permitted to appear generally.—Aztec Copper Co. v. Auditor General, 128 Mich. 615.

§ 296. ——On demurrer or plea.

Matters open on appeal from judgment on demurrer or plea, see ante § 293.
Waiver of point in court above or by pleading over, see ante §§ 226, 227.

¶ 1288. Where a demurrer was overruled and the defendant then answered, and the case was heard on pleadings and proofs, and decree entered for complainant, it was held that an appeal therefrom opened for review the decision on the demurrer.—Bennett v. Nichols, 12 Mich. 22.

¶ 1289. Where, the question presented by the demurrer was one that might have been raised at the trial, and where counsel for both parties presented full briefs, the court passed upon the merits of the case; although error lies only from the judgment.—Fitzsimmons v. Milwaukee, L. S. & M. R. Co., 98 Mich. 257.

¶ 1290. The sufficiency of a bill in chancery cannot be raised on appeal where no appeal is taken from the decision of the lower court overruling a demurrer to it.—McManus v. City of Petoskey, 164 Mich. 390.

¶ 1291. The proper way to secure the review of an objection that a bill does not state a cause of action, is by appeal from an order overruling a demurrer upon such ground.—Babcock v. Babcock, 150 Mich. 558.

¶ 1292. The decision of the trial court in sustaining a demurrer cannot be considered where there was no appeal therefrom but from the decree of dismissal, and it will be considered that complainant has acquiesced therein.—Carpenter v. Auditor General, 144 Mich. 251.

§ 297. Matters subsequent to decree or judgment.

¶ 1293. Proceedings subsequent to the decree appealed from are not reviewable.—Kellogg v. Hamilton, 43 Mich. 269.

¶ 1294. Matter set up in defense to a motion for a writ of assistance cannot be received to affect the decree determining the defendant's rights.—Howe v. Lemon, 47 Mich. 544.

§ 298. Grant or refusal of new trial.

¶ 1296. Assignments of error based on a refusal to grant a new trial cannot be considered upon writ of error to review the judgment.—Moore v. Daiber, 92 Mich. 402.

¶ 1297. Findings on a motion for a new trial cannot be brought up for review with the rest of the case.—People v. Pearsall, 50 Mich. 233.

§ 299. Collateral and related decrees.

¶ 1298. Where on appeal from a decree of divorce the record of a collateral pro ceeding, in which conveyances by defendant were set aside, was sent up with the divorce record, but no appeal was taken from the collateral decree, nothing could be done with it.—German v. German, 57 Mich. 256.

¶1299. The order of the court setting aside an assessment of members of a mutual fire insurance company, in receivership proceedings, is not reviewable in an appeal from a member of such company from a judgment rendered against him for a subsequent assessment, unless such order was void.—Nichol v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 424.

¶1300. On error to the second of two certioraris taken to the circuit court from the action of the township board whereby it sought to review the decision of the highway commissioner that a proposed road was necessary, no question as to the regularity of the first attempted action by the township board will be entertained, where petitioner for the first certiorari thereby admitted its irregularity conclusively, and where the other parties by failing to bring any appeal (error) have allowed the circuit court's decision that it was irregular to become conclusive on them.—Sanger v. Township Board of Brownstown, 118 Mich. 19.

§ 300. Judgment in garnishment proceedings.

¶1301. Where a plaintiff sees fit to submit his case in the circuit court without taking, or attempting to take, advantage of the provisions of How. St., § 8085, by impleading a party shown by the disclosure to claim the indebtedness due from the garnishee, or the property in his hands, the Supreme Court cannot aid him, but must pass upon the judgment as rendered at the circuit.—Kennedy v. McLellan, 76 Mich. 598.

¶1302. In reviewing a judgment rendered in favor of garnishees on the trial of an issue formed on their disclosure, the case stands as it did at the time of such trial, unaffected by a subsequent stipulation.—Kennedy v. McLellan, 76 Mich. 598.

§ 301. Decisions on appeal from probate court.

On review of findings, see post § 459.
Matters for consideration on appeal from probate, see Probate Courts, III.

¶1303. The Supreme Court, upon writ of error in a will contest, can only determine whether proper rules were followed in the circuit court in determining the issue as to whether the paper propounded is the will of the testator since that is all that the probate and circuit courts could decide. They could not determine whether the proponent was barred from claiming under it.—Barney v. Barney, 187 Mich. 145; In re Barney's Will, Id. (Brooke, C. J., and Moore, J., dissenting).

¶1304. Where the circuit court retains jurisdiction of an appeal from the probate court by an order reinstating the appeal, the complaining party, provided he does nothing amounting to a waiver, may review the order by writ of error after final judgment.—Gifford v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 189 Mich. 546.

§ 302. Decisions on appeal or certiorari from justice.

Review of findings, see post § 458.
Construction of the justice's record and affidavit, see post § 339.

¶1305. Where a justice's judgment in a suit against a justice of the peace for false imprisonment by the issuing of a warrant against the plaintiff is brought to the circuit by certiorari and there affirmed, and the decision of the circuit is brought up for review, only such objections to the validity of the proceedings for the imprisonment as were passed upon in the court below will be considered by the Supreme Court.—Pardee v. Smith, 27 Mich. 33.

¶1306. A motion to dismiss an appeal from a justice's court on the ground that the sureties did not justify is not brought up by writ of error.—Conrad v. Freeland, 18 Mich. 255.

¶1307. Judgment having been entered on appeal in the circuit court against a surety on the appeal bond from justice's court without notice to him, he moved to vacate it on the ground, supported by affidavits, that he executed the bond solely upon the condition, not performed, that another was to become co-surety. Held, the motion having been denied, that the only errors, if any, which could be considered on the surety's writ of error were those going to the justice's jurisdiction over the persons of the defendants.—Buehler v. DeLemos, 84 Mich. 554.

§ 303. Judgments based on arbitration.

¶1308. A submission of the subject-matter of a suit to arbitration is a waiver of all errors in the action up to the time of making submission.—Vanderhoof v. Dean, 1 Mich. 463.

¶1309. Where arbitrators, to whom, in accordance with a policy of insurance, a difference between insurer and insured has been submitted for final decision, wrongly construe legal rights and exclude admissible testimony, such errors cannot be corrected on error in reviewing the trial of a subsequent action at law between the parties on the policy, if at all corrigible.—Raymond v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 114 Mich. 386.

¶ 1310. Where a pending suit is submitted to arbitrators and their award confirmed by the court and a judgment rendered upon it, the record, under Comp. L. 1871, § 6903, How. St., § 8488, does not regularly include the evidence before the arbitrators nor requests made to them to find specifically on certain points, nor their findings in response to such requests; and the fact that these were returned by the arbitrators and filed in the court below, and are embraced in the return to the writ of error in this case, does not authorize the Supreme Court to review them; and assignments of error based upon them will not be considered.—Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. v. Hughes, 28 Mich. 186.

§ 304. Accounting and partition decrees.

Declination of unnecessary questions, see ante §§ 261-265.

¶ 1311. One who fails to appeal from a decree in partition proceedings determining the title of the parties to be that of cotenants cannot have the question of title reviewed upon appeal from a subsequent decree, entered upon report of the commissioners, fixing the rights of the parties to the rents and profits.—Hunt v. Hunt, 109 Mich. 399.

¶ 1312. A decree directing that partition be had, not appealed from, is not before the court for consideration upon an appeal from an order confirming the report of the commissioners in partition.—Austin v. Austin, 132 Mich. 453.

§ 305. Foreclosure decrees.

Declination of unnecessary questions, see ante §§ 261-265.

¶ 1313. A decretal order in a foreclosure suit in chancery, settling the allowance of payments on the mortgage, and referring the cause to a commissioner for computation of amount due on the basis of such allowance, is an interlocutory proceeding merely, and will be brought to this court for review by appeal from the final decree for sale of the mortgaged premises.—Morris v. Morris, 5 Mich. 171.

¶ 1314. Matters disposed of without objection before the decree in foreclosure cannot be litigated upon an appeal therefrom, or upon a motion to dismiss such appeal, if the defendants were properly brought in and answered. The proper remedy after decree is by bill of review.—Burt v. Thomas, 49 Mich. 462.

¶ 1315. On appeal from the confirmation of a foreclosure sale the bill cannot be attacked nor the decree reviewed if the court below had jurisdiction.—Farmers' Bank v. Quick, 71 Mich. 534.

¶ 1316. A bill to restrain a foreclosure by advertisement was filed to which the mortgagee answered and cross-complained asking foreclosure. The bill's allegations that the mortgage was barred by limitations were denied by defendant, who recovered a decree for foreclosure of a part of the alleged debt. There was also a finding that the mortgage was not barred, coupled with recitals that the evidence was conflicting as to payments which would extend the period but with a finding that within the period a settlement was agreed on for a sum less than the claim to be taken as full payment. It was decreed that this should be paid and foreclosure had for that amount. Held, on appeal by cross-complainant for insufficiency of the amount, that the finding as to amount due was open to review, the want of appeal by complainant from the finding that the mortgage was not barred being not conclusive that the full amount was due.—Carr v. Carr, 138 Mich. 396.

§ 306. Contempt orders.

¶ 1317. Whether in an appeal from proceedings for contempt in disobeying an injunction the Supreme Court can consider the facts brought out by the answers to interrogatories filed, showing want of jurisdiction, or can look only to the case made by the bill in the court below, quere.—People ex rel. Brewer v, Kidd, 23 Mich. 440.

¶ 1318. The appointment of a receiver under a creditor's bill cannot be reviewed on appeal from an order holding defendant in contempt for not assigning to such receiver as ordered by the court if there was not a total want of jurisdiction to appoint him.—Bagley v. Scudder, 66 Mich. 97.

¶ 1319. The fact that an appeal, instead of certiorari, or, after commitment, habeas corpus, is taken to review an order adjudging appellant guilty of contempt in violating an injunction, will not operate to enlarge the field of inquiry in the Supreme Court beyond what it would be had the review been sought in the proper way.—Enterprise Foundry Co. v. Iron Molders' Union of North America, Local No. 186, 149 Mich. 31.

¶ 1320. On an appeal from an order adjudging defendant in contempt for failure to pay alimony, the court will not pass upon the sufficiency of a plea of a prior adjudication pending in the court below.—Filer v. Filer, 77 Mich. 469.

§ 307. Scope of interlocutory appeal; injunctions or receiverships.

Review of interlocutory order with final decree, see ante § 295.

Scope of trial de novo, reservation of questions, see post XII, H, § 473, XIII, A, B.

¶ 1321. On appeal from the dismissal of a bill made on hearing of an interlocutory petition for a receiver, and thereby cutting off a hearing on proof as to other matters alleged and relief sought, the sufficiency of the bill will be reviewed as on demurrer.—Albion Malleable Iron Co. v. First National Bank, 116 Mich. 218.

¶ 1322. Where the sufficiency of a bill filed by the minority stockholders of a corporation, alleging mismanagement of the corporate affairs and a conspiracy by the directors and majority stockholders to secure the property to the detriment of the remaining stockholders, praying for the appointment of a receiver, that the corporation be dissolved and for injunctional relief, is challenged by the defendants but not by demurrer and not with respect to the power of the court, upon final hearing, to appoint a receiver to wind up the affairs of the corporation, whether the bill states a case for equitable cognizance is a question not presented on a review of orders, before a hearing upon the merits, appointing a receiver and granting an injunction practically bringing to an end the corporate affairs.—Town v. Duplex-Power Car Co., 142 Mich. 519.

§ 308. Scope of appeal from order after decree.

See also ante ¶ 196.

Appeal from order substituting security for alimony as reaching question whether original order exacted enough security, see also Divorce, X, E.

¶ 1323. Where the appeal is from a final order (as an order confirming an appraisal and set-off under a decree in a mortgage case) the court is restricted to a review of so much of the proceedings as are connected with the final order.—Benedict v. Thompson, 2 D. 299.

¶ 1324. Where no appeal is taken from a decree which determines all matters except as equity reserved for further consideration, and the only appeal is from a subsequent decretal order determining the reserved equity, the matters determined by the first decree are not open to review on the appeal from the decretal order.—Hack v. Norris, 46 Mich. 567.

¶ 1325. A permission in a mortgage foreclosure decree, for 20 days' time to redeem, was an act of grace and not of right, and the decree not having been appealed from, the question could not in any event be raised on the review of a decree dismissing a bill to set aside the foreclosure.—McIntyre v. Wycoff, 119 Mich. 557.

¶ 1326. An appeal from an order reducing the amount of alimony awarded by a decree of divorce does not bring up for review the original decree, the question for consideration being whether such new facts have arisen since the decree as to justify its modification.—Smith v. Smith, 139 Mich. 133.

§ 309. ——Grant or denial of review in equity.

¶ 1327. Where a petition for a rehearing or for leave to file a bill of review is broad enough to call for the rescission of an order for execution for the deficiency on foreclosure, the Supreme Court may set it aside on an appeal from an order refusing such relief.—Vaughan v. Black, 63 Mich. 215.

¶ 1328. On appeal from an order of the lower court denying a petition for a bill of review, the stenographer's minutes of testimony and rulings cannot be considered by the Supreme Court where not embodied in the petitions below, and therefore not considered by the trial court.—Roberge v. De Lisle, 158 Mich. 16; De Lisle v. Wayne Circuit Judge, Id.

3. Scope of Questions Saved and Presented.

§ 310. In general.

In order to have review of a question on appeal or error it is generally essential that appropriate objection be made below on which the court rules, and unless the statutes have dispensed therewith this must be followed with an exception by which the matter is saved in the record by a bill of exceptions or case. Questions not so saved are not reviewed. As to the procedure in the trial court to save them, see Saving Questions for Review.

Questions not open because not pertinent to the judgment or decree appealed from, see ante XII, B, 2.

Questions not open because not within the record brought up, see ante XII, B, 1, and see also ante XI, B.

Restriction on case made to matters passed on below, see ante § 254.

Questions reviewable on record proper without exceptions or findings, see post §§ 319-322.

On review of verdicts and findings, see post XII, E, 2.

Trial de novo in appeals, see post XII, H.

Consideration of rejected evidence on trial de novo, see post § 474.

Refusal to consider questions become moot, see ante § 259.

Declination to pass unnecessarily on questions not considered below, see also ante § 256.

Showing in record for review of particular errors, see ante § 179 et seq.

Party entitled to complain, and waiver or estoppel of right, see ante XI, D.

Dismissal or affirmance on hearing for want of any question preserved and presented, see post § 480.

¶ 1329. The scope of inquiry in this court is limited by the suggestions made to the trial court and the errors assigned.—Muir v. Kalamazoo Corset Co., 155 Mich. 441.

¶ 1330. It is the prevailing practice of the Supreme Court to reverse judgments of the circuit court only for errors shown by the record and complained of in the appellant's brief.—Griffin v. Kennedy, 148 Mich. 583.

¶ 1331. On error from a judgment for assault and false imprisonment consisting in an arrest without a warrant, where the trial court took from the jury all issues but damages, the review will extend to the question only of the legality of the arrest, the defense of appellant having been justification as an officer.—Davis v. Burgess, 54 Mich. 514.

§ 311. Restriction to assignments.

Necessity of assignment of errors, see ante VI, E.
Making assignments, see ante VI, E.
Sufficiency and specificness of assignments, see ante XI, C.
Scope of assignments and errors thereby presented, see ante §§ 214-216.
Amendments and additional assignments, see ante § 124.
Restriction to errors assigned generally, see 1916 C. C. Rule 66, § 5; and to errors assigned on appeal from judgment non obstante, see Rule 66, § 6.
Restriction to assigned errors on writ to review judgment non obstante, see 1916 C. C. Rule 66, § 6.

¶ 1332. Questions not raised by assignments of error cannot be considered.—Monroe v. Fort Wayne, J. & S. R. Co., 28 Mich. 272; Andre v. Hardin, 32 Mich. 324; Waterman v. Waterman, 34 Mich. 490; Larkin v. Mitchell & Rowland Lumber Co., 42 Mich. 296; Gager v. Chippewa County Sup'rs, 47 Mich. 167; Supe v. Francis, 49 Mich. 266; Lymburner v. Jenkinson, 50 Mich. 488; Stevenson v. Woltman, 81 Mich. 200; Morin v. Robarge, 132 Mich. 337; Moffet v. Sebastian, 149 Mich. 451; Webber v. Billings, 184 Mich. 119; Burroughs v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 199 Mich. 672.

¶ 1333. Objections to part of the charge upon which no error is assigned cannot be considered.—Shaw v. Township of Saline, 113 Mich. 342.

§ 312. Restriction to arguments.

Person entitled to claim error and make argument, see ante XI, D, E.
Form and sufficiency of briefs and argument, see ante XI, E.
Sufficiency of presentment of points in brief, see ante § 232 et seq.
Matters not properly indexed or briefed, see post § 318.
New points as ground for rehearing, see post § 539.

¶ 1334. The court on writ of error usually confines its attention to the points made on the argument, and does not, except under very peculiar circumstances, deem it proper to go beyond them to discuss in the opinion other objections that may have been raised by the record but are not insisted on in argument.—Hutchins v. Kimmell, 31 Mich. 126.

¶ 1335. Under Sup. Ct. Rule 50, such points only will be passed upon as are made in counsel's brief, even though additional errors may be assigned.—Lucas v. Detroit City R. Co., 92 Mich. 412.

¶ 1336. Where only general exceptions to findings of fact and law are taken, and appellee's brief states that it is based on the findings of law, the court will conclude that no question is before it but that of whether the findings of fact support the conclusions of law.—Weston Lumber Co. v. Township of Munising, 123 Mich. 138.

§ 313. ——Arguments not answered or not fully answered.

¶ 1337. The failure of counsel to suggest an answer to a claim of error does not preclude the Supreme Court from making an answer, because if the court did not do so it would really be deciding that to be erroneous which in fact is not.—J. E. Greilick Co. v. Rogers, 144 Mich. 313.

§ 314. Errors injurious to infants.

¶ 1339. Even without objection a decree will be reversed where an order was made against infants based on their admissions, and costs awarded against them improperly.—Smith v. Smith, 13 Mich. 258.

§ 315. Errors affecting appellee or defendant in error.

Party entitled to urge or complain of error errors affecting others than appellant see ante XI, D.
Consideration of errors to avoid reversal see post § 316.

¶ 1340. Grievances of defendant in erro are not considered where he has not himsel brought error.—Newton v. Gordon, 72 Mich. 642; Hughes v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 78 Mich. 399; Redding v. Lamb, 81 Mich. 318.

¶ 1341. On an appeal in an action of trespass upon an island in a meandered river, the court will not consider whether there was evidence that the plaintiff had acquired title by adverse possession, when the question was not submitted to the jury and the plaintiff did not appeal.—Goff v. Cougle, 118 Mich. 307.

¶ 1342. In a personal injury case where the declaration contained seven counts and the case was permitted to go to the jury upon only one count, and plaintiff did not appeal, the question whether or not there was error in refusing to permit the case to go to the jury under any of the other counts cannot be considered.—Miller v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 123 Mich. 374.

¶ 1343. A defense decided in favor of plaintiff from which defendant took no appeal, will not be passed upon on writ of error by plaintiff where the bill of exceptions was settled in view of having plaintiff's assignments of error passed upon and all the testimony relating to the defense in question is not included in the record.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 130 Mich. 213.

§ 316. Matters tending to sustain judgment or overcome error.

Who may urge, see ante §§ 220, 221.
Presumptions to sustain judgment, see post XII, C.

¶ 1344. Where the court below took the case from the jury at the close of plaintiff's case and directed a verdict for defendant without specifying the ground, the Supreme Court will not search the record to ascertain whether there is any evidence to sustain the ruling, but will reverse the judgment.—Rayl v. Estate of Hammond, 95 Mich. 22.

¶ 1345. Where the trial court, in directing a verdict for plaintiff in ejectment, holds that the tax-deeds under which defendant claims are all void, giving reasons for such holding except in the case of the deed for one particular year, the Supreme Court on review is not confined to the grounds pointed out by the judge below, but may affirm his invalidance of the deed as to which no defect was specified by him.—Tillotson v. Webber, 96 Mich. 144.

¶ 1346. On appeal by both parties from a decree granting partial relief to complainant in a bill for an accounting, the court will not consider a point not made by defendant, or the purpose of reversal, but will consider it for the purpose of answering complainant's contention that the decree is too small.—Sheldon v. Miller, 151 Mich. 283.

¶ 1347. In an action on a foreign judgment, the objection that the judgment, being signed in the name of one as "clerk," was not properly attested, was not permitted to interfere with a reversal, as the point was not raised below.—Patterson v. Kennedy, 122 Mich. 343.

§ 317. Matters in record but not properly saved.

Mode of saving questions, see Saving Questions for Review.
Sufficiency of the assignments, see ante XI, C.
Where new trial reasons are not shown, see post § 325.
Failure of bill or case to show evidence or objections fully and plainly, see post §§ 323-325.

¶ 1348. Where the remarks of counsel in addressing the jury have not been excepted to and ruled upon they cannot be reviewed on error even though recited in the bill of exceptions.—Miller v. Lachman, 117 Mich. 68.

§ 318. ——Not properly indexed or briefed.

Necessity of indexing and briefing questions, see ante §§ 226, 232, 234, 235, 312.

¶ 1349. Where the appellant's brief does not contain any reference to the exceptions upon which the alleged errors are founded, nor to the pages of the record where they may be found, and the index to the record and the assignments of error do not afford this information, the Supreme Court will only examine the record and briefs sufficiently to satisfy itself that the verdict of the jury accords with the merits of the case.—Bickle v. Jameson, 146 Mich. 483.

§ 319. Questions open in absence of exceptions.

Where exceptions and objections are not shown, see post § 324.
Presumption as to objections and exceptions not apparent, see post § 372.

¶ 1350. Where no exceptions are taken no errors but those in the record can be considered.—Crippen v. Jacobson, 56 Mich. 386.

¶ 1351. Where no exception is taken to the admission of incompetent testimony, and no error assigned upon the ruling admitting it, the court will not consider whether the error was one which worked prejudice, as, under its well-settled practice, it cannot be considered.—Noble v. St. Joseph & B. H. R. Co., 98 Mich. 249.

§ 320. ——Errors in instructions.

¶ 1352. Reversal must follow error in the charge, though it escaped attention of all parties and of the trial judge and though it would probably have been corrected had attention been called to it; since under the law it is permissible to assign error on the charge without exception.—Howell v. Lansing City Elec. Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 432.

§ 321. ——Errors in findings.

Want of findings, see post § 322.
Request as basis of review of omission to find specifically, see post §§ 455, 456.

¶ 1354. Where no exceptions are taken in a case tried without a jury the only question on error is whether the finding of facts supports the judgment.—Leitelt v. Parker, 48 Mich. 297; Morgan v. Botsford, 82 Mich. 153; Baldwin v. Hastings, 83 Mich. 639; Robards v. Waterman, 96 Mich. 233; Wilcox v. Township of Eagle, 81 Mich. 271.

¶ 1357. Where a case is tried by a court without a jury, and no exceptions are taken to the findings of the court, the only question that can be considered in the appellate court is whether the findings supported the judgment.—Rice v. City of Muskegon, 150 Mich. 679.

¶ 1358. Where exceptions to the findings of fact and law by the trial court are not filed within the four days required under Circuit Court Rule 26, and no extension of time is granted, and said exceptions are not settled and incorporated in the bill of exceptions, the only question before the Supreme Court is whether the findings of fact support the judgment.—Rameau v. Valley, 168 Mich. 569.

¶ 1359. Where no exceptions have been taken to refusals to find, the Supreme Court will not go outside of the findings of fact, and draw inferences from circumstances.—Gambs v. Estate of Sutherland, 101 Mich. 355.

§ 322. Questions open on record without findings.

See also ante § 294.
Presumptions as to findings, see post § 382.

¶ 1360. In the absence of findings of fact the evidence in the bill will not be examined to see whether it sustains the conclusion of the court below.—Morgan v. Botsford, 82 Mich. 153.

¶ 1362. The court will not, in the absence of findings of fact, go into an examination of the testimony received on the trial of an appeal from probate court, to ascertain whether there is any testimony supporting any possible findings of fact which would sustain the judgment.—In re Buchan's Estate, 100 Mich. 219.

¶ 1363. In an appeal from an order of the circuit court dismissing an appeal taken from an order of the probate court for the allowance of a guardian's final account there is no question of law for review where it is not asserted that the findings of fact of the trial court are not supported by the evidence or that they do not support the judgment.—In re Bristol, 199 Mich. 453.

§ 323. Where evidence is not fully preserved.

Sufficiency of evidence in the bill or case, see ante § 176.
Presumptions as to matters not in record, see post § 362 et seq.
Presumption that evidence was sufficient, see post § 378.
Presumption as to other proofs, see post §§ 373-378.

¶ 1364. Where a case tried by the court without a jury is brought up on a bill of exceptions which does not purport to embrace all the evidence, and the record includes no definite finding of facts, nothing is left open for review except the validity of the exceptions to the evidence.—Lyman v. Becannon, 29 Mich. 466.

¶ 1365. Where a bill of exceptions contained no testimony of the witnesses and only contained certain requests for findings and the findings and conclusions of the court, held that resort could only be had for the facts to such findings and to documentary evidence found in the record.—In re Reh's Estate, 196 Mich. 210.

¶ 1366. Where the record does not purport to contain all the evidence, and assignments of error are general, the conclusions of the trial court, as expressed in the judgment, must be deemed correct.—Lasley v. Preston, 157 Mich. 66.

§ 324. Where objections, rulings or exceptions are not shown.

Sufficiency of the bill or case, see also ante § 177.
In absence of exceptions or objections, see ante §§ 319-321.
Presumptions as to objections not shown, see post § 372.

¶ 1367. Where no amendments are proposed to the findings of fact and no exceptions taken to the findings as made, the only assignment of error open on a case made containing nothing but the findings and judgment is that the findings do not support the judgment.—Wood Mowing & Reaping Machine Co. v. Seaver, 90 Mich. 546.

¶ 1368. A record with testimony but without a bill of exceptions or exceptions to findings of fact, or purporting to contain all the "testimony" presents no question but whether the findings support the judgment.—Superintendents of Poor of Washtenaw County v. Rabbitt, 99 Mich. 60.

¶ 1369. Assignments of error in special findings will not be considered when not supported by exceptions to the findings.—Superintendents of Poor of Washtenaw County v. Rabbitt, 99 Mich. 60.

¶ 1370. An objection that a tax deed is void because no certified copy of the decree was annexed to the tax record in the county treasurer's office will not be considered on appeal where it is not shown that such point was raised in the court below.—Hooker v. Bond, 118 Mich. 255.

¶ 1371. Where the record fails to comply with Circuit Court Rule No. 26, in failing to contain objections or exceptions to the admission of testimony, or exceptions to the rendition of judgment, and no request was made for special findings of fact and law, there is nothing for the Supreme Court to review.—Nichol v. Ward, 156 Mich. 136.

§ 325. Where reasons for new trial ruling are not stated.

¶ 1372. On a record showing a motion for new trial denied without assigned reasons, the motion having been based on numerous grounds besides excessiveness of the verdict, reversal cannot be had on that ground, though the excessiveness is apparent.—Bass v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 142 Mich. 177. Grant J., dissenting on other points, concurring on this.

¶ 1373. Alleged error of the court in denying a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence cannot be reviewed under Comp. L. 1897, § 10504, in an action for personal injuries, where the record contains no statement of the reasons which actuated the trial judge in refusing a new trial; even though upon denying a second motion for a new trial, which set forth the reasons named in the first motion and the further reason of the discovery of new evidence as grounds for the motion, the judge filed reasons which referred only to the newly discovered evidence.—Wilbur v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 145 Mich. 344.

¶ 1374. Where a trial judge in denying a motion for a new trial files no reasons in writing and there is nothing in the record to indicate that he was requested to give his reasons, his action will not be subjected to review.—Gordon v. Drake, 193 Mich. 64.

§ 326. Where no case is settled.

Necessity that bill or case be regularly and properly settled, see ante § 110 et seq.

¶ 1375. Where the record consists of the bill, answer, replication and decree, and a copy of proofs claimed to have been taken in open court, no case however having been settled as provided by the statute, the proofs cannot be considered, but the case must be heard on the pleadings.—Fields v. Colby, 102 Mich. 449.

§ 327. Exceptions to accounts.

¶ 1376. Where certain items taken into account on an accounting are examined in detail by the briefs of the counsel for both parties, and it appears that the court below erred in respect to the same, the Supreme Court may waive the objection that the exceptions are not specific, and enter into an examination of the accounts.—Clark v. Landon, 90 Mich. 88.

§ 328. Exceptions to referee's report.
Review of referee's findings, see post § 462.

¶ 1377. Where exceptions are taken to a referee's report and are overruled, and error is assigned on the confirmation of his finding of law, the only questions raised are upon the exceptions to his conclusions of law.—Goodrich v. Hubbard, 51 Mich. 62.

C. INTERPRETATION AND EFFECT, PRESUMPTIONS, AND CONCLUSIVENESS OF RECORD, CASE OR BILL.

§ 329. Construction and effect of record generally.
Exclusion of extraneous matters from consideration, see ante §§ 279-285.
Presumptions arising on the record, see generally post §§ 345-393.
Ambiguity and conflicts in record or between record and other papers, see post § 341.
Judicial notice in aid of record, see post § 344.

¶ 1378. All reasonable intendments are made to support the rulings below.—Friedland v. McNeil, 33 Mich. 40.

§ 330. ——Of pleadings as set out.
Of judgment on demurrer, see post § 338, ¶ 1418.
Reading pleading as if properly amended without alteration of record or new filings, see post § 369.
Presumptions as to nature and ground of action, see post § 364.
Presumption as to admissibility of evidence under the pleadings, see post § 370.
Assumption of truth of facts alleged by reason of other pleading responsive thereto, see post § 351.

¶ 1379. The fact that no demurrer was interposed to a new complaint after the former one was held bad on demurrer would indicate that in the view of counsel for defendant such new complaint stated a cause of action.—Rodman v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 59 Mich. 395.

¶ 1380. Where the printed pleadings in a chancery case are abbreviated and the record does not contain an answer in full, the insufficiency of which is claimed, it will be presumed that all allegations deemed important are stated.—Atkinson v. Akin, 197 Mich. 289.

¶ 1381. In the absence of a motion to correct a record, the Supreme Court will pass upon the sufficiency of the bill therein set forth, notwithstanding an allegation in the defendant's brief that the bill has been changed.—Sartwell v. Young, 126 Mich. 304.

¶ 1382. A demurrer in probate court to a cross-petition and answer to a petition for distribution, setting up that petitioner is not a "lawful heir" within the terms of the will, though not the regular and proper way of raising the question in the probate court, may be treated on error to the judgment of the circuit court, sustaining the overruling of such demurrer, as if the facts in the cross-petition and answer had been put in evidence in the probate court and again in the circuit court and the same judgment rendered thereon.—Turner v. Burr, 141 Mich. 106.

¶ 1383. On appeal a petition found in the office of the register in chancery cannot be considered the original petition in a tax proceeding where the original return shows a printed order signed by the circuit judge followed by a petition in the same type with the memorandum to the printer to print both, as required by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206, § 66, and the record also contains a petition in book form containing a list of land alleged to be delinquent and bearing evidence of filing, signed by the register which appears to have been produced from the county treasurer's office and which conforms to Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206, § 61. The latter will be considered the original petition.—Barnum v. Barnes, 118 Mich. 264.

§ 331. ——Of question or offer and ruling thereon.
Offer of evidence generally, see Trial, V.

¶ 1384. An offer of testimony must, in a review of the case, be considered as it was made, and no facts not expressed or clearly implied can be intended.—Linn v. Gilman, 46 Mich. 628.

¶ 1385. An assignment of error to the court in ruling that the administrator need not produce his books is not sustained by the records, where, in an appeal from the settlement of the final account of such administrator, it appears that the witness said he would produce the books if necessary, and the court suggested that the law provided how to get them into court, but that [illegible] doubted his authority to order them in at the present state of the case.—Reed v. Whipp, 140 Mich. 7.

¶ 1386. No error can be assigned up[on] court's elicited statement that he does [not] care to hear counsel upon questions of [law] involved in instructions requested, unl[ess] counsel's request for such hearing [was] brought to court's attention.—Wildey v. Crane, 69 Mich. 17.

§ 332. ——Of objections and exceptions.

Making objections and saving question made thereby, see Trial, V; Saving Questions for Review.

Construction of assignments of error, see ante § 214.

Presumptions as to exceptions and objections not apparent on record, see post § 372.

Assumption of truth of facts on which exception rests, see post § 351.

Specific exception as implying that no others were taken or tenable, see post § 372.

¶ 1387. In an action for the purchase price of a cash register on a written order, arguments of counsel in support of testimony to show oral statements of the agent selling the machine confined the theory of the case to the question of its admissibility as showing a warranty and did not raise the question of fraud in the inception of the contract, where the parol evidence rule only is discussed, notwithstanding counsel at one place in the argument refers to the salesman's statements as inducing the purchase and states that he would show that the purchase was made by reason of the misrepresentation.—Hallwood Cash-Register Co. v. Millard, 127 Mich. 316.

¶ 1388. Upon writ of error from an order quashing a writ of replevin, it will be assumed that a motion to quash which does not refer to any affidavit or paper is based upon the record, where the affidavit, writ and declaration are attached to the motion. —Dages v. Brake, 125 Mich. 64.

¶ 1389. On error an objection to plaintiff's being sworn on the ground that she was an incompetent person will be regarded as having been an objection to her competency as a witness rather than one requiring that the court should pass on competency before admitting the testimony, where the court manifested a belief that she was competent by leaving it to the jury with instructions that if they found her incompetent they might disregard her testimony, it being a doubtful case making that the proper practice.—Mead v. Harris, 101 Mich. 585.

¶ 1389a. Exceptions to findings of fact which do not state the grounds of objection may be presumed to have rested on objection that the findings were not supported by the evidence, that being urged in the brief as the ground.—First National Bank v. Walker, 115 Mich. 434.

§ 333. ——Of evidence as set forth.

In reviewing directed verdict, see post §§ 398-398.

¶ 1390. A record showing that the vice-president of an appealing insured testified that "we had no other insurance on this property; we had a floating policy, but it did not cover this loss," will not enable the Supreme Court to say that the floating policy, which was not in the record, was "other insurance" which avoided the specific policy sued on.—Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., 142 Mich. 29.

¶ 1391. A case will not be considered on review in the light of a stipulation of facts alone, where the record indicates that a further showing was made on the trial which disproved an essential fact as stipulated.—Edwards v. Taliafero, 34 Mich. 13.

¶ 1392. No presumption arises on appeal that a memorandum on the back of a mortgage owned by a decedent, "No. 131. January 2. Quincy, $4,719.50"—was made by the deceased in the year the mortgage matured, to represent the amount due at that time, where no attention was called to it in trial or any proofs of its authorship offered.—Rose v. Lockerby, 116 Mich. 277.

§ 334. ——Of instructions as set out.

General rules for the construction of the charge, or of any of its parts in relation to the whole charge, see Instructions, II, C.

Resort to evidence and issues for construction, see post § 335.

Contradiction by assignment of error, see post § 341.

Bad punctuation or grammar, see post § 343.

¶ 1394. A charge to a jury is to be construed together as a whole, and not by separate sentences or detached propositions, which standing alone, might be erroneous.—McGinnis v. Kempsey, 27 Mich. 363; Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32; Greenlee v. Lowing, 35 Mich. 63; People v. Finley, 38 Mich. 482; Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson. 39 Mich. 492; Coots v. Chamberlain, 39 Mich. 565; Frankel v. Coots, 41 Mich. 75; Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Walker, 41 Mich. 239; Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413; Dibble v. Nash, 47 Mich. 589; Merchants' Bank of Canada v. Ortmann, 48 Mich. 419; People v. Howard, 50 Mich. 239; Kuney v. Dutcher, 56 Mich. 308; Watson v. Watson, 58 Mich. 507; Brown v. McCord & Bradfield Furniture Co., 65 Mich. 360; Kirchner v. Detroit City R., 91 Mich 400; Westra v. Westra's Estate, 101 Mich. 526.

¶ 1395. Particular sentences and phrases of a charge should not be considered as if they were independent; they must be construed with their context.—Welch v. Ware, 32 Mich. 77; Burdick v. Michael, 32 Mich. 246.

¶ 1396. A charge to the jury must be considered and construed as a whole in the same connected way in which it was given, and upon the assumption that the jury did not overlook any portion, but gave due and equal weight to every part.—Anderson v. Walter, 34 Mich. 113; Hart v. Newton, 48 Mich. 401.

¶ 1397. Complaint of a portion of the charge, which, standing alone, would bear a construction that might mislead the jury, but, considered with the rest, would not be likely to, will not be sustained.—Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32.

¶ 1398. The accuracy of a charge must be decided on a consideration of the whole charge and not merely of detached passages or isolated expressions; and an exception to a single remark of the judge, without making an effort to have it corrected or explained, will not be sustained unless the Supreme Court is satisfied that justice requires it.—Pray v. Cadwell, 50 Mich. 222.

¶ 1399. An instruction which is correct as a whole cannot be regarded as erroneous because a part of it standing by itself may seem objectionable.—Cleveland v. Miller, 94 Mich. 97.

¶ 1400. In construing a charge given to the jury the whole of it is to be considered, and error cannot be predicated upon a detached sentence that is not strictly accurate where, when considered with the context, it could not have misled the jury, the charge as a whole being correct.—Lyon v. Watson, 109 Mich. 390.

§ 335. ——Of instructions in light of the evidence and issues.

Presumption that evidence warranted charge given or refusal of requests, see post §§ 376, 377.

¶ 1401. Portions of a charge will not be considered as if standing alone, but will be construed in connection with the rest and in the light of the pleadings and evidence.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

¶ 1402. Instructions to the jury and modifications of proposed instructions are not to be construed as abstract propositions, but as they would be understood in connection with the evidence.—Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247.

¶ 1403. On error the Supreme Court must construe a request for instructions to the jury as it must have been understood by the court and jury had it been given. It must therefore be construed in reference to the evidence upon the subject to which it relates.—Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241.

¶ 1404. In reviewing a case the charge to the jury should be considered as a whole, and in connection with the circumstances which tend to color the case but which cannot appear upon the record; and such intendments will be made in its favor as the facts will allow.—Souvais v. Leavitt, 50 Mich. 108.

¶ 1405. Charges must be construed in the light of the record and proofs, and when supported by a fair interpretation of the case as tried before the jury, and nothing is pointed out in them which could mislead the jury, will not be assumed to be incorrect.—Botsford v. Kleinhans, 29 Mich. 332.

§ 336. ——Of special findings and conclusions.

Presumptions as to findings not apparent, see post §§ 382, 383.
Presumptions as to requests, see post § 382.
Conflict between findings and pleadings, see post § 341.
Of finding reciting a collateral judgment, legality of the judgment, see post ¶ 1427.
Findings of fact and conclusions of law in general, see Verdicts and Findings.

¶ 1406. A finding that the facts in proof make out an understanding between parties that a certain transaction shall settle a demand is a conclusion of fact and not reviewable at law.—Sly v. Freeman, 38 Mich. 689.

¶ 1407. A finding of fact that a way was used at and from a certain time "under claim of right" is conclusive on the Supreme Court in reviewing a decision that there had been an easement acquired by prescription, though the finding is denominated a conclusion of law by the trial judge in the record, but where the opinion of the trial judge shows that he regarded it as a finding of fact rather than as a legal consequence of the facts found.—Toney v. Knapp, 142 Mich. 65; per Carpenter, C. J., with three other justices concurring and three dissenting.

¶ 1408. The Supreme Court cannot supply positive omissions from a finding of fact by inferences and presumptions.—Briggs v. Parsons, 39 Mich. 400.

¶ 1409. The Supreme Court, in reviewing a special verdict, cannot assume any fact not therein stated, or infer any from those found, but must take the finding as the jury have made it, subject to the allegations in the pleadings.—Buckley v. Great Western R. Co., 18 Mich. 121.

¶ 1410. Where a jury have answered special questions inconsistently and have rendered a general verdict, where the questi were ambiguous, all serious doubts must be resolved against the propounder of the questions, and it will be presumed that the jury placed that construction upon the questions which makes their answer harmonious with their general verdict, and with their answers to other special questions.—Burke v. Bay City Traction & Elec. Co., 147 Mich. 172.

¶ 1411. Where a case is tried without a jury all essential facts must be found, but where no amendments to them were proposed and the attention of the trial court is not attracted to any alleged defects by special objection or otherwise, the findings as filed will be aided by all reasonable intendments.—Schelske v. Township of Orange, 147 Mich. 135.

¶ 1412. Where the verdict and judgment in proceedings under the log-lien law are in the usual form in assumpsit, and are silent as to the plaintiff's lien filed under such law, it will be presumed that the jury failed to find a lien, especially where the record shows that their attention was called to the fact that if a lien was found, it should be entered as a part of their verdict.—Kieldsen v. Wilson, 77 Mich. 45.

§ 337. ——Of general verdict on diverse counts or issues.

Effect of general verdict on diverse counts, see generally Verdicts and Findings.

¶ 1413. Judgment for injury done by the destruction of the freehold must be reversed if the verdict was general while title to a part of the property was not fully proved.—Anderson v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 57 Mich. 216.

¶ 1414. A general verdict for defendants in an action against the indorsers of commercial paper, where defendants have alleged in defense both fraud in securing their indorsement, and payment of the indebtedness, leaves the court of appeal unable to determine the ground on which such verdict rests.—Alpena National Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

¶ 1415. Where the jury, being erroneously instructed as to one of two counts in the declaration, gives a general verdict for the plaintiff, judgment must be reversed.—Rayburn v. Comstock, 80 Mich. 448.

¶ 1416. Where several issues are presented, and a general verdict rendered, a party asserting that the judgment determined a particular issue has the burden of proving it.—Hoffman v. Silverthorn, 137 Mich. 60.

¶ 1417. Where defendant in an action of assumpsit pleads the general issue and gives notice that he will claim recoupment of damages for breach of contract, the pleadings put the existence of a contract in issue; and as a verdict for plaintiff in the full amount of damages claimed does not necessarily decide the fact of its existence as against defendant, the Supreme Court can look into the case to determine whether there was any evidence of it to go to the jury.—Hudnutt v. Comstock, 50 Mich. 596.

Presumptions in favor of validity and regularity, see post § 352 et seq.

Of judgments on appeal from justices, see post § 339.

Construction and effect of judgments generally, see Judgments; Former Adjudication.

¶ 1418. Plaintiff requested the court which had sustained defendant's demurrer to set out the reasons for its action. The court did so, but the plaintiff did not serve notice of the request, for special reasons, on the defendant. Held, that the judgment should be considered as general, and as sustaining the demurrer for the reasons specified therein.—Johnson v. Desmond Chemical Co., 152 Mich. 84.

¶ 1419. A recital in a decree must be treated on appeal as correctly stating the facts where the alleged incorrectness was not called to the attention of the trial court.—Myers v. Myers, 143 Mich. 32.

¶ 1420. A judgment which should have been rendered against two defendants as partners but was without objection rendered against one only who, if he was liable at all, was only liable as a partner, will on appeal be treated as having been rendered against both.—McPherson v. Bristol, 122 Mich. 354.

¶ 1421. The court will not assume on appeal that the law was not complied with in tax proceedings resulting in the sale of lands.—Wilkin v. Keith, 121 Mich. 66.

¶ 1422. Judgment entered by default against a contractor in a suit against him and the owner of logs to enforce a labor lien is assumed to be regular where there is nothing of record to the contrary.—Van Slyck v. Arseneau, 140 Mich. 154.

¶ 1423. On denying specific enforcement of a contract to erect a house on land for which complainant held a contract, which land was deeded to defendant who was to raise the money and build the house and then reconvey when reimbursed, where the house was not in accordance with the contract, a provision in the decree that defendant must remove the house from the land, while possibly erroneous was regarded as one for defendant's benefit, which he need not accept in view of an alternative that he might accept a compromise offered by the complainant.—Crawford v. Schneider, 106 Mich. 199.

¶ 1424. A judgment for the debtor in assumpsit brought for the original amount of plaintiff's compromised claim cannot be sustained, though the amount to which plaintiff is entitled was deposited in court as a condition of obtaining a new trial in which the judgment was rendered, where the order for payment into court did not require the money to be at plaintiff's disposal, and where no tender had ever been made sufficient to bar plaintiff's action; since, while the judgment would have been correct if the composition of the debt had been performed by a tender or payment into court, yet the judgment standing for defendant would bar plaintiff from recovering the amount paid in under the order.—Browning v. Crouse, 40 Mich. 339.

¶ 1425. An objection that a judgment was taken on stipulation to which objector was not a party is untenable in the face of a record showing that it was taken on proofs, but that the manner of taking the proofs was agreed upon.—Home Savings Bank v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 113 Mich. 385.

¶ 1426. On appeal from a decree for claimants in a suit to enforce mechanics' liens, where the court is shown to have spent much time in computing the amounts due each claimant, the decree will not be disturbed in the absence of specific errors pointed out in the court's computation.—Frohlich v. Carroll, 127 Mich. 561.

¶ 1427. A finding that one was committed to an insane asylum by order of the probate court with the order of that court set out and reciting therein that the insane "was duly notified," suffices on error where there are no exceptions, though there is no direct finding by the circuit court that the insane was cited and served.—Superintendents of Poor of Washtenaw County v. Rabbitt, 99 Mich. 60.

§ 339. ——Of record on appeal or certiorari in circuit.

Repugnancy of record to purported amendments, see post § 341.

¶ 1428. On error to the judgment of the circuit court, rendered on a special appeal from a justice, a point which no one reading the affidavit would have been led to consider, and as to which the justice's return is silent, cannot be the subject of review.—Courtis v. Garrison, 148 Mich. 226.

§ 340. ——Of certification of bill or case.

¶ 1429. The trial court's certificate that, "forasmuch as the matters set forth do not fully appear of record, [appellant] tenders this, his bill of exceptions, and prays the same may be signed and sealed by the judge of this court, and that said testimony be set forth in full, questions and answers, for a necessary and full understanding of the same, which said bill of exceptions is accordingly signed," etc., means that all of the evidence is set out in full.—Hatch v. Reid, 112 Mich. 430.

§ 341. Ambiguity, repugnancy and conflicts in record.

Construction of particular matters contained in record, see also ante §§ 330-340.
Ambiguous assignments of error, see ante § 214.
Ambiguities in findings, see also ante ¶ 1410.
Uncertainty as to whether judgment was on consent or on proof, see also ante ¶ 1425.
General verdict ambiguous because of diverse issues, see ante § 337.
Repugnant or inconsistent findings, see post § 457.
Conclusiveness of certificate over contrary assertion of counsel as to matter contained, see post § 349.
Statements on brief contradicting record as to terms of the pleadings, see ante § 330.
Claim of exceptions in brief repugnant to showing in record, see also post ¶ 1567.
Contention in brief as to evidence repugnant to record, see also post ¶ 1684.
Clerical errors, see post § 342.
Exclusion of extraneous matters from consideration, see ante §§ 279-285.
Conflict between original and printed record, see also Certiorari.

¶ 1430. Nothing can be inferred from an ambiguous record.—Sherman v. Palmer, 37 Mich. 509.

¶ 1431. Where it is apparent that the record gives the evidence only in condensed form, the Supreme Court cannot assume that the trial judge misstated it in charging the jury, even though his charge varies from the evidence as set forth, so long as it does not appear that his attention was called to the alleged misstatement at the time, or the record does not put the fact of misstatement beyond question.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Gargett, 42 Mich. 289.

¶ 1432. Where an instruction to the jury, as contained in the record, includes words that render it manifestly erroneous, and which are complained of, but such words are omitted from the instruction as embodied in the assignment of error, the question is not presented, and it may be surmised that the record is incorrect.—McGuire v. Vaughan, 106 Mich. 280.

¶ 1433. The verdict as entered is not conclusively presumed to be the verdict as rendered. The bill of exceptions, when filed became a part of the record, and contain the action of the court prior to the time when the verdict was put in force by the clerk; and the entry made by him does not necessarily compel the court to conclude that the bill of exceptions is in any respect untrue.—Guerold v. Holtz, 103 Mich. 118.

¶ 1434. Exceptions appearing in the printed record, but found to be stricken out of the bill of exceptions as returned, are presumed not to have been taken, unless it is shown that the return has been tampered with.—Atkinson v. Morse, 57 Mich. 276.

¶ 1435. Where writs of error are taken out by the opposing parties in the same case, and their several bills of exceptions are signed by the trial judge at the same time, such bills are to be treated as of equal verity, and, if they conflict as to a particular point, the Supreme Court may properly refuse to pass upon it.—Miller v. Clark, 56 Mich. 337.

¶ 1436. On error to review a judgment of the circuit court on certiorari to review a justice's judgment, there appeared in the record a paper purporting to amend the certified return of the justice. The paper was contradictory of the record, and uncertified by the justice. Held, that it could not be considered as a part of the record.—Bernstein v. Thayer, 157 Mich. 625.

¶ 1437. A statement of the trial court that he never intended to strike out certain evidence, but that the stenographer's notes are open to a contrary construction, must be accepted by the appellate court, even though it may contradict the record; where it will give the appellant the benefit of an exception taken and of which he would otherwise be deprived.—Taylor v. Ziem, 148 Mich. 329.

¶ 1438. Where in a suit to recover taxes paid under protest, including school taxes, the findings of fact fail to show the amount of such school taxes, the bill of particulars of plaintiff, which purports to show the amount, cannot be used to supply the place of such omitted finding.—Shelden v. Township of Marion, 101 Mich. 256.

§ 342. Clerical errors in record.

Bad punctuation or grammar, see post § 343.

¶ 1439. A clerical error in the record in transcribing a deed by which a copy used in a suit describes a lot as in private claim 78 instead of 678 should be disregarded where the record of the deed describes the land correctly.—Vreeland v. Monnier, 127 Mich. 304.

§ 343. Punctuation and grammar.

¶ 1440. The fact that in the stenographic notes of the original charge a comma is omitted from an instruction will not prevent its being given its ordinary meaning with punctuation more in accordance with grammatical construction and the circumstances involved in the case.—Jarvis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 128 Mich. 61.

¶ 1441. A clause in an instruction will be considered with reference to what preceded it and what immediately followed without reference to the punctuation of the stenographer or the attorneys.—Wilson v. Royal Neighbors of America, 139 Mich. 423.

§ 344. Judicial notice in aid of record.

Resort to other records of the court, see also ante § 284.

Judicial notice in general, see Evidence, I.

¶ 1442. The Supreme Court will not take judicial notice in a suit on an assigned judgment, that the assignee is the same person as an attorney who is an officer of the court, where it is urged that the assignment is contrary to How. St., § 7185, prohibiting such assignments for the purpose of bringing suit.—Belden v. Blackman, 118 Mich. 448.

§ 345. Presumptions as to contents and correctness.

As to matters not appearing of record, see post §§ 362-393.

On ambiguous record, see also ante § 341.

¶ 1443. The bill of exceptions must be assumed to contain all material evidence.—Rose v. Jackson, 40 Mich. 29.

¶ 1444. A statement in a bill of exceptions is assumed to be correct and counsel cannot contradict it.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Marcott, 41 Mich. 433.

¶ 1445. On appeal the court is bound by the record as it comes up, and counsel will not be heard to urge matters not contained therein alleging it to be incomplete.—Huff v. Cole's Estate, 127 Mich. 351.

¶ 1446. It cannot be presumed that the entire evidence in the case is set forth in the bill of exceptions.—Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. ed. 485, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679.

¶ 1447. A case made after judgment for review on both the law and the facts is presumed to contain all the evidence unless the contrary appears.—Gard v. Stevens, 12 Mich. 292.

¶ 1448. It will be presumed that the bill of exceptions contains all the testimony where it appears to set forth a connected examination of the witness from beginning to end under a statement that the witness testified as appears in the bill.—Godkin v. Obenauer, 113 Mich. 98.

¶ 1449. Where it has been certified that the bill of exceptions "has been made sufficiently full and complete so that the Supreme Court on writ of error may by going over the same be able to make an examination of the entire case," and appellant contends that the answers to special questions and the general verdict are not supported by the testimony, it will be assumed that the record contains substantially all the testimony given at the trial.—Newell v. Reid, 189 Mich. 174.

¶ 1450. The bill of exceptions is presumed to contain all of the testimony.—Sherk v. Holmes, 125 Mich. 118.

¶ 1451. Where a bill of exceptions does not show what the contents actually were of a docket entry, claimed to have been erroneously rejected as evidence, it will be presumed that it contained all the enumerated matters required by the statute, and these only.—Goodrich v. Burdick, 26 Mich. 39.

¶ 1452. On the hearing it was claimed that certain evidence returned as a part of the record should be excluded, on the allegation that it was not actually filed in the court below, and was not considered by that court in its decision. The evidence consisted of the proof of documents set out in the bill, and appeared to have been regularly taken on proper notice. There being no ground for supposing that the party objecting had been taken by surprise, and the transcript on appeal having been on file for two years without motion to correct it, it was held that the evidence should not be disregarded.—Michigan Ins. Co. of Detroit v. Brown, 11 Mich. 265.

§ 346. ——Evidence set out with respect to given subject.

¶ 1453. Where a bill of exceptions set out what the evidence tended to show in reference to any subject-matter, it will be presumed to state it completely, or at least all that could affect any question to be raised on that subject, and no presumption will arise in support of a judgment that there was evidence, other than that so set out, to warrant the conclusion upon which the judgment was based.—Shaw v. Hoffman, 25 Mich. 162.

¶ 1454. Where a bill of exceptions raises a point and sets out evidence as tending to bear on it, it will be presumed, unless the contrary appears, that there was no evidence which would alter the effect of that which is stated.—Atlas Min. Co. v. Johnston, 23 Mich. 36.

¶ 1455. A bill of exceptions in narrative form, which expressly states that the testimony of some witnesses upon a material question is given in full, and which does not indicate that the testimony of any witness was omitted, will be presumed to contain all testimony bearing on such question.—Schermerhorn v. Merritt, 123 Mich. 310.

¶ 1456. A bill of exceptions setting out the substance of the evidence in abbreviated narrative form and certified to "contain the substance of all testimony given upon said trial, which in any manner affects the exceptions therein noted," will be presumed to have all evidence requisite to consideration of an exception for want of evidence to sustain a finding.—Farrell v. Danbury, 141 Mich. 81.

¶ 1458. A bill of exceptions that gives the name of each witness and states that, "being duly sworn, he testified in substance as follows," closing the statement of his testimony with the words "and the testimony being here closed," is presumed to contain all the evidence bearing on the questions raised.—Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 Mich. 501.

¶ 1459. A bill of exceptions constructed in a connected narrative form, giving the testimony of each witness, and closing with the statement "and thereupon the defendants rested their case," will be presumed to contain all of the evidence bearing on the questions raised.—Ironwood Store Co. v. Harrison, 75 Mich. 197.

§ 348. ——As to regularity of settlement and signing.

¶ 1460. A bill of exceptions signed by the circuit judge, showing the exceptions to have been properly taken on the trial, is to be presumed properly signed, and within the proper time, though dated several months after the trial and judgment, and though nothing appears in the bill itself, or in the record, to show affirmatively that time was allowed for its preparation and settlement.—Sweetzer v. Mead, 5 Mich. 33.

¶ 1461. Where the case is duly signed by the judge, and purports to have been settled before him, all previous steps necessary to its settlement must, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, be presumed to have been regularly taken.—Sallee v. Ireland, Mich. 154.

¶ 1462. An objection that the Supreme Court cannot hear an appeal on its merits for want of jurisdiction in that the case was not settled within four months from the date of the entry of the decree, cannot be sustained where the record shows that the decree was rendered September 18, 1903, but not when it was entered, and the case was settled as of January 18, 1904, the certificate stating that it is in the same form as was submitted for settlement, except that amendments submitted by the defendants on that date are inserted, and the certificate is dated February 1, 1904.—Wheeler v. Lasch, 143 Mich. 183.

§ 349. ——Conclusiveness as certified.

See also ante §§ 345-348.

¶ 1463. The certificate of a trial judge as to all matters certified is considered as conclusive by the Supreme Court.—Hoopengarner v. Stipe, 169 Mich. 307.

¶ 1464. A claim of counsel that the record does not contain all the testimony and therefore the verdict should be affirmed, will be disregarded where the certificate of the circuit judge states "that the foregoing is all the evidence given in the case covering or in relation to the matters assigned as error."—Storrs v. Michigan Starch Co., 126 Mich. 666.

§ 350. ——Admissions, concessions and waivers.

Additions and amendments of record by stipulation, see ante § 248.

Admissions by failure to contradict misstatements in opposing brief, see ante § 233.

¶ 1465. On an action by copartners there was no direct evidence of partnership. A contract signed by defendant, referring to plaintiffs by their firm name, was put in against defendant's objections. On error, it not appearing what these objections were, it was held necessary for plaintiffs to show affirmatively that they amounted to a waiver of proof of partnership.—Lee v. Hardgrave, 3 Mich. 77.

¶ 1466. Where concessions and statements of counsel are recited in the charge to the jury, they will be presumed to have been made, unless the record shows that before the jury retired the attention of the court was called to the matter, and an opportunity given for correction.—Stanton v. Estey Mfg. Co., 90 Mich. 12: People v. Skutt, 96 Mich. 449.

¶ 1467. Where on the request of counsel for a defendant that certain notes and a bill of sale, upon which plaintiff based his claim, be taken by the jury, plaintiff's counsel objected unless the bill of particulars was also taken by them, and the court ruled that, if any of the papers offered in evidence were to go to the jury, all should go that had been admitted in evidence, and that, if any were excluded, all should be, to which decision no exception was taken, it will be presumed that defendant's counsel was willing that all should go, rather than that all should be excluded, it appearing from the record that all of such papers were sent to the jury room.—Daniels v. Weeks, 90 Mich. 190.

¶ 1468. In replevin for property claimed to have been seized under an unlawful tax, plaintiff claimed for the first time in the Supreme Court that judgment against him for the amount of the tax could not be sustained in the absence of evidence of the value of the property, as the value might be less than the tax. Held, that the fair inference from the record was that the case was tried upon the understanding that the property was worth more than the amount of the tax.—Boyce v. Peterson, 84 Mich. 490.

§ 351. Facts taken as true or confessed.

On review of directed verdict, see post § 387.

From absence of contradiction in brief of adversary, see ante § 233.

Allegations taken as true because of other pleading, see Equity; VII; Pleading.

¶ 1470. Where a case rests upon exceptions to conclusions of law in a special finding, the exceptions must stand or fall by the finding of facts.—Upton v. Kennedy, 36 Mich. 215 (syllabus).

¶ 1471. Where a defense is proposed based on an offer to prove certain matters stated which offer is refused, the case must be considered on error precisely as though such facts had been established.—Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346.

¶ 1472. A fact set up in an affidavit that has been made part of the record is taken to be true on review if no issue has been raised on the affidavit.—People v. Kennedy, 58 Mich. 372.

¶ 1473. On appeal from the dismissal of a bill on demurrer the bill will be assumed to be true for the purposes of the hearing, in the absence of any answer.—Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 49 Mich. 39.

¶ 1474. Where in a suit in chancery the lower court erroneously refuses to permit defendant to introduce evidence to support the averments of her cross-bill and answer, the Supreme Court will not for this reason consider the averments to be true.—Davis v. Wardowski, 164 Mich. 561.

§ 352. Presumptions and burden to show error generally.

[Note. The general rule, exemplified by the cases collected in this division, post, is that error must appear affirmatively on the record and bill or case, except in respect to those matters which are indispensable to a valid judgment (as to these, see Judgments, VII), and that all intendments are in favor of the validity and regularity of the proceedings below. This rule takes on various forms of expression, and the ensuing section lines indicate the various forms. Further applications of this general rule are involved in the rule that rulings based on discretion are not reviewable (see post XII, D) and that findings on evidence are not reviewable, where it is susceptible of diverse conclusions of fact by the trier (see post XII, E), though the rule that error lies only to review errors of law is also a principal reason for the latter rule.]

Particular applications of the rule, and presumptions as to particular matters, see generally post §§ 353-393.

On ambiguous record, see ante § 341.

As to prejudice or harmlessness, see post §§ 353-360.

To show basis of general verdict, see also ante § 337, post § 384.

As to penal and forfeiture judgments, see post § 393.

Restriction of review to matters properly shown by the record, see ante XII, B, 1.

Sufficiency of record showing as to selection of jury, see ante § 179.

Necessity of pointing out by reference in brief the portion of record showing error, see ante § 285.

Dismissal or affirmance on hearing if no reviewable question or substantial grievance is shown, see post §§ 480, 481.

¶ 1475. Error cannot be presumed, but must be shown affirmatively from the record.—Comstock v. Hollon, 2 Mich. 355; Burnham v. People, 3 Mich. 195; Maynard v. Penniman, 10 Mich. 153; People v. Clark, 10 Mich. 310; Kermott v. Ayer, 11 Mich. 181; Morissey v. People, 11 Mich. 327; Taff v. Hosmer, 14 Mich. 309; Cook v. Hopper, 23 Mich. 511; Peabody v. McAvoy, 23 Mich. 526; Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 Mich. 90; Jennison v. Haire, 29 Mich. 207; Brown v. People, 29 Mich. 232; Gilbert v. American Ins. Co., 30 Mich. 400; Continental Improvement Co. v. Ives, 30 Mich. 448; Sirrine v. Briggs, 31 Mich. 443; Turner v. People, 33 Mich. 363; American Ins. Co. of Chicago v. Woodruff, 34 Mich. 6; Curley v. Wyman, 34 Mich. 353; Zimmer v. Davis, 35 Mich. 39; Greenlee v. Lowing, 35 Mich. 63; State Ins. Co. of Lansing v. Reynolds, 35 Mich. 304; Young v. Taylor, 36 Mich. 25; Hurd v. Newton, 36 Mich. 35; Wetherbee v. Kusterer, 41 Mich. 359; Brong v. Brown, 42 Mich. 119; Maillet v. People, 42 Mich. 262; Howard v. Patrick, 43 Mich. 121; Brown v. Haak, 48 Mich. 229; Kline v. Kline, 49 Mich. 419; Hamilton v. Langley, 52 Mich. 549; People v. Scott, 56 Mich. 154; Huff v. Hall, 56 Mich. 456; People v. Murphy, 56 Mich. 546; Walters v. Tefft, 57 Mich. 390; Duflo v. Juif, 63 Mich. 513; Manning v. Brennahan, 63 Mich. 584; People v. La Munion, 64 Mich. 709; Bostwick v. Losey, 67 Mich. 554; Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400; Malachiski v. Stellwagen, 85 Mich. 41; Bond v. McMahon, 94 Mich. 557; Sloman v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co., 112 Mich. 258.

¶ 1476. One who alleges error has the burden of pointing it out.—Rodman v. Clark, 81 Mich. 466.

¶ 1477. It rests upon plaintiff in error to show that error has been committed.—Sullivan v. Deiter, 86 Mich. 404.

¶ 1478. In the absence of an affirmative showing in the record on case made error will not be presumed.—Nixon v. Hood, 201 Mich. 133.

¶ 1480. Every presumption will be applied in support of the judgment below.—Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400.

¶ 1481. Where the record alone is before the court of review without any bill of exceptions no error can be presumed where the record itself does not show error.—Walters v. Tefft, 57 Mich. 390.

¶ 1482. The rulings of the trial court must be presumed to be correct in the absence of anything showing them to be wrong.—Waga v. Peck, 22 Mich. 368.

¶ 1483. Though a ruling may have anticipated counsel who sought to introduce certain testimony, no reversible error was committed, as such error must be made out and not merely suspected.—Leder v. National Union Fire Ins. Co., 175 Mich. 470.

¶ 1484. Unless the error clearly appears from the record, a judgment will not be reversed to enable a defendant to avail himself of a possible defense, which, even if good in law, is without substance.—Hill v. Robbins, 22 Mich. 475.

¶ 1485. Plaintiff in a suit before a justice of the peace to recover fees earned by him as attorney for a corporation, being unable to prove his contract on account of the death of the agent who employed him, was permitted to recover upon the quantum meruit, whereupon defendant took the case to the circuit court by a writ of certiorari, and the judgment was affirmed. On appeal to this court, defendant contends that it is to be presumed that there was an agreement as to the amount of plaintiff's fees, and that hence quantum meruit does not lie. Held, that such contention does not attempt to reverse the judgment on a meritorious ground unless the agreement was that plaintiff was to receive less than adequate compensation for his services, which will not be presumed.—Drake v. International Harvester Co. of America, 150 Mich. 561.

§ 353. Presumption as to prejudice or harmlessness.

As to harmlessness of provision in judgment, see also ante § 338.

As to harmlessness of improper provision in judgment couched in the alternative and otherwise proper, see ante ¶ 1423.

¶ 1486. The party alleging error must show error to his prejudice.—Richards v. Tozer, 27 Mich. 451; Louden v. City of East Saginaw, 41 Mich. 18.

¶ 1487. While the party complaining of error should show its existence, it generally falls to the party on whose motion error is committed to show, if he so claims, that the complaining party was not prejudiced by it.—Campau v. Traub, 27 Mich. 215.

¶ 1488. It may be presumed that the record is as favorable to plaintiff in error as he is entitled to have it as to facts that are so essential that they cannot be overlooked.—Hamilton v. Langley, 52 Mich. 549.

§ 354. ——Of matter to sustain judgment or ruling.

See also ante § 352.

As to penal and forfeiture judgment, see post § 396.

Of matters not in record, see post § 361 et seq.

As to proofs or want of proofs essential to result, see post §§ 373-378.

Presumption that evidence was sufficient, see post § 378.

¶ 1489. It cannot be assumed, in order to support a judgment, that facts existed contradicting the record.—Jacobson v. Miller, 41 Mich. 90.

¶ 1490. Where a cause was tried by the circuit judge without a jury, and improper evidence was admitted to establish a material point, and the nature of the case was such that it could not be presumed other evidence was given on that point, it was held that the judgment should be reversed, notwithstanding the bill of exceptions did not state that all the evidence was set forth.—Bliss v. Paine, 11 Mich. 92.

¶ 1491. Where an affirmative answer to a question improperly excluded might have prejudiced the prevailing party, it is not open to him to claim that the question would not have been affirmatively answered, and it is proper, for the purpose of a review on error, to assume that it might have been.—Mawich v. Elsey, 47 Mich. 10.

¶ 1492. In reviewing the action of the trial court in excluding testimony offered by defendants in support of the defense set up, the question is whether such exclusion could have worked a prejudice to their rights since in such case it should appear affirmatively that no injury could result therefrom.—Salliotte v. Williams, 130 Mich. 36.

¶ 1493. In trover by a wife for chattels belonging to her, but seized and sold under a mortgage given by her husband, evidence of the prices realized on the sale, which was admissible to rebut the plaintiff's evidence of value, was excluded, and it was urged that its exclusion did not injure the defendant inasmuch as it could not have been a safe guide to the jury, as bidders must be presumed to have allowed for contingencies of title. Held, untenable, as they might also have supposed that plaintiff meant to rely on recovering damages in the action brought by her for conversion.—Davis v. Zimmerman, 40 Mich. 24.

¶ 1494. A verdict directed for defendant on plaintiff's opening statement because the declaration was deemed to set forth a cause of action against defendant as master and also one against him as owner of premises on which plaintiff worked for an independent contractor, and was thereby rendered double and uncertain, cannot be supported regardless of that error by questioning on error for first time the sufficiency of the declaration to plead any actionable negligence against defendant as owner, and thus throw plaintiff back on a disavowed relationship of master and servant and defeat him on that, it being presumable that had objection to sufficiency been seasonably made the plaintiff would have amended.—Douglas v. Marsh, 141 Mich. 209.

§ 355. ——As to disregard of improper evidence by judge.

§ 356. ——As to effect of ruling on subsequent course of trial.

¶ 1496. Where a party offers evidence which is inadmissible and is consequently ruled out, the court cannot presume that the party was restrained by this offer from putting in other evidence which would have been proper.—Wright v. De Groff, 14 Mich. 164.

¶ 1497. Where a trial judge, in excluding objectionable testimony, declines to exclude what relates to a certain matter that is involved with the rest, its effect cannot be supposed to have been fully destroyed.—Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 49 Mich. 104.

§ 357. ——Accepting or excusing jurors.

¶ 1498. The action of the court in excusing a juror for cause when he was not disqualified, is not error warranting a reversal when the record does not show that the objecting party was prevented from having a jury drawn from the regular panel, that it had exhausted its peremptory challenges, or that it was prejudiced by the fact that the juror was excused.—Commercial Bank of Bay City v. Chatfield, 121 Mich. 641.

¶ 1499. The overruling of a challenge for cause, where one of the jurors called in was a party to a suit then pending, and one of plaintiff's counsel in the case on trial was his attorney and the opposing party was represented by defendant's counsel, even if erroneous, was not presumed to have been prejudicial to defendant, where the record did not show that such juror actually sat in the case, or that defendant exhausted his peremptory challenges.—Simons v. Cash, 136 Mich. 558.

§ 358. ——Reception or exclusion of evidence.

See also ante ¶¶ 1491, 1492, 1493.
As to effect of ruling on subsequent offers or rulings, see ante § 356.

¶ 1500. Where upon examination of the record it cannot be said that objectionable testimony was not prejudicial, the cause must go down for a new trial.—Marshall v. Wabash R. Co., 171 Mich. 180.

¶ 1501. Where the record does not show what answer a witness gave to a question that might have been proper, the Supreme Court cannot presume that there was any injury in admitting it.—Howard v. Patrick, 43 Mich. 121.

¶ 1502. Where the record did not show distinctly that the jury made no allowance for evidence erroneously introduced, the court refused to hold the error immaterial on the inference that the verdict was not affected by it, as certain other evidence was needed to supplement it.—Mandigo v. Mandigo, 26 Mich. 349.

¶ 1503. The Supreme Court will not entertain objections based on the admission of leading questions unless satisfied beyond doubt that it occasioned injury.—Smith v. Township of Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159.

¶ 1504. Where a question of fraud is involved and a wide range of examination has been allowed, and evidence of doubtful relevancy is admitted in reply, the judgment ought not to be reversed for error in admitting such evidence, unless the court is clearly satisfied that its admission prejudiced the legal rights of the plaintiff in error.—Comstock v. Smith, 20 Mich. 338.

¶ 1505. One who complains of being prejudiced by the admission of a mere question must make a clear showing. The presumption is that the judge's discretion was fairly exercised. So held where complaint was made that a newspaper article not in proof had been put before the jury by means of questions whose apparent purpose was to ascertain whether the witness had furnished the items of which it was made up, as the article was not given in the record, it does not clearly appear whether too great latitude was allowed or not.—Somerville v. Richards, 37 Mich. 299.

¶ 1506. Where the record does not give the answers of a party on cross-examination, it cannot be assumed that the questions did any harm.—Keables v. Christie, 47 Mich. 594.

¶ 1507. The rejection of depositions cannot be held error if there is nothing in the record to show that material testimony was thereby excluded.—Snow v. Nowlin, 43 Mich. 383.

¶ 1508. Where a particular fact that would not be material unless known at a particular time to the party seeking to show it does not appear from the record to have been so known, the exclusion of testimony thereof is not regardable as prejudicial error.—Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189.

¶ 1509. Where the certificate to the bill of exceptions does not indicate that all the testimony, or all that is necessary to consider on a certain question, is before the court, it will be presumed that the verdict as to that point was supported by evidence of probative force, and an admission of an indefinite conclusion of a witness thereon will not be regarded as prejudicial.—Haney v. Village of Pinckney, 155 Mich. 656.

¶ 1510. It cannot be said on review in an action for misrepresenting the value of land to a purchaser that the exclusion, on plaintiff's cross-examination, of the question whether he had not tried to sell or trade the land after visiting it, was not necessarily prejudicial, in the absence of something to show its materiality, since such an offer to sell may have been under circumstances that would not tend to show that he ratified the sale to himself.—Snow v. Nowlin, 43 Mich. 383.

¶ 1511. Plaintiff sought to show an alleged conversation with defendant in which the matter of the frequency of defendant's calls upon plaintiff's wife was gone over, and in which he talked about the calls, and why they were made and what he was doing there. Plaintiff's counsel admitted that he did not expect to show that any admission was made at the conversation of criminal intimacy between defendant and plaintiff's wife. The court excluded the conversation unless it should be connected with something else to make it relevant. Held, that the ruling simply went to the order of proof; that the testimony offered would not, standing alone, have been sufficient to warrant a verdict for plaintiff, and that it could not be said the ruling was prejudicial.—Hanselman v. Dovel, 102 Mich. 505.

¶ 1512. Where plaintiff read at the trial his cross-examination of witnesses whose depositions were taken by defendant, his failure to also read the direct examination cannot be held prejudicial where such direct examination does not appear in the record.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

§ 359. ——Error relating to argument.

Showing in the record necessary for review of argument or conduct of trial, see ante § 184.

¶ 1513. Unless it clearly appears that improper or impassioned arguments of counsel were unwarranted by the evidence and probably contributed to the result and worked prejudice to the defendant, a reversal will not be made on such ground.—Bosek v. Detroit United Railway, 175 Mich. 8.

¶ 1513a. No presumption of injury arises from the use of improper language by counsel in his argument to the jury, where the court immediately declares such remarks improper, in the presence of the jury.—Wenzel v. Johnston, 112 Mich. 243.

¶ 1514. Exceptions to improper remarks of plaintiff's counsel in addressing the jury, which were provoked by the course taken by defendant's counsel upon the trial in respect to the matter commented upon, will not be sustained, unless it appears quite plainly that the verdict was influenced by said remarks.—Eastman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 101 Mich. 597.

¶ 1515. An assignment of error based upon the alleged use of improper language by counsel in addressing the jury will not be sustained, where the court cannot say that the facts disclosed by the record exclude the inferences of which the counsel thought them susceptible, as evidenced by the language complained of.—Totten v. Burhans, 103 Mich. 6.

¶ 1516. Improper argument will not be deemed harmless where it was persisted in until four objections were made, the offending counsel then having the last word.—Cavanagh v. Township of Riverside, 136 Mich. 660.

¶ 1517. Where neither the improper remarks of counsel nor the objections or rulings on the matter appear in the record except in the reasons for a motion for a new trial, and in the reasons for denying the motion in which last it is stated that the defendant was not prejudiced, that whenever the matter was called to the attention of the court it was immediately corrected and that counsel did not exceed his license in his remarks, the Supreme Court cannot say in view of the condition of the record that the trial court was not correct.—Pinkerton Bros. Co. v. Bromley, 128 Mich. 236.

¶ 1518. The fact that the plaintiff's attorney "commented to the jury upon the fact that the defendant had not produced" a scaler agreed upon by the contract, is not prejudicial error where the record does not show what he said, and it does not appear that the failure to produce him had any bearing against the defense; there being no reason why he should have been called by one party more than the other, or that he should have been called at all.—Malone v. Gates, 87 Mich. 332.

¶ 1519. Reversible error does not appear in refusing one of counsel the opportunity to argue a certain question before the jury where the ruling was subsequently reconsidered and the party's other counsel permitted to argue the question, there being nothing to show that the matter was not fully argued and no request to have it argued by a particular counsel.—Farnsworth v. Fraser, 137 Mich. 296.

§ 360. ——Error in instructions.

That jury followed instructions, see post § 379.

As to following erroneous rather than correct portion or version of charge, see post § 380.

As to effect of refusal to charge, see post § 379.

¶ 1520. A court of review cannot affirm a judgment upon the ground that an erroneous charge was error without prejudice, where the record does not purport to contain all the evidence.—First Nat. Bank of Niles v. Shue, 119 Mich. 560.

¶ 1521. It cannot be said that refusal of a proper request without mention or explanation in the charge as given was harmless where, though the subject was outside of the issues, there was evidence to which it applied.—Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 494.

¶ 1522. When the record shows that the jury had the correct understanding of the law despite an ambiguous instruction a further instruction in answer to their question must be held erroneous, where it contained language tending to make them believe that their understanding was not correct.—Howell v. Lansing City Elec. Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 432.

¶ 1523. Where, in an action for personal injuries caused by defendant's negligence, the jury, after being correctly instructed as to the measure of damages but erroneously as to the law of negligence, finds a verdict for plaintiff for only $150, it cannot be presumed to have been prejudiced in the assessment of damages by the erroneous instructions.—Kalembach v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 87 Mich. 509.

§ 361. Presumption as to jurisdiction of lower court.

Sufficiency of record showing of jurisdiction or want of it, see ante §§ 172, 180.

Presumptions as to jurisdiction in general, see Courts, V; Judgments, VII.

¶ 1524. Where a bill in the circuit court, which is demurred to, alleges that the violation of a contract as charged will cause irreparable injury and that complainant's contract rights were invaded, the Supreme Court will not assume that the amount in dispute does not exceed $100.—George v. Rollins, 176 Mich. 144.

¶ 1525. If the defect of jurisdiction does not appear on the face of the record, it will be presumed that the court assumed jurisdiction after finding facts necessary to give jurisdiction over the subject-matter; hence, in the instance of tax proceedings, where the sale may be had of some lands and not of others (to-wit, those bid in by the state in prior years), that fact will be deemed to have been found so as to support jurisdiction.—Peninsular Sav. Bank v. Ward, 118 Mich. 87.

¶ 1526. A case of summary proceedings before a circuit court commissioner, to obtain possession of lands, was appealed to and tried in the circuit court, and after judgment for the complainant a case was made presenting certain jurisdictional questions for review, but the case did not set forth the affidavit for appeal; and objection was taken in the Supreme Court that only the issue upon the merits was brought up by the appeal, unless such a special affidavit was made as was necessary for a special appeal from a justice's court. It was held that if such special affidavit was necessary the court must infer that one was made—the jurisdictional questions having been raised and passed upon in the circuit court without objection to the affidavit.—Sallee v. Ireland, 9 Mich. 154.

§ 362. Presumption as to matters not in record, case or bill.

Presumptions as to contents and correctness of bill or case, see ante §§ 345-349.

As to jurisdiction, see ante § 361.

As to proofs or want of proofs not appearing on record, see post §§ 373-378.

Of evidence essential to sustain rulings, instructions or findings, see post §§ 374-378.

Scope of the questions open on record and bill which is incomplete, see ante XII, B, 8.

On appeal from condemnation proceedings or proceedings to establish highways, see Eminent Domain, VIII; Highways, II, B.

Presumption as to allowance of sum in lieu of dower being included in decree for property adjustment on Divorce, see Divorce, X, B.

¶ 1527. The rule that error will not be presumed applied where the questions in the case arose on written instruments which did not appear in the bill of exceptions.—State Ins. Co. of Lansing v. Reynolds, 35 Mich. 304.

¶ 1528. Where it did not expressly appear from the record whether certain quitclaim deeds introduced in evidence on the trial below purported on their face to have been given for a valuable consideration, yet, inasmuch as the fact seemed to have been assumed by the counsel in their mode of examination, arguments and requests to charge, and by the court in the charges given, and as quitclaim deeds almost universally express such consideration, the Supreme Court presumed the fact.—Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 410.

¶ 1529. Where a contract refers to a plan, specifications and profile, and makes them a part of itself, and they are not given in the record, it cannot be presumed, in a suit in equity, that they do not supply apparent omissions from the contract.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

§ 363. ——As to authority of attorneys and agents.

¶ 1530. Where the record of a judgment discloses that an attorney of the court assumed to answer for a defendant, and consented in writing that a judgment might be entered against him, the Supreme Court will assume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the attorney was duly authorized. This would be sufficient evidence of jurisdiction of the parties.—Arnold v. Nye, 23 Mich. 286.

¶ 1531. A judgment, rendered upon an award, pursuant to Revised Statutes, 1838, p. 532, will not be reversed on error, on the ground that it does not appear that an agent, who executed the agreement for submission on behalf of one of the parties, had authority to do so, where the award recites that such party was duly notified of the hearing before the arbitrators, and appeared and was heard, with his witnesses and counsel, and where, being deemed in court by the statute, he allowed the judgment to be entered on the award without objection on the ground of such agent's want of authority; but the court will infer from these facts a recognition and adoption, by the party, of the act of his agent in executing the submission, even where such party is a corporation.—City of Detroit v. Jackson, 1 D. 106.

§ 364. ——As to nature and ground of action.

Construction of the pleadings, see ante § 330.

¶ 1532. Where the record does not show the ground of the action below it must be presumed on error to have been legal if legality was possible.—Schwab v. Coots, 48 Mich. 116.

¶ 1533. Where one sues upon a judgment in trespass as assignee before judgment of the right of action thereon and of such judgment, and the record does not show the nature of the right of action, it will not be presumed to have been assignable for the purpose of imputing error to the trial court in its rulings and judgment.—Finn v. Corbitt, 36 Mich. 318.

§ 365. ——As to commencement and pendency of action.

¶ 1534. Of two suits, one by declaration, the other by attachment, commenced on the same day by the same plaintiff against the same defendant for the same cause of action, it was presumed, the record showing nothing to the contrary, that the suit by declaration was begun first.—Wales v. Jones, 1 Mich. 254; and see Pew v. Yoare, 12 Mich. 16.

¶ 1535. Where on error the record does not disclose a copy of a plea which it was claimed was an attempt to give notice of the fact that a settlement had been effected, and evidence thereof would be given under the general issue, and no motion was based thereon nor action of the court appears in the record, and it does not appear that the matter was ever called to the attention of the trial court, and no exception was taken, the Supreme Court will conclude that the case was a pending suit, recognized as such by the parties who proceeded to try the merits without objection.—Burr's Damascus Tool Works v. Peninsular Tool Mfg. Co., 142 Mich. 417.

§ 366. ——As to consolidation or severance of actions.

¶ 1536. Suit against the maker and indorser of a promissory note. Defendants pleaded separately and the issue as to one was tried, and judgment rendered against him. On error, the record not showing that any objection was taken in the court below to the trial of the separate issue, it was held that it must be presumed either that the action was severed by consent, or by the putting off of the trial as to himself by the other defendant.—Maynard v. Penniman, 10 Mich. 153.

§ 367. ——As to continuances and interlocutory matters.

¶ 1537. Error cannot be presumed; and that a garnishment suit was not brought on for trial at the term at which judgment in the principal suit was rendered, does not require its dismissal in the Supreme Court on error, where there is nothing in the record to show that it was not continued over the term upon cause shown or by consent of counsel.—Old Second Nat. Bank v. Williams, 112 Mich. 564.

§ 368. ——As to parties and their identity.

As to identity of attorney and assignee of judgment, see ante ¶ 1442.

¶ 1538. Where initials only were used for the Christian name of a plaintiff, it was held that it would not be presumed, for the purpose of invalidating a judgment in his favor, that he had any other name than that in which suit was brought and judgment rendered.—Fewlass v. Abbott, 28 Mich. 270.

¶ 1539. A defendant to all appearances properly joined, and who, instead of putting in a sworn disclaimer, denies complainant's right to relief against him, and avers himself to be a stranger to the issue, must, if he appeals on the merits, be regarded as an ordinary party.—Shelden v. Erskine, 78 Mich. 627.

§ 369. ——As to pleadings and amendments.

Want of a technical amendment may be regarded as harmless error under the statute of amendments. See Harmless Error.

¶ 1540. The Supreme Court will regard an amendment to a declaration as having been made after judgment if it might have been made before on motion under How. St., § 7636.—Smith v. Pinney, 86 Mich. 484.

¶ 1540a. On review an amendment to meet a variance, which the trial court ought to have permitted if requested, will be deemed to have been made.—Robinson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 103 Mich. 607.

¶ 1541. Appellate courts are authorized to amend declarations where the issue is not altered by the amendment (Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10273, 10272, subd. 7) and therefore an amendment which should have been made, will be considered as made.—Smith v. Cowles, 123 Mich. 4.

¶ 1542. Where an amendment to a pleading is ordered or permitted and is of such a nature that the record furnishes upon its face all the data for applying it, it may be considered as made, though no verbal changes are made in the pleadings, which are then to be read as if they had been actually amended.—Rimmele v. Huebner, 190 Mich. 247.

¶ 1543. A judgment entered on plaintiff's motion on the ground of the frivolousness of a demurrer will not be reversed because defendant was not allowed to plead over, where it does not appear from the record that he asked permission to do so, or that there was any showing made that he had a meritorious defense.—Wyckoff, S. & B. Co. v. Bishop, 98 Mich. 352.

¶ 1544. Upon review on error of case appealed from justice's court, an amendment to cure an objection—raised for the first time in the circuit court—that suit was commenced by plaintiffs in their individual capacity instead of as a church or corporation, was considered as made.—Stofflet v. Strome, 101 Mich. 197.

¶ 1545. Where, in a suit upon a justice's judgment, a question of variance between the declaration and the proof as to the date of the original summons arises, and the circuit judge decides that such variance does not exist, the Supreme Court, if, upon inspection, disagreeing with him, will treat his determination as an amendment, it being apparent that the case proceeded upon the theory that the date was correctly pleaded.—Waldron v. Palmer, 104 Mich. 556.

¶ 1546. The failure to have the order reviving a suit in the name of an administrator signed by the court, or to have it entered in the court journal, was immaterial where the general issue was filed without the objection being raised and the records showed the death and the appointment of the administrator, and the order was one which would have been granted as of course, so that it may be treated as if duly made.—Ferguson v. Wilson, 122 Mich. 97.

§ 370. ——As to admissibility of evidence.

That foundation or preliminary facts were proved, see post § 371.

As to other matters affecting harmlessness of ruling, see ante § 358.

Showing in bill or case as to admission or rejection of evidence, see ante § 182.

Showing in bill or case as to exclusion of evidence, see ante § 183.

¶ 1547. It will not be presumed that facts given in evidence were not admissible under the pleadings.—Comstock v. Hollon, 2 Mich. 355.

¶ 1548. Evidence that might have been proper must be presumed so, where the record shows nothing to the contrary.—Grosvenor v. Ellis, 44 Mich. 452.

¶ 1549. Where a relevant question has been allowed against a merely general objection, and the witness' previous testimony is not given, the ruling will not be presumed wrong unless the testimony be such as would be inadmissible from any one.—Zimmer v. Davis, 35 Mich. 39.

¶ 1550. Where the bill of exceptions states that the whole of the testimony given on a certain branch of the case is not returned, the Supreme Court cannot presume error in the reception of such testimony.—Carr v. McCarthy, 70 Mich. 258.

¶ 1551. Where the record shows that but a small part of the evidence is contained in the bill of exceptions, and where such bill nowhere states that it sets forth all the testimony for any given point, it cannot be presumed that there was error in the admission of evidence which, as appears from a charge that was not excepted to, was rendered nonprejudicial by plaintiff's own evidence on the same point not in the record.—Bostwick v. Losey, 67 Mich. 554.

¶ 1552. Where deeds were received in evidence without objection, the court cannot presume that their relevancy did not appear. —Final v. Backus, 18 Mich. 218.

¶ 1553. Where the justice was sued for damages for refusing to accept an instrument of recognizance tendered by the party so desiring to appeal, and the suit was brought to the Supreme Court on error, the instrument tendered being spoken of in the record and by the attorneys in their examination of witnesses as a bond, and though objected to when offered in evidence, yet not objected to as a bond instead of a recognizance, the Supreme Court assumed that it was a recognizance in due form.—Guenther v. Whitmore, 24 Mich. 504.

¶ 1554. It was assigned as error that the court below allowed parol proof of the rate of interest in a foreign country. It not appearing in the record that the rate was established by statute, the judgment below was presumed to be correct.—Kermott v. Ayer, 11 Mich. 181.

¶ 1555. On writ of error a ruling out of testimony as to the master's rules for government of servants on the ground, taken as assumed, that the rules were in writing, will be aided by the presumption that if the assumed fact had not been true appellant's (master's) counsel would have made appropriate objection.—Barschow v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 147 Mich. 226.

¶ 1556. It will be presumed that the trial court, in an action for alienation of affections and criminal conversation, was correct in excluding a copy of a letter traced to the possession of defendant's wife, since deceased, where defendant was given notice to produce it and denied having it, and plaintiff claims that defendant was her administrator and as such the proper custodian of her papers, which defendant denies, claiming that his son was administrator, but where neither party points out any testimony in the record to sustain his claim.—Brown v. Evans, 149 Mich. 429.

¶ 1557. Where error is assigned on the rejection of evidence that would only be admissible as res gestae, and the record leaves it doubtful whether it really was so, its exclusion will be presumed correct.—Mabley v. Kittleberger, 37 Mich. 360.

¶ 1558. Book entries on defendant's ledger will not be presumed in a court of appeal to have been incompetent, where the record failed to show what such entries were.—Roberts v. Pepple, 55 Mich. 367.

¶ 1559. A ruling of the lower court excluding the testimony of a divorced wife as to matters contained in a manuscript written by her husband, on the ground that such matters related to the secret relations existing between husband and wife, and were therefore inadmissible under section 10213, 3 Comp. L. 1897, must be presumed to be correct, where such manuscript is not made a part of the record.—In re Mansbach's Estate, 150 Mich. 348.

¶ 1560. For the purpose of lessening plaintiff's credibility by showing a weakened memory, it is not error to ask a physician on cross-examination after he has testified to sickness consequent on the alleged assault about witness' testimony in a former action in which he then stated that plaintiff was suffering from senile dementia and to rule out portions of the former testimony as to the nature of an accident then in question and how it affected plaintiff, where the nature of that ruled out is not shown in the record; since it appears that enough to make a full cross-examination remained.—Lee v. Longwell, 136 Mich. 458.

§ 371. ——As to foundation or preliminary proofs.

Presumption as to prejudice from admission or exclusion where other essential facts do not appear, see ante § 358.

Review of findings on preliminary facts or foundation, see post § 460.

¶ 1561. Where the record does not show that all the evidence is not included in the bill of exceptions, it cannot be presumed upon error that there was not a foundation for hypothetical questions as to the value of plaintiff's services.—Crowell v. Truax, 94 Mich. 585.

¶ 1562. A court of review will not say that a circuit judge erred in assuming that an erasure in a deed was not suspicious, without an inspection of such instrument.—Munroe v. Eastman, 31 Mich. 283.

§ 372. ——As to objections not apparent on record.

Sufficiency of bill or case to show objections, etc., see ante § 177.

¶ 1563. Where the record shows an objection taken on the trial in the court below to the admission of evidence, which was overruled, the Supreme Court will consider the question presented by the objection, notwithstanding the bill of exceptions does not show an exception to the ruling. The court will presume, from the sealing of the bill of exceptions, that the ruling was duly excepted to.—McBride v. Cicotte, 4 Mich. 478; Turner v. City of Grand Rapids, 20 Mich. 390.

¶ 1564. Where, in an action of trover by a mortgagee against an attaching officer, it appears probable from the record that the officer seized the property under a claim that the mortgage was fraudulent as to creditors, and that the validity of the mortgage was the sole question in controversy, and which was the only one submitted to the jury, the court will not presume that the question of the necessity for a demand was raised in the court below because under the defendant's requests to charge it might have been, said question not going to the merits of the controversy.—Malachiski v. Stellwagen, 85 Mich. 41.

¶ 1565. Where the record on error shows that exceptions were taken on one point only, it must be presumed that upon all other matters in the admission or exclusion of evidence the case was not open to complaint.—Arbuckle v. Smith, 74 Mich. 568.

¶ 1566. Where the record shows that exceptions were taken to a commissioner's report, but does not show what they were, it cannot be assumed, for the purpose of finding error, that they were of any force.—Ruggles v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Mich. 192.

¶ 1567. The statement in a brief that the stenographer's minutes show that certain objections were made and exceptions taken cannot be accepted against the fact that they do not appear in the record.—Lamb v. Lippincott, 115 Mich. 611.

¶ 1568. Where a case made is apparently a complete narrative of all the evidence and proceedings on the trial, no inference can be drawn from the signing of the case by the judge that any exception was taken which is not stated.—Turner v. City of Grand Rapids, 20 Mich. 390.

§ 373. Presumptions as to proofs or want of proof.

See also ante ¶¶ 1528, 1529, post §§ 374-378.
Presumptions as to contents and correctness of bill or case, see ante §§ 345-349.
Of matters to render error harmless, see ante § 354.
As to erroneous ruling dissuading party from further offers, see ante § 356.
Sufficiency of the bill or case to present the evidence, see ante § 176.
Showing in bill or case to present point, see ante § 186.

¶ 1569. In the absence of a return that the bill of exceptions embraces all the testimony in substance, it must be presumed that testimony was introduced to establish any fact essential to support the verdict.—Manning v. Bresnahan, 63 Mich. 584.

¶ 1570. Where the record does not purport to set out all the evidence given on the trial, it must be presumed that there was evidence to support the jury's finding.—Stevens v. Rose, 69 Mich. 259.

¶ 1571. The Supreme Court does not assume that any material fact, not found and not admitted upon the trial was proven.—Edgerly v. Ladies of Modern Maccabees, 175 Mich. 28.

¶ 1572. Judgment cannot be reversed on grounds resting in inference not based on evidence introduced below.—Wheeler v. Constantine, 39 Mich. 62.

¶ 1573. Where an order of court expressly refers to a specific affidavit as the evidence on which it is based, it cannot be presumed that there was other evidence.—Gillett v. Needham, 37 Mich. 143.

¶ 1574. Where a record did not show affirmatively the date of an administrator's sale held void by the court below under Comp. L. 1871, § 4562, How. St., § 6042, it was presumed, in support of the judgment, that the sale was made after the statute took effect.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 Mich. 90.

¶ 1575. Where one sued upon a promissory note indorsed to him, the court refused to presume that there was no evidence that he had paid value for it, when the bill of exceptions, which did not purport to give all the evidence, disclosed that the defendant impliedly conceded such payment by his course during the trial, and took no exception to the action of the court below in assuming this fact to be admitted.—Borden v. Clark, 26 Mich. 410.

¶ 1576. The Supreme Court will not treat a case as settled and compromised of which a suggestion was filed, when no motion is made to dismiss, and where the fact of settlement is disputed.—Paulus v. Nunn, 48 Mich. 190.

¶ 1577. In the absence from the bill of exceptions of a statement that all of the evidence upon the subject is set forth therein it cannot be assumed that the necessary evidence connecting certain receipts or their stubs with the delivery of certain wheat was not given.—Freese v. Arnold, 99 Mich. 13.

¶ 1578. In an action to recover for back taxes against which plaintiff's deed from defendant covenanted, it was claimed upon error that the record of the tax constituted no lien upon the land; but as such record was not before the court, and as there was nothing to show that the bill of exceptions contained all the evidence, the judgment below was affirmed.—Lynch v. Craney, 95 Mich. 199.

¶ 1579. An objection that notes of one of the beneficiaries under a mortgage in foreclosure must be deemed to have been paid because not produced below, was obviated where the record did not indicate that there was any contest over the claim, and the notes were brought into the Supreme Court and filed with the clerk.—Gillam v. Barnes, 123 Mich. 119.

¶ 1580. On error to a judgment of the circuit court rendered on appeal from a justice of the peace, it will be presumed that the justice based his judgment on satisfactory proofs of liability of the defendant, which the plaintiff had a right to make, and which were necessary to arrive at the judgment.—McMillan v. Schneider, 147 Mich. 266.

¶ 1581. On error to a judgment for trespassing on state tax lands, it will be presumed that the proceedings by which the state took title were regular, where the tax proceedings were introduced in evidence and no irregularity was pointed out or any objection made to them.—Blake v. Grondin, 141 Mich. 104.

¶ 1582. The theory that defendant signed a writing as a contract and not as a mere enrolment will be adopted by the Supreme Court on appeal the more readily where the execution of the writing is not denied.—International Text-Book Co. v. Marvin, 166 Mich. 660.

¶ 1583. In an action on a note by the administrator of the estate of a person who did a private banking business under an assumed name it will be presumed on appeal that decedent complied with the mandatory provisions of Comp. Laws 1897, § 5271, How. 2nd Ed., § 6389, relating to brokers and exchange dealers and the filing of a certificate with the county clerk setting forth the names of the members connected with the company, the name under which the business is done and the residence of such members where the record is silent on the question.—Halpin v. White, 197 Mich. 549.

§ 374. ——To sustain rulings.

As to facts making evidence admissible or not, see ante § 370.

¶ 1585. A ruling is presumed to have been supported by evidence if all the evidence does not appear in the record.—McGraw v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 54 Mich. 145.

¶ 1586. Where a bill of exceptions does not purport to give the evidence in full or its substance, it is presumed on error that there was evidence to justify the rulings.—Wood v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 49 Mich. 370.

¶ 1587. Where in an action on an appeal bond against the sureties brought by one of the two parties for whose benefit the bond was given, the trial court on objection ruled that such action could be maintained by such party alone, it was held that in the absence of proof in the record that such ruling was erroneous it would not be presumed that there was no showing justifying the maintenance of the action by plaintiff alone.—Miller v. Maher, 178 Mich. 571.

§ 375. ——To sustain findings and conclusions.

As to weight and sufficiency, see post § 378.

¶ 1588. Findings are presumed to be warranted by evidence where the record does not affirmatively show that the evidence is all returned.—Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563.

¶ 1589. A finding is presumed, on review, to have been supported by the testimony if the evidence does not appear in the record.—Berry v. Monroe, 57 Mich. 187.

¶ 1590. A referee's conclusions are presumed to have been warranted by the proofs if the bill of exceptions does not contain all the evidence.—Grosvenor v. Ellis, 44 Mich. 452.

¶ 1591. The Supreme Court in reviewing cases at law will assume that all conclusions of fact were warranted.—Belleville Sav. Bank v. Richardi, 56 Mich. 453.

¶ 1592. Unless the record distinctly shows that it contains all the evidence, a general determination for plaintiff, no special finding having been asked or given, cannot be held unwarranted by the finding.—Gass v. Van Wagner, 63 Mich. 610.

¶ 1593. Where the record does not purport to contain all of the testimony, it will be presumed that there was evidence to support the jury's finding upon a fact submitted to them.—Cappon & Bertsch Leather Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 114 Mich. 263.

¶ 1594. Where the record does not purport to contain all the evidence, a finding of facts made by the trial court without the aid of a jury must be deemed conclusive.—Lasley v. Preston, 157 Mich. 66.

¶ 1595. The reviewing court could not say that any finding of fact made in a trial without a jury was wrong, where the record indicated that the testimony was not all returned.—Mason & Hamlin Co. v. Gage, 119 Mich. 361.

¶ 1596. It will be presumed on appeal in an action of ejectment that there was no mistake by the government surveyor in making a government plat which was introduced as evidence and was used as a basis for the findings of the court.—Bransfield v. Wallace, 195 Mich. 41.

¶ 1597. Where amendments were not proposed to the findings of fact made by the court on a trial without jury in the manner provided by the rules, it is presumed on error that the evidence warrants such findings.—Merrill v. Newton, 99 Mich. 226; Becker v. Headsten, 137 Mich. 478.

¶ 1598. Where findings of a trial court are not proposed within ten days after judgment as required, and the time is not extended, it will be presumed on error that the evidence warranted the findings.—People v. Southern Surety Co., 199 Mich. 30.

¶ 1599. Where no bill of exceptions was settled, the Supreme Court on writ of error must assume that the testimony supported the findings of fact made by the circuit judge. —Loveland v. Bump, 198 Mich. 564.

§ 376. ——To sustain charge given.

Construction of the charge, see ante §§ 334, 335.

Presumption as to admissions of fact on which charge is based, see ante § 350.

That evidence was sufficient, see post § 378.

Showing in the bill or case, see ante § 185.

¶ 1600. A charge is presumed to be warranted by the evidence where the bill of exceptions does not purport to set forth all the evidence or to give its substance.—Cook v. Hopper, 23 Mich. 511; Greenlee v. Lowing, 35 Mich. 63; Wicks v. Ross, 37 Mich. 464; Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 Mich. 292; Hall v. Johnson, 41 Mich. 286; Cummins v. People, 42 Mich. 142; Brown v. Dunckel, 46 Mich. 29; Wilson v. Bowen, 64 Mich. 133; Stevens v. Rose, 69 Mich. 259; Botsford v. Chase, 108 Mich. 432; Westra v. Westra's Estate, 101 Mich. 526; Saunders v. Closs, 117 Mich. 130.

¶ 1601. Where the record does not show that all the evidence is included in the bill of exceptions, it must be assumed that there was sufficient evidence to justify instructions whereby certain issues were submitted to the jury.—Bond v. McMahon, 94 Mich. 557.

¶ 1602. It will not be presumed that the court, in stating the facts to the jury as they appeared on the trial, assumed things to have appeared which did not.—Taff v. Hosmer, 14 Mich. 309.

¶ 1603. An instruction will not be deemed erroneous in the absence from the record of a material exhibit on which it is based.—Kimball v. Macomber, 50 Mich. 362.

¶ 1604. Where an instrument disputed for uncertainty in its wording is not sent up with the bill of exceptions, the existence of a doubt is assumed in support of a charge submitting it to the jury.—Paine v. Ringold, 43 Mich. 341.

¶ 1605. Where the record contains only that portion of the charge upon which error is alleged, it is to be presumed that the rest of the charge was correct and satisfactory upon the hypotheses warranted by the evidence.—English v. Caldwell, 30 Mich. 362.

¶ 1606. Where one of three partners is defending against a draft, drawn in the firm name by another partner to pay the individual debt of the third, the submission to the jury of the question whether he did not authorize the giving of the draft, or ratify it afterwards, cannot be presumed to be error where it appears that he was himself questioned as a witness on this subject and answered fully, but none of his evidence is given in the record.—Hurd v. Newton, 36 Mich. 35.

¶ 1607. If the party alleging error claims that there is a want of evidence to sustain an instruction to the jury he must show it, where the bill of exceptions does not purport to give the whole of the evidence, and especially if the trial judge in charging the jury stated, without objection, that there was such evidence.—Kline v. Kline, 49 Mich. 419.

¶ 1608. A charge that, while plaintiff could not recover for any more goods than his bill of particulars set forth, he was not bound by a mistake in carrying out the rate or price, but could show what he was actually to have, it not appearing by the record what were the contents of the bill of particulars but it appearing that plaintiff claimed there was a mistake in it in that respect, held not to have been erroneous.—Ames v. Quimby, 106 U. S. 342, 27 L. ed. 100, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 116.

¶ 1609. Where the forgery of the instrument sued upon was the only disputed question of fact, and the jury asked for further instructions, the judge's response that the question for them to consider was whether the signature to the instrument was genuine and that if genuine their verdict should be for the plaintiff, and, if a forgery, for the defendant, was presumed to have been a satisfactory explanation of the matter on which they sought guidance, where the record does not disclose on what point they desired further instruction.—Herbstreit v. Beckwith, 98 Mich. 98.

§ 377. ——To sustain refusal of charge.

Construction of the request and of charges given, see ante §§ 334, 335.

Showing in the bill or case, see ante § 185.

¶ 1610. Where a request to charge assumed that there was certain evidence, of which the record furnishes no indication, it will not be presumed that there was in fact such evidence, for the purpose of holding the rejection or the request to have been erroneous.—Tupper v. Kilduff, 26 Mich. 394.

¶ 1611. Where the bill of exceptions does not affirmatively show that there was no evidence tending to establish a specified fact, a refusal to charge that there was none cannot be presumed to be erroneous.—Curley v. Wyman, 34 Mich. 353.

¶ 1612. The burden is upon plaintiff in error to show error affirmatively; and when he complains that a question was not properly submitted to the jury he must show that there was evidence warranting the charge he asked.—Anderson v. Walter, 34 Mich. 113.

¶ 1614. The rejection of a request to charge, as being correct, but having nothing to do with the case, will not be held to be error, unless its relevancy is made to appear by the record.—Herbstreit v. Beckwith, 35 Mich. 96.

§ 378. ——As to weight and sufficiency of evidence.

That there was proof, see ante § 375.

That jury followed the evidence, see post § 384.

As to ruling having destroyed effect of evidence allowed to remain, see ante § 356.

Conclusiveness and effect of verdicts and findings on the evidence, see post XII, E.

¶ 1615. In support of a judgment the evidence will be presumed to have been sufficient.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Troy City Bank, 1 D. 457; Jacobs v. Callaghan, 57 Mich. 11.

¶ 1616. Where no motion for new trial is made upon the ground that a verdict is against the weight of testimony, it must presumed that the plaintiff's version of the transaction is true.—Salabrin v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 194 Mich. 458.

¶ 1617. The objection that judgment is not supported by the evidence cannot prevail where the record does not show that all was reported, and where that which was has some tendency to support the finding.—Young v. Taylor, 36 Mich. 25.

¶ 1618. Sufficient evidence to warrant the judgment is presumed to have been produced where the bill of exceptions does not purport to contain all that was given.—Barnes v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 54 Mich. 243.

¶ 1620. Where the evidence is not given in the record it must be assumed to be sufficient to support the verdict.—Jenks v. Brown, 38 Mich. 651.

¶ 1621. Where the circuit judge who signs a bill of exceptions certifies that it contains the substance of all the evidence, the verdict will be presumed to be warranted by the evidence if it stated that any was introduced tending to prove the material issues.—Rolfe v. Dudley, 58 Mich. 208.

¶ 1622. An objection that there was no evidence warranting the submission to the jury of a particular claim will not be considered where the record does not purport to contain all of the evidence on that subject.—Boyer v. Soules, 105 Mich. 31.

¶ 1623. Where a defendant, who has introduced in his defense a receipt by plaintiff showing a settlement of the claim sued upon, requests the court to instruct the jury that, unless the settlement is found to have been procured by duress, verdict should be in his favor, it will be presumed on error that there was sufficient evidence to warrant the submission of the question of duress to the jury.—Boyer v. Soules, 105 Mich. 31.

¶ 1624. It cannot be assumed that evidence that was given, but is not set forth in the record, was inconclusive.—Donkersley v. Levy, 38 Mich. 54.

¶ 1625. Where a defense is based solely on complainant's testimony, it is presumable that it could not have been strengthened by the testimony of others.—Higman v. Stewart, 38 Mich. 513.

¶ 1626. Where there is no finding that a possession was or was not adverse, though there was evidence of some possession, it cannot be said on error to a judgment in eject-ment tried by the court without a jury that plaintiff was barred because the possession continued during the statutory period.—Perkins v. Nugent, 45 Mich. 156.

¶ 1627. Where a trial of an action against attorneys for negligence in failing to perfect an appeal has been had upon the merits and a decree rendered against plaintiffs, such decree is prima facie right and the presumption of its validity will not be overcome by a showing of the amount involved in the original action or the amount of costs paid by reason of that decree.—Cornelissen v. Ort, 132 Mich. 294.

¶ 1628. The court cannot say, in appeal from judgment on a promissory note, that the judgment was not justified by the testimony, where, in his certificate to the bill of exceptions, the circuit judge states that not all of the testimony is contained therein.—Cannon v. McIntyre, 140 Mich. 24.

¶ 1629. On appeal from a decree quieting title to land, based on an administrator's deed executed in pursuance of a decree for specific performance, where no attack is made in the briefs on the formal regularity of the probate proceedings put in evidence, but not printed in the record, it will be presumed that the probate proceedings were regular, and in accordance with the provisions of chapter 255 (§§ 9472-9486), 3 Comp. L. 1897, and authorized the making of the decree.—Chandler v. Clark, 151 Mich. 159.

¶ 1630. In a suit for personal injury, the verdict will not be set aside as excessive where there was evidence of permanent injury, and where the testimony of the defendant's physicians was taken, but is not on record.—Van Orman v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 152 Mich. 185.

¶ 1631. It could not be said, as a matter of law, that, with evidence which the plaintiff, in an action for the death of a servant caused by inhaling ammonia gas blown out of a pipe joint claimed to have been packed with an improper gasket, might have produced except for erroneous rulings, the cause of the accident would appear to be entirely conjectural, or that the case presented would be one devoid of evidence that a previous inspection would have been of value; where the evidence showed that the gasket in question was of rubber, and being examined shortly after the accident was found to be rotten and appeared old, that oil was necessarily in the pipes and that oil will soften rubber, that ammonia is dangerous to handle and that the ammonia in the pipes was subjected to high pressure, that the joint in question had not been examined since the installation of the plant, four years prior to the accident; and where the court refused to admit evidence that other gaskets of the same material, placed at the same time, and subject to the same influences, as the one in question, had been removed because of deterioration.—Kaess v. Tivoli Brewing Co., 149 Mich. 371.

§ 379. Presumption as to application and construction of charge by jury.

Presumption as to harm from improper charge, see ante § 360.

That jury was misled by conflicting or ambiguous charge, see post § 380.

Construction of the charge and relation of its parts to the whole, see ante § 334.

Construction of charge according to evidence and issues, see ante § 335.

¶ 1632. Where the issue is distinctly set forth in the pleadings, and the evidence conforms to it, and the record does not show that the plaintiff took any ground inconsistent with the proofs, it is not to be assumed that the jury applied the language of the charge so as to make it cover anything foreign to the issue.—Pettibone v. Maclem, 45 Mich. 381.

¶ 1633. The Supreme Court presumes that the circuit judge can influence a jury in a trial before him; it being their duty to follow his instructions as to the law.—McDuff v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 84 Mich. 1.

¶ 1634. The mortgagee of chattels took them on writ of replevin, and one of the defendants claimed that some of his separate property was included among them. The judge charged that plaintiff would have no right to take such goods if they had not been intermingled with the rest and if he knew of the separate ownership. The jury afterwards asked if they might give costs to defendant in finding for the plaintiff, and he said no. Held, that it was not to be presumed that they understood this as overruling his former instructions.—Pray v. Cadwell, 50 Mich. 222.

¶ 1635. In an action for the balance due on a land contract in which the defendant pleads recoupment and set-off for the failure of the vendor to convey as agreed, in the absence of any evidence of damages it will be presumed that the jury followed the instructions of the court and gave no damages as recoupment.—McLeod v. Hunt, 128 Mich. 124.

¶ 1636. It cannot be presumed that the jury disregarded an unambiguous proviso by which an instruction was qualified twice in the charge merely because in another portion of the charge the proviso was omitted in a similar context.—Lillibridge v. Walsh, 104 Mich. 153.

¶ 1637. It is presumable that the refusal of a request without explanation will lead the jury to suppose that it was wrong in law.—Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 494.

¶ 1638. It cannot be assumed that the jury was misled into ignoring a charge on contributory negligence because it was not repeated in connection with a proper charge on negligence.—Alberts v. Village of Vernon, 96 Mich. 549.

§ 380. ——As to effect of conflict or ambiguity in charge.

¶ 1639. When conflicting charges are given, one of which is erroneous, it is to be presumed that the jury may have followed that which was erroneous; and the judgment will be reversed.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Monroe, 47 Mich. 152; Lamb v. Township of Clam Lake, 175 Mich. 77; People v. Eggleston, 186 Mich. 510; Williams v. Bailey, 186 Mich. 677; In re Bailey's Estate, Id.; Rathbone v. Detroit United Ry., 187 Mich. 586; (Bird, J., dissenting); In re Foerster's Estate, 193 Mich. 440; Gumtow v. Janke, Id.; Bayne v. Everham, 197 Mich. 181.

¶ 1640. Judgment must be reversed where a general verdict has been rendered upon a charge embracing an unsound theory, and where it is uncertain whether the error did or did not affect the result.—Warner v. Beebe, 47 Mich. 435.

¶ 1641. On review of a verdict for a defendant in an action for a breach of warranty of sale, it will be presumed that the jury may have followed an erroneous charge requiring the plaintiff to prove each and every claim as to the warranty, and the error is not cured by the rest of the charge.—Eaton v. Hope, 177 Mich. 411.

¶ 1642. Where portions of an instruction, as to the degree of proof required to establish a defense of wilful burning in an action on fire insurances, are conflicting, one portion correctly requiring only a preponderance of evidence, and another portion requiring more than that, it will be presumed that the jury may have followed the portion that was erroneous.—Silverstone v. London Assur. Corporation, 176 Mich. 525.

¶ 1643. In an action by an infant for personal injuries sustained, an instruction that plaintiff is entitled to recover damages for his decreased earning capacity if the jury find from the evidence, and from their observation of his injury, that during plaintiff's lifetime his earning capacity will be decreased by reason of the injury, does not contain error prejudicial to defendant in that it permits the jury to award damages to plaintiff's earning capacity for the period intervening between the trial and the time when plaintiff should reach the age of twenty-one, where, in other parts of the charge, the jury are told that plaintiff could not recover for his lost time while ill, and that his time, during a period in which he could not get work after the accident, belonged to his father, and where the record is such as to authorize the conclusion that court, counsel, and jurors must all have understood that recovery for decreased earning capacity must commence when the plaintiff became his own master.—Braasch v. Michigan Stove Co., 153 Mich. 652.

§ 381. ——As to effect of oral charge or modification.

¶ 1644. Where the bill of exceptions recites the judge's oral explanation of his written charge and shows that it neither could nor did modify the effect of any of the charge, there is no error.—O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367.

¶ 1645. Where the bill of exceptions recites that "the court otherwise orally explained some of the written charges given, but in no way changed or modified their legal effect," and does not state what the explanation was, it must be held erroneous under Laws 1869, p. 114 (How. St., § 6484), which requires the charge to be in writing and provides that the court shall in no case orally qualify, modify or in any manner explain the written charge.—O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367.

§ 382. Presumptions as to verdict and findings.

As to directed verdicts, see post §§ 386-388.
Implied findings, see post § 383.
Rules for reviewing chancery findings, see post XII, E, 1.
Construction of the findings and verdict, see ante §§ 336, 337.
Sufficiency of bill or case to admit of review, see ante § 189.
Remand for want of findings, see post §§ 505-507.

¶ 1646. No presumption in favor of the correctness of the determination of the circuit judge on disputed questions of fact in a chancery case can attach upon appeal, when it appears that such decision was based in part upon inadmissible testimony.—Bailey v. Holden, 113 Mich. 402.

¶ 1647. Findings are not open to dispute; but additional facts cannot be presumed, and must be regarded as not having occurred.—Mitchell v. Chambers, 43 Mich. 150.

¶ 1648. When a special finding by the circuit judge appears in the record, it will be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that it was made upon request; and such finding will be taken as part of the record.—Delashman v. Berry, 20 Mich. 292.

¶ 1649. Where the record is silent as to whether or not a written demand for special findings of fact and law was made as required by Circuit Court Rule 26, but such finding appears in the record, it will be presumed in the absence of any showing to the contrary that it was made upon request.—Thurber v. Aldrich, 167 Mich. 656.

¶ 1650. When requested in writing, the court sitting without a jury is required to specify the facts found and his conclusions of law thereon, and where the record fails to disclose any written request therefor, but findings have been filed, they will be presumed to have been made upon request and have the same effect as if requested.—White v. United States Gypsum Co., 168 Mich. 238.

¶ 1651. Where, upon a trial without a jury, the court erroneously excludes evidence, and then, though requested to make special findings of fact and law, makes only general findings and no findings at law, it cannot be presumed that other testimony would not have changed the result, or that no prejudice resulted from the failure to find more specifically the facts and law.—Ross v. Miner, 64 Mich. 204.

¶ 1652. Where the findings of fact support the judgment, and the testimony as to certain matters covered by proposed amendments is conflicting, it will be presumed that the court refused the amendments because they were not warranted by the testimony.—Crockett v. Bearce, 104 Mich. 257.

¶ 1654. Where, in accordance with the defendant's request the court charged that plaintiff could not recover if the jury found that he was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to travel along a public highway, riding in the buggy, driving a horse, and leading two colts behind by a halter and permitting another to follow over which he had no control, verdict following for plaintiff, must be presumed to have been on a finding that plaintiff was without fault which contributed to the injury.—Knowles v. Mulder, 74 Mich. 202.

§ 383. ——Facts implied from facts found.

See also ante ¶ 1417.

Presumption as to proofs sustaining result, see ante §§ 373-378.

Supplying findings by inference, see also ante § 336.

What facts are concluded by the verdict or findings on review, see post § 451.

¶ 1655. Where the trial court finds as a fact that a claim against the estate of a deceased person was duly allowed by the commissioners on claims, it will be presumed that it also found that the claim was properly presented.—In re Nuckols, 103 Mich. 297.

¶ 1656. A question submitted to the jury as to whether a plaintiff holder of a draft is a bona fide holder, will be held to have been answered in the negative, in an action on such instrument where the verdict is for the defendant who accepted the draft.—Texarkana Nat. Bank v. Stillwell & Co., 121 Mich. 154.

§ 384. ——As to basis or character of verdict.

That jury followed instructions, see ante §§ 379-381.

Presumption as to harm from improper argument, see ante § 359.

Construction of general verdict on diverse counts or issues, see ante § 337.

¶ 1657. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be presumed that the verdict of a jury was reached in a proper manner.—Richardson v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 182 Mich. 206.

¶ 1658. It cannot be assumed on error that the jury disregarded the proofs and acted on something else.—Wilcox v. Laflin & Rand Powder Co., 44 Mich. 35.

¶ 1659. The fact that the amount of a verdict differs from that claimed by either party, does not necessarily show that the result was not the deliberate conclusion of the jury, instead of a compromise.—Kinsey v. Dickinson, 175 Mich. 1.

¶ 1660. Where the finding was general, and it cannot be said that it did not wholly depend upon the wrongful exclusion of certain evidence, the judgment was reversed although there was other evidence that might have tended to support it.—Chapman v. Craig, 37 Mich. 370.

¶ 1661. Where it cannot be said as matter of law that a verdict on common counts is not based on a special agreement of which evidence has been given, a court of review must treat such agreement as in the case and as a basis for the verdict even though a special count resting upon it has been abandoned.—Thomas v. Caulkett, 57 Mich. 392.

¶ 1662. The reviewing court cannot assume without proof that the jury were prejudiced against the defendant because it was a corporation or because it was a foreign insurance corporation.—Goodwin v. Union Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 168 Mich. 41.

¶ 1663. Where the record does not show how a jury made up its award of damages, but the evidence would warrant the award as made, it will not be presumed that the jury included any improper item.—Sandler v. Bresnaham, 53 Mich. 567.

¶ 1664. In the absence of any objection that damages were not apportioned, as they should have been, for nonjoinder of a plaintiff in trespass, the Supreme Court cannot presume that they were not.—Achey v. Hull, 7 Mich. 423.

§ 385. ——As to adequacy or excessiveness of award.

Rules as to adequacy or excessiveness of award tested by evidence of damages, see Damages, IX, XI.

Rules as to amount recoverable under terms of contract or according to reasonable worth or value, see Contracts, VI, E; Implied Contracts; Values.

¶ 1665. It must be presumed on review that if exorbitant damages were given the lower court, on application, would have granted relief.—Briggs v. Milburn, 40 Mich. 512.

¶ 1666. Though the Supreme Court cannot disturb a verdict simply because it is for a large sum yet the amount may be taken into consideration as bearing upon the question whether the jury awarded punitive damages under an erroneous charge.—Stuyvesant v. Wilcox, 92 Mich. 233.

§ 386. Presumption on directed verdict.

Showing in record necessary to review, see ante § 188.

Shifting ground for direction to avoid error, see ante ¶ 1494.

¶ 1667. A consideration of the testimony in the light most favorable to the plaintiff in error is involved in the review of a judgment on a directed verdict.—O'Neill v. Northern Assur. Co., 145 Mich. 516; Barschow v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 147 Mich. 226; Steering Wheel Co. v. Fee Electric Car Co., 174 Mich. 512; Anderson v. Kendrick, 199 Mich. 240; In re Hewitt's Estate, Id.

¶ 1668. Where a verdict is directed for defendants, the evidence must on appeal be viewed most favorably to the plaintiff.—Brown v. Pontiac, O. & N. R. Co., 133 Mich. 371; Thurston v. Detroit United Ry., 137 Mich. 231; Lewis v. City of Marshall, 146 Mich. 389; Roy v. Bordas, 161 Mich. 567; Putnam v. Detroit United Ry., 164 Mich. 342; Orso v. Great Lakes Engineering Works, 164 Mich. 568; Burton v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., 166 Mich. 45; Johnson v. Burke, 167 Mich. 349; Dillon v. Craig, 168 Mich. 216; Johnson v. Union Carbide Co., 169 Mich. 651; Leary v. Houghton County Traction Co., 171 Mich. 365; McIntire v. Car, 171 Mich. 647; Sloan v. Detroit United Ry., 172 Mich. 68; Risbridger v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 188 Mich. 672; Baucino v. Fitzpatrick, 186 Mich. 1; Weitzel v. Detroit United Ry., 186 Mich. 7, 9 N. C. C. A. 407.

¶ 1669. A directed verdict for defendant is tested on error by the criterion whether after considering all the testimony in the case in favor of plaintiff as true, giving it the most favorable construction possible, it fails to make a prima facie case for him.—Robinson v. Ward, 141 Mich. 1; Haak v. Kellogg, 146 Mich. 541; Opsomere v. Opsomere, 162 Mich. 65.

¶ 1670. The rule that when an appeal is taken from a judgment based on a directed verdict the testimony will be read most favorably to the appellant, does not apply where the position assumed by counsel for appellant was that in any event the court should dispose of the case one way or the other.—Griffin v. Marlette State Bank, 150 Mich. 499.

¶ 1671. Where the court denied plaintiff's offer to discontinue, and directed a verdict for defendant, and plaintiff, on writ of error, seeks reversal of the judgment and a new trial, the Supreme Court will consider the case as one pending, and determine the question whether there was error in directing a verdict.—Foss v. Brown, 151 Mich. 119.

¶ 1672. Where a verdict is directed the party maintaining it in the Supreme Court can rely only on the undisputed testimony.—Parsons v. Frost, 55 Mich. 230.

¶ 1673. Where a verdict is directed for a defendant on the ground that no evidence of liability is presented by plaintiff, the question before the reviewing court is whether there was any evidence to go to the jury, taking the most favorable view of claimant's evidence and bearing in mind that the weight of the evidence was for the jury.—In re Reid's Estate, 170 Mich. 476.

¶ 1674. The Supreme Court, in determining whether in a suit for personal injuries on account of defendant's negligence a directed verdict should have been granted, cannot go into the weight of the evidence in the case, but must decide whether, giving plaintiff's testimony the strongest probative force it is entitled to, the court can say it was not sufficient to require the submission to the jury of the question of defendant's negligence.—Prisel v. Coney, 168 Mich. 602.

¶ 1675. In determining whether a case has been properly taken from the jury, such evidence as has been disregarded must be assumed to be true.—Scandinavian Beneficial & Social Soc. of Ishpeming v. Eggan, 59 Mich. 65.

¶ 1676. Where in a suit in tort a trial court directs a verdict for defendant, the Supreme Court, in reviewing the correctness of such direction, must accept as true the facts and circumstances of the case as presented by plaintiff's evidence, together with all legitimate inferences to be drawn therefrom.—Inglis v. Millersburg Driving Ass'n, 169 Mich. 311.

¶ 1677. Where the trial court directs a verdict for a plaintiff, the Supreme Court, in determining whether there was any testimony tending to support defendant's claim, must give to the testimony in his favor its greatest probative force.—Stearns Salt & Lumber Co. v. Newberg, 170 Mich. 324.

¶ 1678. In determining on error whether a case should have been taken from the jury, the testimony should be construed as liberally in favor of the plaintiff as is reasonably possible.—Hook v. Soloman, 194 Mich. 517.

¶ 1680. A verdict directed by the court will be presumed to be sustained by the evidence where the record does not purport to contain all the testimony.—Metz v. People's Savings Bank, 129 Mich. 320.

¶ 1681. Although a verdict for the defendant in an action on a life insurance policy should have been directed had all testimony on the part of defendant been taken as true, the court could not hold that the jury should have been so instructed, where the record did not contain all the evidence and in view of the statement that there was testimony in rebuttal of that of the defendant.—Malicki v. Guaranty Fund Life Soc., 119 Mich. 151.

¶ 1682. It is presumed in support of a ruling directing a verdict or the rejection of evidence that the party who had offered the evidence did not suggest, on its rejection, that he had any further proof.—Sherwood v. Landon, 57 Mich. 219.

¶ 1683. Where the bill of exceptions does not purport to contain all of the testimony, it will not be presumed, for the purpose of sustaining the action of the trial court in directing a verdict for defendant, that there was error in the admission of a bill of sale offered by plaintiff in proof of his title, because such instrument was not authenticated by proof of its execution, and that it was thereafter disregarded by the court for that reason.—Hoffman v. Pack, Woods & Co., 114 Mich. 1.

¶ 1684. A contention that a verdict for defendant should have been directed on the evidence will not be upheld where the defendant's brief contends that evidence has been omitted from the record but comparison with the original record discloses no such omission and the record does not show all testimony to be included.—Burt v. Greene, 125 Mich. 328.

§ 387. ——Assumption of truth of evidence.

¶ 1685. Defendant is entitled in a case where a verdict is directed against it, to have the evidence presented in its behalf considered by the Supreme Court as true.—Chase v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 165 Mich. 493.

¶ 1686. Where, after the court had declared his intention of directing a verdict for defendant upon plaintiff's statement of the case, counsel for plaintiff offered to prove by a witness already sworn the facts alleged in the declaration, and his offer was refused, the material facts alleged in the declaration must be taken as established.—Barto v. Detroit Iron & Steel Co., 155 Mich. 94.

¶ 1687. After the trial judge had indicated his intention to direct a verdict for defendant upon the statement of the case by counsel for plaintiff, counsel for plaintiff endeavored to make an additional statement which would enable the court to properly understand the facts which he had misunderstood; but the court would not permit an interruption, and told plaintiff's counsel that he could make his statement to the stenographer when the court had delivered his charge. Held, that under this ruling, the statement should receive the same consideration as though made before the conclusion of the charge.—Barto v. Detroit Iron & Steel Co., 155 Mich. 94.

¶ 1688. Where a verdict rendered for a defendant is based upon a legal proposition all issues in the case upon which the plaintiff offered evidence except such propositions and those which this one determines by necessary inference must be treated on error as if they had been decided in plaintiff's favor.—Hume v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 225.

§ 388. ——Restriction to evidence considered below.

¶ 1689. Where the trial court has assumed from defective proof, a certain set of facts, and directed a verdict, the decision of a reviewing court will be determined on the same facts, although it would have been the duty of the court below to admit supplemental evidence, had the defect in the proof given been pointed out.—Welton v. Township of Crystal, 152 Mich. 486.

¶ 1690. In assumpsit to recover for services rendered to defendant, the trial court, erroneously holding that the agreement between the parties, by which plaintiff was to receive a share of the profits, constituted them partners, directed a verdict for defendant. It was contended upon error that as plaintiff failed to show what the profits were, he was not damaged by the ruling. The Supreme Court, however, hesitating to determine the case upon the ground of absence of proof of a particular fact where the question was not passed upon in the lower court, and did not appear to have been presented there, ordered a reversal for the error noted. Stockman v. Michell, 109 Mich. 348.

§ 389. Presumptions as to propriety of new trial.

Sufficiency of bill or case to admit of review, see ante § 191.
Review of discretion of lower court, see post § 413.

¶ 1691. In reviewing the refusal of the trial judge to grant a new trial, the Supreme Court is bound to bring to the support of the decision of the trial judge all reasonable presumptions which arise from his superior opportunity to determine the credibility of witnesses.—Line v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 143 Mich. 163.

¶ 1692. The Supreme Court in reviewing the refusal of a trial court in refusing a new trial is bound to recognize the principles which have always governed trial courts in determining whether or not verdicts should be set aside, and is bound to bring to the support of the decision of the trial judge all reasonable presumptions which arise from his superior opportunity to determine the credibility of witnesses.—Dupuis v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co., 146 Mich. 151.

¶ 1693. Where the bill of exceptions is not certified as containing all the evidence, a statement made by the trial judge giving his reasons for refusing a new trial, will be taken as true where the appellant has not disputed it.—Schultz v. Guldenstein, 144 Mich. 636.

¶ 1694. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10504, it is the manifest duty of the Supreme Court to overrule a decision of the trial court refusing to set aside a verdict because contrary to the weight of the evidence, where it is apparent from the record, notwithstanding every reasonable presumption in support of such decision, that the trial court erred.—Hintz v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 132 Mich. 305.

¶ 1695. Where the evidence is convincing that there was no mistake in making a payment of money and in returning part of it thereafter, except in calculating the amount, and the evidence that the repayment was by way of a compromise was meagre, while the apparent miscarriage of justice was strong, the presumption in favor of the action of the trial court in denying a new trial will not prevail.—Stowell v. Ames, 148 Mich. 439.

¶ 1696. In reviewing denial of a new trial it must be assumed that a party's attorney on suggestion made by the court, would have offered to prove, either by statement or by interrogating a witness, facts within the knowledge of a party which were made the basis of motion for a new trial; and where he did not so offer that the facts did not exist.—Moore v. Harneck, 200 Mich. 642.

§ 390. Presumption as to assessment of damages.

¶ 1697. The assessment of damages on a penal bond under R. S. 1838, was considered as made by the court, and properly appears to have been so made in the judgment record, although the journal entry, from which such record was made up, showed that the damages were referred to and assessed by the clerk as might be done by order of court under the statute, if the damages were undisputed.—Prentiss v. Spalding, 2 D. 84.

¶ 1698. Where it was recited in the judgment entry under the statutes, in a case not proper for a reference to the clerk, that judgment was rendered upon the clerk's assessment of damages, but the prior order of reference to assess was to the court, as it should have been, it was held that the court could not make any presumption, against the recital in the judgment, based upon such prior order, that the court actually assessed the damages; but the judgment imports absolute verity.—O'Flynn v. Holmes, 8 Mich. 95.

§ 391. Presumption as to allowance of costs.

¶ 1700. Where it does not appear affirmatively from the record that the plaintiff's claim was established at more than $100 and was reduced by set-off, the judgment for costs for the defendant will not be reversed.—Bellows v. Crane Lumber Co., 126 Mich. 476.

§ 392. Presumptions as to vacation of judgment or decree.

¶ 1701. The court of appeal must accept the statement of the trial court as to its reasons for making an order vacating a decree pro confesso, even though such statement is denied by counsel, in the absence of an official record showing all that transpired upon the argument of the motion.—Hews v. Hews, 145 Mich. 247.

§ 393. Presumptions on penal and forfeiture judgments.

¶ 1702. A verdict and judgment enforcing a forfeiture cannot be supported by presuming anything that does not appear on the record.—Miller v. Havens, 51 Mich. 482.

D. RULINGS BELOW BASED ON DISCRETION.

§ 394. In general.

[Note. The propriety, occasion or ground for a given action, order or ruling by the trial court, when the matter rests in its discretion, is something pertaining to the specific subject rather than to appeal or error; and therefore the specific topics dealing with such action, order or ruling should be consulted. E. g., discretion to allow or deny continuance or new trial, see Continuance; New Trial. The matter collected here treats of the review of discretionary orders rather than of the propriety of making them.]

Discretion in respect to extension of time to settle bill or case, see ante § 97.

Right to have appeal or error from discretionary orders, see ante § 51.

Appealability of refusal to punish for contempt, see ante § 17, ¶ 73.

Review of particular discretionary orders, see post §§ 395-418.

Review of findings made on motions and offers, see post §§ 460, 461.

Trial de novo in appeals, see post XII, H.

Abuse of discretion, see post §§ 419, 420.

Appeal from probate decree, see Probate Courts, III.

¶ 1703. Error cannot be assigned upon a discretionary ruling or decision of the circuit court.—Dibble v. Rogers, 2 Mich. 404; Chaffee v. Soldan, 5 Mich. 242; Ripley v. Davis, 15 Mich. 75; Pearsons v. Eaton, 18 Mich. 79; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Anderson, 20 Mich. 244; Davis v. Bush, 28 Mich. 432.

¶ 1704. The Supreme Court will not review mere questions of practice below, especially if they do not plainly involve an abuse of discretion.—Mann v. Tyler, 56 Mich. 564.

§ 395. Change of venue or refusal of it.

¶ 1705. A motion to change venue is discretionary, and not subject to review on error.—Greeley v. Stilson, 27 Mich. 153.

¶ 1706. The allowance of a motion for a change of venue is a matter within the discretion of the trial court, and his action will not be disturbed unless a plain abuse of discretion is shown.—Silverstone v. London Assur. Corporation, 176 Mich. 525.

§ 396. Continuance or refusal of it.

¶ 1707. The discretion of the court below in granting or refusing continuances will not be reviewed unless a clear abuse thereof appears.—Bussey v. Bussey, 71 Mich. 504.

¶ 1708. The discretion of the circuit court in denying a postponement of trial is not reviewable unless abused.—Winklemeir v. Daiber, 92 Mich. 621.

§ 397. Leave to plead.

¶ 1709. An order allowing leave to plead over, when a demurrer is overruled, and the conditions on which such order is granted, are discretionary, and cannot be reviewed on error.—Tefft v. McNoah, 9 Mich. 201.

¶ 1710. Leave to file a bill of review being within the fair exercise of discretion a refusal will not be reviewed if fairly exercised.—Farmer's Bank v. Quick, 71 Mich. 534.

§ 398. ——Supplemental pleadings; pleas puis darrein.

Abuse of discretion, see post § 419, ¶ 1782.

¶ 1711. The discretion of a trial court in excluding a plea puis darrein will not be reviewed unless it has been abused; and where defendant, after learning the facts on which to base it, has delayed to file it for a long time, and until after the case has come to trial and been submitted by the plaintiff, it is not clear that the discretion has been abused.—Souvais v. Leavitt, 53 Mich. 577.

§ 399. ——Pleadings on appeal from justice.

¶ 1712. Refusal of leave to deny the execution of a note on affidavit after appeal from a justice is discretionary, and is not reviewable on error.—Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Edson, 41 Mich. 673.

§ 400. Ruling on motion to elect.

¶ 1713. The refusal to compel plaintiff to elect between the counts of the declaration is not reviewable where there is no misjoinder.—Cook v. Perry, 43 Mich. 623.

§ 401. Allowance or denial of amendment.

Abuse of discretion, see post § 419, ¶ 1781.

¶ 1714. The discretion of a trial judge in allowing or refusing to allow amendments to pleadings will not be reviewed if it is not abused.—Browne v. Moore, 32 Mich. 25.

People ex rel. King v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 41 Mich. 727; Pangborn v. Continental Ins. Co., 67 Mich. 683.

¶ 1715. Review may be had of a denial of leave to amend pleadings where such denial deprives a party of a meritorious defence to the whole action.—Pangborn v. Continental Ins. Co., 67 Mich. 683.

¶ 1716. The trial court exercises a discretion in denying a motion to amend a notice of special defence, and this will not be reviewed unless it has been abused.—Minnock v. Eureka Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 236.

¶ 1717. Error cannot be assigned for allowing an amendment as to the name of the plaintiff.—Final v. Backus, 18 Mich. 218.

¶ 1718. A fair exercise of judicial discretion in granting an amendment on the trial to cure a clerical error in the declaration is not reviewable on error.—Borden v. Clark, 26 Mich. 410.

¶ 1719. Where the application to amend was made at the earliest opportunity after a new trial had been ordered on reversal by the Supreme Court, and where the effect of the denial deprived the party of a meritorious defence to plaintiff's entire claim, denial was reviewable.—Pangborn v. Continental Ins. Co., 67 Mich. 683.

¶ 1720. Denial of an application for an amendment, to permit defendant to interpose the defence of the statute of limitations, is not reviewable on error.—Ripley v. Davis, 15 Mich. 75; Marx v. Hilsendegen, 46 Mich. 336.

¶ 1721. The exercise by a trial court of its discretion to permit an amendment clearly allowable under the statute will not be reviewed on error.—Beneway v. Thorp, 77 Mich. 181.

¶ 1722. A refusal to permit defendant to amend his notice of set-off during the trial of an action on a promissory note, so as to add a further claim, is not ground for reversal of the judgment, the matter being entirely within the discretion of the court.—Rawlings v. Fisher, 110 Mich. 19.

¶ 1723. An application for leave to amend a plea of the general issue by giving notice of the statute of limitations is addressed to the discretion of the court and its denial will not be reviewed on error.—Shank v. Woodworth, 111 Mich. 642.

¶ 1724. The discretion of a circuit court judge in allowing an amendment to a declaration will not be reviewed on appeal except in clear cases of arbitrary and unjust ruling.—Lord v. National Protective Society, 134 Mich. 357.

¶ 1725. Permitting an amendment to a declaration at the trial which makes more specific the averment of care on the part of the plaintiff in an action for personal injuries is a question resting in the sound discretion of the trial court, and will not be disturbed in the absence of an abuse thereof.—Wright v. Crane, 142 Mich. 508.

¶ 1726. Granting or refusing leave at the close of the evidence, to amend a bill against a city treasurer to set aside a tax sale by virtue of a paving assessment, by alleging illegal provisions in the contract for paving, was discretionary, and the denial of leave was not interfered with on appeal.—Walker v. City of Detroit, 136 Mich. 6.

¶ 1727. The discretion of the lower court in allowing a tax-contestant to file, after the day fixed for the hearing of the auditor-general's petition, a supplemental list of lands that simply states more in detail the objections already filed, will not be reviewed.—Auditor-General v. Chandler, 108 Mich. 569.

§ 402. On motion for further return from justice.

¶ 1728. The refusal of a trial court to order a further return to a writ of certiorari issued to a justice is not assignable as error.—Mann v. Tyler, 56 Mich. 564.

§ 403. Dismissal or discontinuance of cause or parties.

¶ 1729. Error lies to review on exceptions the allowance by the circuit court of a discontinuance as to one defendant, which upon no fair hypothesis or reasonable intendment can be reconciled with justice.—Yawkey v. Richardson, 9 Mich. 529.

¶ 1730. If the circuit court, on appeal from an order of the probate court refusing a will to probate, can allow part of the proponents to renounce and be discharged in order to become witnesses, the power to do so is discretionary, and a refusal cannot be reviewed on error.—Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

§ 404. ——Of appeal cause.

¶ 1731. An order dismissing an appeal case for want of payment of the entrance fee is not assignable as error.—Chaffee v. Soldan, 5 Mich. 242.

§ 405. Reception and order of proof.

¶ 1732. Rulings relating merely to the order of proof are not assignable for error, unless the discretion of the court has been plainly abused.—Dubois v. Campau, 24 Mich. 360; People v. Saunders, 25 Mich. 119; Morse

v. Hewett, 28 Mich. 481; Hutchins v. Kimmell, 31 Mich. 126; Hulbert v. Hammond, 41 Mich. 343; Hoffman v. Harrington, 44 Mich. 183; Chase v. Lee, 59 Mich. 237.

¶ 1733. Error cannot be assigned upon the admission or exclusion by the court of evidence in rebuttal which might have been introduced in chief.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99; Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 123; Danielson v. Dyckman, 26 Mich. 169; Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 576; Beebe v. Koshnic, 55 Mich. 604; Torrent v. Damm, 66 Mich. 105.

¶ 1734. Objections relating merely to the order of proof are not considered.—City of Muskegon v. S. K. Martin Lumber Co., 86 Mich. 625; Torrent v. Damm, 66 Mich. 105.

§ 406. Regulating examination of witnesses.

¶ 1735. Where it is necessary to allow considerable latitude in examining witnesses, and the discretion of the trial judge is fairly exercised, his rulings in the admission or rejection of evidence will not be reviewed if they are not to the evident prejudice of the parties.—Fick v. Runnels, 48 Mich. 302.

¶ 1736. The trial court has a large discretion in permitting cross-examination of a witness with which in the absence of an abuse thereof the Supreme Court will not interfere.—Herbeck v. Germain, 144 Mich. 157.

¶ 1737. An objection that a question is leading will not generally be noticed.—Lyon v. Chamberlain, 41 Mich. 119.

¶ 1738. The objection that questions are leading will not generally be noticed even if properly brought before the reviewing court. —Church v. John Davis & Co., 93 Mich. 477.

¶ 1739. The discretion of the trial court in permitting a leading question was not interfered with in the absence of an abuse of such discretion.—Bellows v. Crane Lumber Co., 119 Mich. 424.

¶ 1740. The discretion of the trial court in determining the limit of inquiry on cross-examination as to the witness' past life will not be reviewed on error unless clearly abused.—Helwig v. Lascowski, 82 Mich. 619.

¶ 1741. The Supreme Court will not reverse on account of improper cross-examination, where the trial court has not abused his discretion in permitting such cross-examination.—Pelton v. Mayhew, 166 Mich. 546.

§ 407. Striking or excluding evidence.

¶ 1742. Where hearsay evidence has been admitted without objection and cross-examination has brought out further details in determining a motion to strike out such evidence the trial court is invested with a wide discretion, and his decision will not be disturbed by an appellate court in the absence of an abuse of the discretion.—McWilliams v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 146 Mich. 216.

§ 408. Reopening case and recalling witnesses.

Abuse of discretion, see also post § 419, ¶ 1780.

¶ 1743. The Supreme Court will not review the discretion of the trial court in admitting competent evidence for the plaintiff after the defendant had rested, even though it is not rebutting.—Somerville v. Richards, 37 Mich. 299.

¶ 1744. Error cannot be assigned for refusing to permit a witness to be called after the evidence has been closed.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

¶ 1745. Allowing or refusing to allow a witness to be recalled for the purpose of correcting his testimony is not assignable for error.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Anderson, 20 Mich. 244.

¶ 1746. Refusing to open a submitted cause and to allow further proofs is not assignable as error.—Lee v. Hardgrave, 3 Mich. 77.

¶ 1747. The discretion of the circuit court to open a cause for further proofs at any time before decree will not be reviewed except in case of abuse; but it is an excess of power to open a case to let in proof of facts not set out in the pleadings, where the petition fails to point out what the testimony to be offered will show.—Wagar v. Bowley, 104 Mich. 38.

§ 409. Regulating argument and conduct of trial.

See also post ¶ 1784.

Presumption as to harm from allowing improper argument, see ante § 359.

¶ 1748. The judgment will not be reversed for an unfair opening statement except in a very plain case,—Porter v. Throop, 47 Mich. 313.

¶ 1749. The Supreme Court will not encroach, except in a very plain case, upon the province of the trial judge, whose duty it is to see that the fair limits of argument were not passed, and that a proper decorum is preserved by counsel.—Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 81 Mich. 423.

¶ 1750. The injury must be very apparent or the abuse very great before the Supreme Court will interfere with the exercise of the discretion of the trial judge in regard to the language of counsel.—Lathrop v. Sinclair, 110 Mich. 329.

§ 410. Settlement of findings.

¶ 1751. Error is not assignable upon the action of the court below in requesting the attorney for the prevailing party to prepare a draft of proposed findings of fact where the court has determined in his own mind how he will decide the case.—Bateman v. Blaisdell, 83 Mich. 357.

§ 411. Provisional and interlocutory relief in equity.

¶ 1752. Courts hesitate to review the action of a trial court involving matters of discretion as in the granting or refusing of a writ of injunction, and will not do so unless it is necessary that justice be done.—Dodge v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 118 Mich. 189.

¶ 1753. The removal of a receiver by a circuit judge, being within his discretion, will not be reversed on appeal where it is clear from the record that the receiver did not accomplish what he ought to and would have accomplished had he exercised the diligence of a prudent man in winding up a business of his own.—In re Angell, 131 Mich. 345.

§ 412. Divorce and alimony orders and decrees.

Discretion as to amount of alimony, see Divorce. X, D.

Discretion to reopen divorce decree and admit further proofs, see also Divorce, VII.

¶ 1754. There is no rule of court limiting or defining the circumstances under which the judge shall exercise his discretion for or against the application for alimony or expenses in a divorce suit pending; and there can be no review of his action in the premises unless there has been a gross abuse of that discretion (How. St., § 6235).—Ross v. Griffin, 53 Mich. 5.

§ 413. Grant or refusal of new trial.

Presumption on error as to propriety of new trial, see ante § 389.

Necessity of including in bill or case reasons given on new trial ruling, see ante § 191.

Abuse of discretion, see post § 420, and see generally New Trial.

As to rehearing in equity, see post § 414.

¶ 1755. Before Laws of 1893, Act No. 134, went into effect the Supreme Court could not interfere with the discretion of the circuit court in refusing a new trial in a civil case.—Brassel v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co., 101 Mich. 5.

¶ 1756. Laws 1893, Act No. 134, providing in all cases thereafter taken to the Supreme Court for the review of the refusal by the trial judge to grant a motion for a new trial, does not apply when the motion was decided and the writ of error issued before the act took effect.—Gemberling v. Lazarus, 100 Mich. 324.

¶ 1757. The discretion of the circuit court in granting or refusing a new trial is not assignable error.—Dibble v. Rogers, 2 Mich. 404; Bourke v. James, 4 Mich. 336; Cuddy v. Major, 12 Mich. 368; Sleight v. Henning, 12 Mich. 371; Pennsylvania Min. Co. v. Brady, 14 Mich. 260; People ex rel. Aetna Live Stock Fire & Tornado Ins. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 20 Mich. 220; Johr v. People, 26 Mich. 427; Jones v. Hobson, 37 Mich. 36; People ex rel. Stork v. Detroit Superior Court Judge, 41 Mich. 5; Mahoney v. People, 43 Mich. 39; Toulman v. Swain, 47 Mich. 82; Hake v. Fuell, 50 Mich. 89; People v. Francis, 52 Mich. 575; Nelson v. Lumberman's Min. Co., 65 Mich. 288; Graham v. Myers, 67 Mich. 277; Wiest v. Luyendyk, 73 Mich. 661.

¶ 1758. An order granting a new trial is not subject to review, inasmuch as it cannot finally dispose of any rights, besides being usually discretionary.—People ex rel. Stork v. Detroit Superior Court Judge, 41 Mich. 5.

¶ 1759. The denial of a motion for new trial on the ground that one of the jurors had served upon a former trial of the same cause, being a question addressed to the discretion of the trial court, is not assignable for error.—Bourke v. James, 4 Mich. 336.

¶ 1760. A motion for a new trial based upon the disclosure of a sealed verdict by the jury before its return to the court is addressed to the judicial discretion of the trial court, whose ruling will not be disturbed on error.—Wiest v. Luyendyk, 73 Mich. 661.

¶ 1761. A new trial will not be granted where it does not appear that the trial court has abused its discretion in refusing to grant a new trial.—Minds v. Keyes, 189 Mich. 629.

¶ 1862. On a suit by a patron against an owner of a moving picture theater, the existence of handrails and of lights at the exit steps were material issues and witnesses on both sides testified as to their existence. The jury gave a verdict for the defendant and on a motion for a new trial depositions were presented tending to show that witnesses for the defense had testified falsely as to the existence of the handrails. Held, the discretion of the court in refusing the motion would not be disturbed since the jury could have believed defendant's testimony as to the lights and disregarded that as to the handrails.—Branch v. Klatt, 173 Mich. 31.

¶ 1763. The action of the circuit judge in denying a motion for a new trial, based upon the alleged excessive character of the verdict, will not be disturbed on error, where some of the evidence, which is very conflicting on the question of damages, fairly tends to support the verdict.—Meloche v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 116 Mich. 69.

¶ 1764. A judgment will not be reversed for the failure of the court below to enforce the condition upon which it has denied a motion for a new trial. The denial was a matter of discretion.—Jones v. Hobson, 37 Mich. 36.

§ 414. Grant or refusal of rehearing.

¶ 1765. The discretionary power of the circuit court to grant a rehearing will not be interfered with on appeal unless it has been abused.—Barnes v. Kent Circuit Judge, 97 Mich. 212.

¶ 1766. The Supreme Court will not review the action of a trial court on a motion for a rehearing on the ground that the defendant was taken by surprise by the production of certain evidence and also on the ground of newly discovered evidence except when it appears clearly that there has been an abuse of discretion.—Saginaw Suburban R. Co. v. Connelly, 146 Mich. 395.

§ 415. Vacation of judgment or order.

¶ 1767. Error cannot be assigned on the decision of the court below of a motion, founded upon affidavits, to vacate a judgment; such motion being addressed merely to the sound discretion of the court.—Mayor, etc., of City of Detroit v. Jackson, 1 D. 106; Van Renselaer v. Whiting, 12 Mich. 449.

¶ 1768. Vacating a judgment of nonsuit or setting aside a default is not assignable as error.—Pearsons v. Eaton, 18 Mich. 79; Final v. Backus, 18 Mich. 218.

¶ 1769. Refusal to open a default is not reviewable, being a matter of discretion. —Voorhies v. Frisbie, 25 Mich. 476.

¶ 1770. The matter of setting aside a nonsuit is within the discretion of the trial court and an order setting aside a nonsuit on terms will be affirmed where it appears that the nonsuit was voluntarily submitted to because plaintiff had removed from the state without the knowledge of her counsel who supposed that he could find her at her usual place of abode and only learned differently after the jury was impaneled, the motion to set it aside having been made as soon as counsel learned of plaintiff's whereabouts. —Reaumè v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 130 Mich. 245.

¶ 1771. Except where there has been a clear abuse of discretion, the action of the circuit court in refusing to set aside an order pro confesso is not reviewable on appeal.—Mills v. McLeod, 94 Mich. 627.

§ 416. Requiring or denying security for costs.

¶ 1772. The Supreme Court will not review the discretion of the circuit court in making or denying an order for security for costs.—Goodenough v. Burton, 146 Mich. 50.

§ 417. Allowance of costs and expenses.

¶ 1773. Where the court below allowed upon proper petition, fees to one to whom an account was referred by order of court in another cause, nothing but an abuse of discretion will justify this court in interfering with such allowance.—Scott v. Bay City, 150 Mich. 694, ¶ 1774. Where the circuit judge fixes the costs in an appeal from a justice, the Supreme Court will not interfere.—Rock Island Plow Co. v. Smith, 162 Mich. 180.

§ 418. Allowances to personal representatives, trustees, etc.

¶ 1775. Where there are circumstances disclosed which call for the exercise, first by the probate court, and upon appeal by the circuit court, of the discretion which, with respect to the allowance of fees to administrators and others, is reposed in those courts, nothing but a manifest abuse of such discretion will be reviewed by the Supreme Court. —In re McNamara's Estate, 166 Mich. 451; McNamara v. Michigan Trust Co., Id.

¶ 1776. A finding by the circuit judge that an executor is not entitled to extra compensation under Comp. L. 1897, § 9438, providing for extra compensation where the settlement of an estate is unusually difficult, is within the discretion of the court and will not usually be disturbed.—In re Gallagher's Estate, 120 Mich. 365.

¶ 1777. A determination of the circuit court as to the compensation of a trustee, on a bill to foreclose a trust mortgage, will not be disturbed on appeal.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Lansing Lumber Co., 121 Mich. 438.

¶ 1778. The allowance or disallowance of compensation for a guardian is in the discretion of the trial court, and in the absence of evidence of a clear abuse it will not be disturbed.—In re Hoga's Estate, 134 Mich. 361.

§ 419. Abuse of discretion in general.

Abuse of discretion in granting or denying extension of time to appeal, see ante § 75.

In extending time for making and settlement of bill, see ante § 97.

Discretion to open divorce decrees, see also Divorce, VII.

¶ 1779. Where the disposition of a motion is within the discretion of the court, its ruling is not open to review on error, even when based upon an incorrect reason.—Polhemus v. Ann Arbor Savings Bank, 27 Mich. 44.

¶ 1780. Where the exercise of a court's discretion amounts to an abuse of it that is liable to affect the legal rights of a party, this court will review it, although the abuse resulted from accident, inadvertence or misconception. So held where counsel were allowed to open a case improperly.—Scripps v. Reilly, 35 Mich. 371.

¶ 1781. The refusal of the trial court to strike out the name of the receiver of a railroad and to substitute the name of the company as defendant where a cause of action arising previous to the appointment of the receiver is alleged, and process was served on an agent of the company, will be reviewed on writ of error, although a matter resting in the discretion of the trial court.—Daly v. Blair, 183 Mich. 351 (Ostrander, J., dissenting).

¶ 1782. The discretion of the trial court in excluding a plea puis darrein will not be reviewed unless it has been abused; and such abuse does not appear where there was a long delay in filing the plea and until a trial and submission thereon of plaintiff's case.—Souvais v. Leavitt, 53 Mich. 577.

¶ 1782a. An abuse of legal discretion—as in denying leave to file an affidavit of publication in attachment nunc pro tunc—does not consist in a failure to exercise discretionary power precisely as the Supreme Court might have done under like circumstances.—Savidge v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 257.

§ 420. ——In new trial rulings.

See also post § 448.

Presumption as to propriety, see ante § 389.

¶ 1783. Where a trial judge has denied a motion for a new trial, the upper court should not overturn his ruling except where, upon consideration of the facts upon which the trial judge acted, an unprejudiced person can say that there was no justification or excuse for the ruling made.—Cooper v. Carr, 161 Mich. 405.

¶ 1784. This court will not reverse a ruling of the court below refusing to grant a new trial sought on the ground that counsel for plaintiff made prejudicial and unwarranted statements unless it appears from the record that the court below, in denying a new trial, abused his discretion.—Jordan v. Le Messurier, 155 Mich. 188.

¶ 1785. When it is apparent from the record, notwithstanding all reasonable presumptions which arise from the superior opportunity of the trial judge to determine the credibility of witnesses, and notwithstanding the principles which have always governed trial courts in determining whether verdicts should be set aside or not, that yet the trial judge erred in refusing to set aside the verdict on the ground that it is against the weight of the testimony, the duty of this court to overrule that decision is manifest.—Bosek v. Detroit United Railway, 175 Mich. 8.

¶ 1786. Denial of a new trial asked for on the ground of newly discovered evidence that appears to have been mostly cumulative and not newly discovered will be sustained.—Cummins v. Baker, 141 Mich. 536.

¶ 1787. The refusal of the trial court to grant a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence does not amount to abuse of discretion where he states that the evidence was cumulative and would not in his opinion change the result of the trial, and that the ends of justice did not require setting aside the judgment.—Holser v. Skae, 169 Mich. 484.

¶ 1788. On the authority of Hintz v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 132 Mich. 305, the refusal of a new trial asked on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence and excessive will be sustained, though the case is open to debate on both grounds.—Nestle v. City of Flint, 141 Mich. 153.

¶ 1789. The discretion of the court in refusing a new trial will not be interfered with where the motion was based on affidavits tending to show lack of time for defendant after notice from his attorneys to look up his witnesses and secure their attendance, there being also counter affidavits tending to show that the witnesses in question could have been obtained by due diligence.—Johnson v. Doon, 131 Mich. 452.

¶ 1790. A motion for a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence showed that plaintiff made unsuccessful inquiries to discover the desired evidence and that he was misled concerning the testimony which one witness would give, in that upon close inquiry it was found he knew the facts only from hearsay. The witness was not sworn. the inference being that his want of knowledge was discovered before or during the trial. Held, that though the showing of diligence might have influenced the court to grant a continuance, and the showing of surprise might have secured an order permitting a voluntary non-suit with leave to set the same aside, neither showing appeals to a court of review on an application to reverse an order denying a new trial.—Roberts v. First Nat. Bank of Yale, 149 Mich. 507.

¶ 1791. Where there is a clear question of fact for the jury, the upper court will not reverse the ruling of the lower court denying a motion for a new trial made on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence.—Jackson v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 161 Mich. 163.

¶ 1792. A decision of the trial court refusing to grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the great weight of the evidence, will not be overturned on appeal unless the case is a very clear one affording very strong evidence that the verdict is the result of bias or prejudice, since the trial judge has the advantage of having seen the witnesses, and noted their appearance on the stand.—Lovely v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 187 Mich. 653.

¶ 1793. The refusal of a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the great weight of evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal, although the plaintiff was contradicted in many essential particulars, where the circuit judge saw the witnesses, heard their testimony, and after a careful consideration of the case, refused the motion. Pub. Acts 1893, No. 134, providing for "incorporating the record of proceedings had on motions for new trial in bills of exceptions," is undoubtedly broad enough to warrant interference by the court on appeal, but the deliberate conclusion of the trial judge will not be overturned on a showing such as that first mentioned.—Brennan v. O'Brien, 121 Mich. 491.

¶ 1793a. Where in an action to recover money repaid in the mistaken belief that plaintiff had been overpaid by the defendant, the evidence is convincing that the defendant knew what interest he was buying, and that the plaintiff in returning the money was not mistaken about the price per acre or the interest sold, but about the proper mathematical calculation as to the amount, the evidence of anything in the nature of a compromise of differences being so meager, and that of miscarriage of justice so strong, the Supreme Court will overrule the decision of the trial court in denying a motion for a new trial and order such new trial.—Stowell v. Ames, 148 Mich. 439.

¶ 1794. Held, that an order of the trial court requiring the plaintiff to remit a portion of his judgment or submit to a new trial, would not be disturbed by the Supreme Court.—Snook v. Mt. Clemens Sugar Co., 186 Mich. 593.

E. VERDICTS AND FINDINGS ON THE EVIDENCE.

1. In Appeals.

Duty to try cause de novo, see post XII, H.
Scope of review where no case is settled, see ante § 326.
Mode of preserving evidence for review, see ante VI, D.
Rules for review applicable on error, see post XII, E, 2.

¶ 1795. Unlike an appeal at law, an appeal in chancery subjects all questions of fact as well as law to review by the upper court.—State v. Venice of America Land Co., 160 Mich. 680.

§ 422. Force and effect of findings below.

Presumption as to correctness of conclusions of fact, see ante § 382.
Computation on which judgment is based, see also ante § 338, ¶ 1426.

¶ 1796. The decision of the circuit judge on the facts is entitled to great weight with the appellate court, he being supposed to have some better personal knowledge of the witnesses than is to be presumed in the appellate court; but the latter court has no right, if plainly convinced, to abdicate its own duty of determining every case upon its own view of the facts.—In re Wool, 36 Mich. 299.

¶ 1797. Before a reviewing court reverses a judgment on the facts alone, it ought to be fully persuaded that it must have reached a different conclusion, had it occupied the position of the court appealed from and been favored with all the advantages of that court for judging rightly.—Nicholas v. Nicholas, 50 Mich. 162.

¶ 1798. Where, in a foreclosure case, the equities between the parties rest entirely upon the decision of questions of fact which the circuit judge possessed superior advantages for determining, the decree will be affirmed.—Long v. Rogers, 59 Mich. 270.

¶ 1799. On an appeal from a decree compelling defendant to remove a dam built upon his land that deflected the natural course of surface water, weight will be given to the fact that on the law side two juries have found the dam to be an unlawful structure and to the conclusion of the circuit judge who has three times gone over the question.—Feldkamp v. Ernst, 177 Mich. 550.

¶ 1800. An appellate court will give great weight to the findings of the lower court inasmuch as it had better opportunities to determine the credibility of witnesses.—Leach v. Grube, 147 Mich. 348.

¶ 1801. On a bill filed against a debtor and his wife to subject to an assignment by him for the benefit of creditors, assets, as averred, for which the wife is a cover, the decree of the trial court should, on appeal, be affirmed, except as to items obviously erroneous.—Joslin v. Goebel, 90 Mich. 71.

§ 423. ——Where witnesses testified in open court.

Consideration on trial de novo, see post § 475.

¶ 1802. There can be no technical rules for determining the credit to be given to conflicting testimony. Every court must determine this according to its own impressions. And where the court below has seen or known the witnesses, that fact will weigh with the appellate court in solving doubts.—Wakeman v. Akey, 29 Mich. 308; Fender v. Powers, 67 Mich. 433; Dayton v. Dayton, 68 Mich. 437; McGonegal v. McGonegal, 46 Mich. 66; Ushaw v. Mallett, 64 Mich. 45.

¶ 1803. Where the testimony below was heard in open court so that the circuit judge could see the witnesses and test their veracity, great consideration will be given to his conclusion upon disputed facts, and such conclusion will, as a rule, be followed where the testimony is evenly balanced.—Earll v. Earll, 60 Mich. 30; Sweetzer v. Higby, 63 Mich. 13; Fender v. Powers, 67 Mich. 433; Dull v. Merrill, 69 Mich. 49; Croly v. Pollard, 71 Mich. 612; Harris v. Creveling, 80 Mich. 249; Phillips v. Phillips, 83 Mich. 259; Gilchrist v. Kelley, 85 Mich. 413; Essexville v. Emery, 90 Mich. 183; Strauss v. Parshall, 91 Mich. 475; Potter v. Woodruff, 92 Mich. 8; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 92 Mich. 104; Lilley v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 153; Lewis v. Noble, 93 Mich. 345; Ball v. Phenicie, 94 Mich. 355; Nichols v. Nichols, 94 Mich. 569; McGill v. Hawks, 95 Mich. 153; Warren v. Holbrook, 95 Mich. 185; Chick v. Sisson, 95 Mich. 412; Brennan v. Zehner, 57 Mich. 98; Kaeding v. Joachimsthal, 98 Mich. 78; Anderson v. Northern Nat. Bank, 98 Mich. 543; Child v. Emerson, 99 Mich. 38; Miller v. Miller, 100 Mich. 563; Benedict v. Roome, 106 Mich. 378; Richardson v. Medbury, 107 Mich. 176; Edwards v. Waghorn, 107 Mich. 679; Hughes v. Jones, 108 Mich. 378; Groesbeck v. Benedict, 109 Mich. 65; Michigan Land & Iron Co. v. Cleveland Sawmill & Lumber Co., 109 Mich. 164; Sowles v. Raymer, 110 Mich. 189; Pringle v. Wagnoer, 110 Mich. 612; Kirkland v. Kirkland, 111 Mich. 166; Loveridge v. Shurtz, 111 Mich. 618; Hammond v. Rathbone, 113 Mich. 499; Markillie v. Markillie, 115 Mich. 658; Union Nat. Bank v. Rich, 116 Mich. 414; Pioneer Iron Co. v. Negaunee, 116 Mich. 430; Heath v. Heath, 120 Mich. 310; Frisbee v. Stewart, 122 Mich. 538; Latham v. Savage, 166 Mich. 300; Morton v. DeYoung, 185 Mich. 94.

¶ 1804. Where the evidence—most of which was given by the parties and by defendant's attorney—was conflicting and was carefully examined by the circuit judge, who, from his acquaintance with the witnesses, had superior advantages for judging of their credibility, the Supreme Court did not disturb the decree.—Ushaw v. Mallett, 64 Mich. 45.

¶ 1805. In determining the sufficiency of evidence to support a finding of the trial court on conflicting evidence upon appeal much weight must be given to the fact that the trial judge had the advantage of seeing the witnesses upon the stand and hearing their testimony.—Grace Harbor Lumber Co. v. Ortman, 190 Mich. 429.

¶ 1806. In a doubtful case, the determination of the trial judge, who has the opportunity of seeing the witnesses, is entitled to some weight, particularly in a case where there is a direct issue of veracity, and where the appearance of the witnesses upon the stand furnishes such direct aid in determining the fact.—Ann Arbor Sav. Bank v. Ellison, 113 Mich. 557.

¶ 1807. Where questions of fact have been carefully considered by the circuit judge, who saw the witnesses and inspected the premises involved in the suit, his conclusion thereon will not be disturbed.—Brown v. Winslow, 95 Mich. 441.

¶ 1808. Great weight should be given to the findings of facts by the court below where he not only saw the witnesses and heard their testimony, but himself visited the premises in regard to extending a drain through which the suit arose.—Gillison v. Cressman, 100 Mich. 591.

¶ 1809. Where the Supreme Court can arrive at no decided conviction from the testimony which leads to a different conclusion from that reached by the court below, it is not inclined to disturb the decree, especially where the testimony was taken in open court.—Dayton v. Dayton, 68 Mich. 437.

¶ 1810. The judgment of the circuit judge discrediting the uncorroborated testimony—given in open court—of a witness who was the party in interest, and whose statements were inconsistent, was not disturbed on appeal.—Peck v. Cook, 95 Mich. 31.

¶ 1811. A finding by the circuit judge on testimony taken in open court that certain words omitted from one of the duplicates of a contract were omitted clerically by error will be given great weight on appeal.—Besser v. Wright, 125 Mich. 123.

¶ 1812. Where the trial judge who sees and hears the witnesses is convinced by their manner and deportment that the witnesses for the defendant are telling the truth, much weight should be given to the conclusion reached by him on appeal in determining whether plaintiff's claim has been established by a preponderance of evidence.—Barras v. Barras, 191 Mich. 473.

¶ 1813. Where the testimony in a chancery suit that involves only questions of fact is doubtful, conflicting and nearly evenly balanced, and has been taken in open court so that there was an opportunity to weigh it in the light of the appearance, manner and deportment of the witnesses in giving it, the decree granted will not be reversed on appeal. —Green v. Langdon, 28 Mich. 221.

¶ 1814. The disposition of this court to be governed by the conclusions of a judge who has heard the witnesses examined in open court is fortified where the record tends to show that the demeanor of the witnesses was of some importance in determining what reliance should be placed upon their statements.—Bigbee v. Bigbee, 50 Mich. 467.

¶ 1815. The rule that a decree will not be reversed for mere preponderance of testimony where it was granted on proofs taken in open court so that the judge could observe the demeanor of witnesses does not apply where the proofs of the prevailing party alone show that it should not have been made. —Wooley v. Drew, 49 Mich. 290.

¶ 1816. The consideration to be given to the fact that the court below saw and heard the witnesses is eliminated where the conclusion was presumably reached upon all the testimony, including that of a witness whose testimony was clearly incompetent.—Sheldon v. Carr, 139 Mich. 654.

¶ 1817. In reviewing statutory proceedings in chancery to enforce a mechanic's lien in which the complainant obtained a verdict. the Supreme Court will not be disposed to disturb the result where the case depends mainly on the weight of oral testimony, and the testimony is irreconcilably opposed, and the trial court saw the witnesses examined. —Begin v. Henderson, 50 Mich. 468.

¶ 1818. A decree dismissing a bill filed to have a lease set aside and to restore a contract of sale that was destroyed at the time the lease was executed, affirmed on the proofs taken in open court.—Phillips v. Linn, 117 Mich. 426.

¶ 1819. Where a bill to set aside a deed is dismissed upon the pleadings and proof. the evidence is conflicting, the result depends upon the character of the witnesses as judged from their appearance. and the Supreme Court cannot say that there is a preponderance of evidence in favor of the complainant. the decree will be affirmed.—Peets v. Peets, 156 Mich. 87.

¶ 1820. In a bill by the administrator and his children. to set aside a conveyance of real estate by the deceased, on the ground of mental incompetency, the finding of fact of the trial court as to mental condition is not conclusive upon appeal, but is entitled to great weight, on account of the trial court's opportunity to see and hear the witnesses. —Troub v. Thorp, 152 Mich. 363.

¶ 1821. On the question of mental competency, where there is evidence pro and con, much weight should ordinarily be given to the conclusion reached by the trial judge, who has had the opportunity of seeing and hearing the witnesses.—Grand Lodge Ancient Order of United Workmen v. Brown, 160 Mich. 437.

¶ 1822. The Supreme Court will not overturn a chancery decree of the trial court setting aside conveyances on the ground of fraud where the question involved is one of fact and the trial court is greatly aided by seeing and hearing the witnesses, and where the trial court's view of the evidence is apparently correct.—Roewer v. Roewer. 165 Mich. 622.

§ 424. Evidence objected to below.

Depositions objected to below, see post § 425.
Presumption that improperly admitted evidence was ignored, see ante § 355.

¶ 1823. On appeal in chancery the Supreme Court will exclude from consideration all evidence that was validly objected to below as being equally known to a deceased opponent. (How. St., § 7545.)—Foster v. Hill, 55 Mich. 540.

§ 425. Written evidence; depositions.

Sufficiency of record showing as to evidence or documents, see ante § 187.

¶ 1824. Depositions to which valid objection has been made in a chancery suit will not be considered on appeal, even though a motion to suppress them was not acted on. —Edson v. Cumings, 52 Mich. 52.

¶ 1825. Where testimony has been taken, not in open court but before a commissioner, the court below cannot be regarded as having had any special advantage in determining the rights of the parties from the record.—Hodges v. Cook, 93 Mich. 577.

§ 426. Sufficiency of evidence in general.

[Note. Since the trial is de novo the sufficiency of the evidence in a general sense is the same as on the trial of the issues, and therefore the precedents are to be found in the specific topics treating of the equitable rights and remedies, e. g., Accounting Suits; Creditors' Suits; Foreclosure; Injunctions; Reformation; Rescission and Cancellation; Specific Performance; Mechanics' Liens; and the like.]

Illustrative cases in particular suits and on particular issues. see post §§ 429-435.

Conclusiveness of law of the case on retrial on same facts, see post § 555.

¶ 1826. A decree should not be reversed upon the mere tendency of evidence, without regard to its weight or nature.—Ruppe v. Steinbach, 48 Mich. 465.

¶ 1827. A decree is affirmed where no sufficient reason is seen to disturb the conclusion of the court below upon the preponderance of testimony.—Killam v. Axford, 39 Mich. 210.

¶ 1828. A decree may be affirmed where the appellate court is not satisfied that the trial judge was in error in his findings as to the preponderance of testimony.—Matteson v. Blackmer, 46 Mich. 398; Corrie v. Corrie, 46 Mich. 235.

¶ 1829. A decree will not be reversed on facts unless this court is convinced if it had been in place of lower court it must have decided differently.—Nicholas v. Nicholas, 50 Mich. 162; Warner v. Warner, 54 Mich. 492.

¶ 1830. Upon an appeal in a chancery case in which questions of fact were alone involved, it appearing that complainant had failed to establish some of the facts alleged in her bill, and that her conduct since the controversy arose had been wholly inconsistent with the claims made therein, a decree dismissing the bill was affirmed.—Stone v. Campbell, 110 Mich. 36.

¶ 1831. The Supreme Court on appeal will refuse to disturb a decree of the lower court dismissing a bill where there was evidence which if believed was sufficient to justify the decree.—Kimball v. Green, 148 Mich. 298.

¶ 1832. A chancellor's decree on testimony taken in open court, which was sufficient to sustain it, will be affirmed where the only question is one of fact.—Shaw v. Shaw, 124 Mich. 476.

¶ 1833. The question being one of fact only, the decree should be affirmed.—Nolan v. Nolan, 124 Mich. 581.

¶ 1834. Construction of reservation in deed to read crops "sown" in the fall of 1896 rather than "I own" at that time, affirmed. —Dean v. Andrews, 120 Mich. 492.

§ 427. ——Close or balanced cases.

¶ 1835. In cases where the question is close as to where the preponderance of evidence lies the Supreme Court will attach importance to the finding of the circuit judge. —Boam v. Greenman, 147 Mich. 106.

¶ 1836. Where the evidence is evenly balanced the finding of the circuit court will not be questioned.—Mason v. Kellogg, 38 Mich. 132.

¶ 1837. The conclusions of the trial judge as to the preponderance of evidence are entitled to respect where the testimony was taken out of court and is evenly balanced. —Sager v. Tupper, 42 Mich. 605.

¶ 1838. The opinion of the circuit court upon questions of fact ought not to be hastily rejected on review, if the showing itself rested upon the testimony of only one party and was not very decisive.—Griffin v. Nichols, 51 Mich. 575.

§ 428. ——Conflicting evidence.

¶ 1839. Where there is direct conflict in the testimony, the Supreme Court, being unacquainted with the witnesses, must consider corroborating circumstances, if any there be, in order to ascertain where the preponderance of evidence lies.—Donaldson v. Wilson, 79 Mich. 181.

¶ 1840. A finding by the circuit court on conflicting testimony taken in open court will not be reviewed.—Child v. Emerson, 99 Mich. 38.

¶ 1841. Where the testimony as to whether one member of a firm which assigned its claim to appellants had an interest in the fund whereof distribution was sought was conflicting, the finding of the circuit court upon testimony taken in open court, where there was a better opportunity to determine what weight should be given a witness, was sustained.—Bank of Montreal v. Potts Salt, etc., Co., 101 Mich. 546.

¶ 1842. The decree of the circuit judge, based upon the testimony of a few witnesses, who disagreed as to the facts, was not disturbed.—Kieldsen v. Blodgett, 113 Mich. 655.

¶ 1843. A finding of a circuit judge depending upon the credibility to be given to witnesses, the proofs of the parties being in direct conflict, will not be disturbed on appeal, the evidence being sufficient to sustain the finding.—Birdsall v. Birdsall, 118 Mich. 658.

¶ 1844. The finding of an irregularity in a decree by the tribunal which made the decree should not be reversed upon a question of fact where the testimony is conflicting.— Tromble v. Hoffman, 130 Mich. 676.

¶ 1845. Findings of fact by the circuit judge in a chancery case will not be reversed on appeal where based on the testimony of conplainant and of defendant which was in direct conflict.—Wolff v. Alpena Nat. Bank, 131 Mich. 634.

¶ 1846. Conflicting evidence reviewed and the complainant who took a deed in his own name is held to have purchased for himself and not as agent for the defendant.—Widner v. Christian, 128 Mich. 587.

¶ 1847. On conflicting evidence as to whether the mortgage in suit was given to secure a specific debt of a third person or was for general security of his debts, the question will be reviewed as one of fact.—Bullis v. State Bank of Deckerville, 148 Mich. 632.

§ 429. ——Accounting suits.

See generally Accounting Suits, §§ 9, 13; and cross-references there found.

¶ 1848. Complainant corporation, a creditor of defendant cycle company, obtained from it a transfer of certain contracts as security for its claim, and left them for collection in the hands of defendant's secretary. The cycle company thereafter gave a chattel mortgage to the codefendant manufacturing company, and assigned as further security several of the contracts in question. Complainant filed a bill for an accounting, alleging that such secretary, as its agent, and the defendant manufacturing company, had made collections upon its contracts, and a decree was rendered declaring complainant to have a first lien upon all the contracts originally transferred to it, and directing that defendants account to it for all moneys received by them upon such contracts. Held, that the decree was fully sustained by the evidence.—Peerless Mfg. Co. v. Detroit Cycle Co, 111 Mich. 135.

¶ 1849. Decree that the defendant in a bill for an accounting had turned over to complainant all the securities and moneys belonging to him, and dismissing the bill, will not be disturbed on a pure question of fact whether that had been done.—Voss v. Lippert, 124 Mich. 31.

¶ 1850. On appeal from a decree in accounting where the evidence in regard to an item is conflicting, the decision of the circuit court is sustained.—Gruett v. Dibble, 126 Mich. 623.

¶ 1851. A decree in a bill for an accounting between partners awarding the complainant the amount of his investment and interest less the money drawn out was sustained on conflicting evidence as peculiarly within the knowledge of the circuit judge and doing substantial justice, although complainant's rights seem doubtful.—Wolff v. Taylor, 127 Mich. 143.

¶ 1852. The trial court's finding, that there was a consummated partnership and not merely an executory agreement for a future partnership, will not be disturbed where after numerous conferences and correspondence looking to it there were acts done by complainant pursuant to the proposal to form the partnership, and he moved upon the land which was to be the subject of it, and thereon did various acts in promotion of the partnership enterprise of subdividing the land and selling it in lots, and did such acts in the firm name.—Chase v. Angell, 148 Mich. 1.

See generally Divorce, V.

¶ 1853. The advantage possessed by a trial court over the appellate court in judging of the credibility of witnesses from their appearance on the stand is especially strong in a divorce suit in which both of the parties were examined in open court.—Cummings v. Cummings, 50 Mich. 305.

¶ 1853a. Where the circuit judge who entered the decree relative to the custody of the child of divorced parents was thoroughly familiar with the issues in litigation between the parents from time to time, and the testimony seems to warrant his finding, there is no disposition to disturb the decree on appeal.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 171 Mich. 572.

¶ 1854. On appeal from a decree dismissing a bill for divorce the Supreme Court is not concluded by the opinion of disbelief, and the presumption in favor of the chancellor's decree from reviewing a case on its merits and reversing the decree and granting the divorce.—Rosecrance v. Rosecrance, 127 Mich. 322.

¶ 1855. A decree dismissing a bill for divorce on the ground of cruelty was reversed, where the court, although mindful that where the trial judge has seen and heard the witnesses, it gives him an advantage in determining their credibility and that the reviewing court ought not to lightly reverse a decree made under such conditions, was satisfied that the trial court reached a wrong conclusion.—White v. White, 135 Mich. 271.

¶ 1856. A decree dismissing a bill for divorce will not be disturbed where it was justified by the testimony.—Mead v. Mead, 131 Mich. 309.

¶ 1857. Conflicting and irreconcilable evidence of cruelty of both parties of a divorce suit, reviewed and held not to warrant interference with the decree of the circuit judge who heard all of the witnesses.—Donaldson v. Donaldson, 134 Mich. 289.

¶ 1858. A decree for complainant under a bill charging extreme cruelty was not disturbed, where the testimony was taken in open court, and the decree was justified by the evidence under the rulings of the court in given cases.—Karreman v. Karreman, 122 Mich. 654.

¶ 1859. Testimony by the husband of the income from his business and the value of the business and of his residence, without bringing out the value of other property which it may be inferred he owns, is not sufficient to sustain the correctness of a decree for alimony on defendant's wife's appeal from denial of a rehearing, she having been represented by a neglectful guardian ad litem. —Frieseke v. Frieseke, 138 Mich. 458.

§431. ——Foreclosure and redemption suits.

On bill to reform or to decree deed a mortgage, see post § 434.

See generally Foreclosure, II, C, V; Mortgages, IX.

¶ 1860. A decree for complainant in a bill to foreclose a mortgage will not be disturbed where the sole defense was forgery and the testimony was conflicting.—Jahn v. Fahey, 123 Mich. 695.

¶ 1861. In a suit to set aside a discharge of a mortgage and for foreclosure, a decree for defendant will be affirmed, there being conflicting evidence tending to support a decree denying the relief sought and the circuit judge having found that there was no fraud in obtaining the release.—Fix v. Soleau, 127 Mich. 72.

¶ 1862. Where the testimony as to whether some of the interest in a foreclosure decree was included in a mortgage to complainant by petitioner's wife, was, upon a petition to set aside sale, conflicting, the Supreme Court concluded that the circuit court must have been convinced that the claim was sufficiently well supported to call for a hearing of the question, and that a delay by petitioner in moving in the matter was excused.—Montague v. Haviland, 101 Mich. 80.

See generally Injunctions, III.

¶ 1863. A decree refusing an injunction on conflicting evidence as to whether water was cast on complainant's land, was sustained.—Perry v. Reed, 147 Mich. 146.

§ 433. ——Mechanics' lien cases.

Effect of jury finding in mechanics' lien proceedings under statutory appeal, see ante ¶ 20.

See generally Mechanics' Liens, VIII, C.

¶ 1864. In a case on a bill to enforce a mechanic's lien where the questions raised were questions of fact, the conclusions of the trial judge were left undisturbed.—De-Graaf, Vrieling & Co. v. Mulick, 86 Mich. 234.

§ 434. ——Reformation and cancellation suits.

See generally Reformation, III; Rescission and Cancellation, VI.

¶ 1865. A decree dismissing, as not sustained by the proofs, a bill to correct the descriptions in a land contract, based upon defendant's alleged fraud in omitting therefrom certain lands agreed to be included in the sale, was affirmed.—Boyce v. Williams, 112 Mich. 544.

¶ 1866. A decree reforming a mortgage so as to include land claimed to have been omitted through fraud of the mortgagor, will be affirmed where the question involved is one of fact, and the claim is sustained by the evidence.—Jacobson v. Ismond, 120 Mich. 350.

¶ 1867. A decree dismissing a bill for the reformation of a contract by reducing the amount, and to enjoin an action at law for recovery thereon, will not be disturbed where it depends upon the credit to be given witnesses whose testimony is in direct conflict, there being nothing unreasonable in the contract and nothing in the surrounding circumstances from which it could reasonably be inferred that complainant had a preponderance of the evidence.—Andrus v. Scudder, 120 Mich. 502.

¶ 1868. A decree for the reformation of a deed so as to exclude therefrom seven feet extending into a warehouse will be affirmed where based upon conflicting testimony as to whether it was intended to include the seven feet in question, the answer depending upon the credibility to be given to witnesses.—Scheurmann v. Styninger, 130 Mich. 468.

¶ 1869. A decree for complainant, in a bill to have a deed to timber lands declared a mortgage was sustained where the defendant denied plaintiff's statement of the transaction, where the circumstances tended to support complainant's testimony.—Bigelow v. Thompson, 133 Mich. 334.

¶ 1870. Where, upon a bill to procure the discharge of a mortgage given to secure the payment of part of the contract price for the construction of a dwelling-house on the mortgaged premises, the testimony as to whether the contract had been agreed to be canceled and abandoned by the parties was conflicting, the finding upon such question of fact by the circuit judge whose opportunity to judge of the witnesses' credibility was better, will not be disturbed upon appeal.—Blagborne v. Hunger, 101 Mich. 375.

¶ 1871. Where, in a husband's suit to set aside a deed to his wife, he testified that it was delivered on Sunday, and she testified that it was delivered on Saturday, findings of the lower court against complainant will not be disturbed.—Phillips v. Phillips, 83 Mich. 259.

¶ 1872. A decree for defendant in an action to set aside a mortgage on account of the incapacity of the mortgagor and because its contents were not explained to him or to his wife at the time it was executed, will not be set aside where it appears that it resulted beneficially to mortgagor and his family, and also that he understood the transaction.—Lee v. Fiero, 120 Mich. 430.

¶ 1873. Decree setting aside a deed on the ground of incompetency and undue influence will be reversed on evidence showing the grantor was not insane, incompetent or subject to undue influence when the deed was made.—Smith v. Cuddy, 127 Mich. 664.

¶ 1874. In a suit to cancel certain deeds on the ground of undue influence, misunderstanding and no delivery, the testimony of the complainant seeming more free from bitterness, the decree will be sustained in the face of contradictory testimony by the defendant and two other witnesses, and the failure of the complainant to establish ignorance of the contents of the deeds.—Douglass v. Longor, 138 Mich. 69.

¶ 1875. On a bill to set aside and annul a deed where the sole question on the evidence was as to the competency of the grantor to execute the deed, a decision of the circuit judge that he was not is affirmed.—Benson v. Raymond, 142 Mich. 357.

¶ 1876. Complainants filed a bill to set aside certain conveyances on the ground that they were obtained by fraud and duress. Proofs were taken in open court, and the material testimony was in direct conflict. Held, that a decree in favor of complainants would not be disturbed.—Hughes v. Jones, 108 Mich. 378.

¶ 1877. Where, in a suit in equity by a purchaser of a vessel to set aside the contract and to recover money paid thereunder on the ground of false and fraudulent misrepresentation of defendant vendor, the fact as to the making of such representations is not established by the evidence, the Supreme Court will sustain the decree of the circuit court in favor of the defendant.—Dorrington v. Carpenter, 171 Mich. 652.

¶ 1878. A decree setting aside a conveyance because in fraud of creditors, will not be disturbed where the evidence is conflicting and it does not appear that the decree is not fairly sustained by the evidence.—Smead v. Rogers, 120 Mich. 441.

¶ 1879. A decree dismissing a bill to set aside an assignment of a land contract on the ground that it was a homestead, affirmed where the evidence not only failed to show that it was a homestead but showed by a preponderance of the evidence that it was not a homestead.—Newbro v. Friar, 131 Mich. 368.

¶ 1880. On a bill filed to protect a homestead interest in land claimed by defendant under a deed purporting to be executed by complainants, and delivered to him for a third person, a finding by the court below that the name of the original grantee had been erased and another substituted, after delivery of the deed, will not be disturbed on appeal where the evidence is conflicting.—Guilfoyle v. Hanson, 151 Mich. 114.

§ 435. ——Specific performance.

See generally Specific Performance, IV.

¶ 1881. A decree on a bill for specific performance and accounting finding that the property (a manufacturing plant and patents and contracts incident thereto) was not capable of physical division, will be sustained where the record contains evidence supporting such a finding, though there is no direct evidence of it.—Bolton v. Chope, 119 Mich. 33.

¶ 1882. On a bill to compel specific performance of a contract alleged to have been made between a father and daughter, whereby the latter was to live on the farm upon shares during his lifetime, and on his death it should become hers, a decree dismissing the bill will not be disturbed on appeal where based upon conflicting evidence.—Harvey v. Zimmer, 147 Mich. 371.

¶ 1883. On a bill to re-establish a deed, the preponderance of evidence showing that an agreement was made as stated in the bill, and that in pursuance thereof a deed was executed and delivered to the complainant with the intention to vest the title of the land in controversy to him, a decree accordingly will be sustained.—Blackford v. Olmstead, 147 Mich. 56.

¶ 1884. A decree for complainant in a suit for specific performance of a land contract was affirmed where the controversy was one of fact, and depending upon the credibility of witnesses, the single issue being whether defendant's signature to the contract was obtained by fraud.—Harris v. Brandenburg, 139 Mich. 382.

§ 436. Findings on reference.

¶ 1885. A referee's finding upon an accounting will not be disturbed on appeal except when the court is fully satisfied that he has made a mistake.—Crawford v. Osmun, 90 Mich. 77.

¶ 1886. In an accounting suit a charge disallowed by the referees because not satisfied that it was a proper one, rather than because it did not represent material supplies, should be allowed on appeal when appearing from the record to have been justified by the facts and circumstances.—Young v. Barras, 74 Mich. 343.

§ 437. Confirmation orders.

¶ 1887. An order confirming the report of commissioners in partition of real estate, will be affirmed where it appears to be based upon sound considerations and upon the testimony and the judgment of the commissioners as to the value of the land, the timber and the improvements.—Austin v. Austin, 132 Mich. 453.

2. On Writ of Error or Case Made.

§ 438. Review of evidence in general.

[Note. It is not intended to collate here any holdings that the evidence in the case was or was not sufficient to prove a given issue. All such matter is substantive in quality and will be treated in the specific topic dealing with the issue in question.

Whether the court on review will go into the determination below will often depend on whether it was on a question of law or fact, and this is a matter that pertains to the specific topic involved and is there treated. Thus for example the question whether a contract was legal or illegal in its object may be one of fact, if the terms of the contract are not disclosed by a writing or if the illegality exists in matters extraneous to the contract. See Contracts, X; Gambling Contracts.]

¶ 1888. The Supreme Court cannot weigh the evidence or draw conclusions from facts; it cannot review law cases upon the facts.—Compton v. Blair, 27 Mich. 397; Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49; Webber v. Donnelly, 33 Mich. 469; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Judson, 34 Mich. 506; Young v. Taylor, 36 Mich. 25; Gano v. Heath, 36 Mich. 441; Thatcher v. St. Andrew's Church Wardens, etc., of Ann Arbor, 37 Mich. 264; Bodine v. Simmons, 38 Mich. 682; Payment v. Church, 38 Mich. 776; Tuxbury v. French, 39 Mich. 190; Ellis v. Spaulding, 39 Mich. 366; Weirich v. Cook, 39 Mich. 134; Miller v. Petrie, 40 Mich. 657; Underhill v. Muskegon Booming Co., 40 Mich. 660; Locke v. Tuttle, 41 Mich. 407; Ortman v. Merchants' Bank of Canada, 41 Mich. 482; Stockle v. Silsbee, 41 Mich. 615; Johnson v. Crispell, 43 Mich. 261; DeMill v. Moffat, 45 Mich. 410; Gates v. Fisk, 45 Mich. 522; Kent Furniture Mfg. Co. v. Ransom, 46 Mich. 416; Chatterton v. Parrott, 46 Mich. 432; Rider v. Kern, 46 Mich. 455; Hicks v. Lyle, 46 Mich. 488; Cuddy v. Horn, 46 Mich. 596; Marcott v. Marquette H. & O. R. Co., 47 Mich. 1; Green v. Gill, 47 Mich. 86; Kane v. Stowe, 50 Mich. 317; Peoples v. Evening News Ass'n, 51 Mich. 11; McGraw v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 54 Mich. 145; Parsons v. Clark, 59 Mich. 414; Robinson v. Smith, 63 Mich. 350; Krolik v. Graham, 64 Mich. 226; Nelson v. Lumberman's Mining Co., 65 Mich. 288; Kryger v. Andrews, 65 Mich. 405; Beal v. Polhemus, 67 Mich. 130; Witheral v. Muskegon Booming Co., 68 Mich. 48; Burch v. Woodworth, 68 Mich. 519; Morgan v. Botsford, 82 Mich. 153.

¶ 1889. This court has no authority to review a case at law upon the facts and decide from the record whether the plaintiff has made out such a case as would entitle him to go to the jury, and if he has, whether the defendant has met it by so unquestionable a defence as to leave the jury no discretion to do anything but give him a verdict.—DeMill v. Moffat, 45 Mich. 410.

¶ 1890. The Supreme Court on error cannot correct mistakes of fact.—McDuff v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 84 Mich. 1; Warner v. Mason, 50 Mich. 53.

¶ 1891. The Supreme Court cannot, in law cases, draw conclusions of fact unless they are so inevitable as to amount to conclusions of law; but the conclusions meant are ultimate, and not merely subordinate conclusions.—Yelverton v. Steele, 40 Mich. 538.

§ 439. ——Under the statutes.

¶ 1892. The Michigan Supreme Court, by force of the statute, is bound to consider the testimony and determine whether the verdict of the jury is against the weight of the evidence in passing on the question whether a motion for a new trial demanded on that ground was properly denied.—In re McIntyre's Estate, 160 Mich. 117; Ewing v. Lamphere, Id.

¶ 1893. Under the statute requiring the Supreme Court to review verdicts as being against the evidence, it cannot content itself with the mere determination that there is a conflict of evidence, and that the jury is as well qualified to judge of the facts and the credibility of testimony as itself, or that the trial judge has approved the verdict, or expressed his own belief that the verdict is not against the weight of evidence, and thereupon affirmed the denial of a motion for a new trial; but it must examine the testimony and determine for itself whether or not the verdict is so plainly against justice as to call for a new trial.—Krouse v. Detroit United Ry., 166 Mich. 147.

¶ 1894. The Supreme Court will not pass upon the merits in an action at law involving the question of fraud, except where the question is raised on a motion for a new trial, or where from the whole evidence, it can show that there is no evidence tending to prove fraud, or that the evidence is as consistent with the absence as with the presence of a fraudulent motive.—Brucker v. Manistee & G. R. R. Co., 166 Mich. 330.

¶ 1895. In an action by a contractor against the lessor and lessee of property to recover for electrical work done on the leased premises, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the work was done by the direction of a manager of the lessor and to warrant a review of such findings under Circuit Court Rule 26, providing that findings of fact by the trial court shall be treated as on special verdict, and Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, § 15, providing that where cases are tried by the court, exceptions may be filed to the findings of fact in that such findings are against the clear weight of evidence, and error may be assigned to such exceptions and upon appeal they may be reviewed by the Supreme Court.—Oudersluys v. Carstens, 194 Mich. 521.

§ 440. Findings, instructions and exceptions as basis for review.

The doctrine that there must be a reduction of the evidence to findings and an exception to the findings in order to present a reviewable question of law on the propriety or correctness of the findings upon the evidence, and if necessary a request to find, is treated in Saving Questions for Review.

Omission to find or want of specific written findings, see post §§ 455, 456.

The necessity of a charge or of a request to charge in order to raise the question whether the evidence is such as may be submitted to the jury is also treated in Saving Questions for Review, but the topic Instructions should be consulted on the general law of instructions and requests for instructions.

The necessity and sufficiency of the incorporation of the findings or the charge and the evidence in the record in order to review them is treated ante XI, B.

Testing facts according to instructions, see post § 450.

Scope of review as dependent on completeness or sufficiency of the bill or case, see ante XII, B, 3.

§ 441. Review of findings or verdict in general.

Findings on appeal or certiorari to circuit, see post §§ 458, 459.

Referee's findings, see post § 462.

Sufficiency of showing of the evidence in the bill or case, see ante § 186 et seq.

Presumption as to proofs or want of proofs where record does not purport to be full, see ante §§ 373-378.

Assigning error in verdict or findings, see ante § 207.

¶ 1896. On error the Supreme Court reviews the action of the court below on questions of law only, but examines its conclusions on questions of fact for the purpose of determining such questions of law as arise on them.—In re Mower's Appeal, 48 Mich. 441.

¶ 1897. A judgment for plaintiff should be reversed if any substantial part of the cause of action is unsupported by proof.—Chicago & C. S. R. Co. v. Peters, 45 Mich. 636.

§ 442. ——Findings by court without jury.

Findings of fact on motion or offer of evidence, see post §§ 460, 461.

Judgment on claim against assignor for creditors as common law judgment conclusive on facts, see ante ¶ 19.

Presumption as to there having been proofs to sustain findings, and that they were sufficient, see ante §§ 375, 378.

Presumption on trial by court that improper evidence was ignored, see ante § 355.

¶ 1898. Where there is a finding of facts by the circuit judge, the evidence can be examined on error only so far as to see whether it tends to support the finding.—Tillman v. Fuller, 13 Mich. 113; Compton v. Blair, 27 Mich. 397; Robinson v. Smith, 68 Mich. 350.

¶ 1899. Findings of fact by the circuit court in a trial without jury are in the nature of a special verdict, and are not reviewable if there is any evidence in the record tending to support them; the Supreme Court on error will not weigh the evidence, and will only consider whether there is any to support the findings.—Ball v. Busch, 64 Mich. 336; Beal v. Polhemus, 67 Mich. 130; Montague v. Dougan, 68 Mich. 98; Drake v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 69 Mich. 168; Warren v. Gutches, 71 Mich. 407; Delta Lumber Co. v. Williams, 73 Mich. 86; True Printing & Engraving Co. v. Perkins, 73 Mich. 624; Thompson v. Homan, 77 Mich. 134; Baker v. Baird, 79 Mich. 255; Morgan v. Botsford, 82 Mich. 153; Noah v. Pierce, 85 Mich. 70; Dietz v. Bignall, 86 Mich. 292; Snody v. Shier, 88 Mich. 304; Lobdell v. Baldwin, 93 Mich. 569; Hecock v. Van Dusen, 96 Mich. 573.

¶ 1900. A finding of facts by the court sitting without a jury can be examined only so far as to see whether the legal conclusions and judgment are warranted by the facts found.—Tillman v. Fuller, 13 Mich. 113.

¶ 1901. The conclusions of a trial judge upon a question of fact must stand where the record does not show them to be manifestly wrong, and so opposed to other findings as to be erroneous in law.—In re Mower's Appeal, 48 Mich. 441.

¶ 1902. Where the circuit judge has found certain facts and certifies that the record contains all the testimony, it is not the legal duty of this court to examine the record and find the proper facts; but when a fact is found by the court which the appellant insists is not supported by any evidence, then this court will examine the testimony to determine whether there is any evidence to sustain the finding.—McFarlan v. McFarlan, 155 Mich. 652.

¶ 1903. A finding of fact by the court will not be disturbed on error except where there is a total want of evidence to support it, or it is contrary to the undisputed evidence.—First National Bank v. Walker, 115 Mich. 434.

¶ 1904. It is only when there is a total want of evidence to support a court's findings of fact made under Circuit Court Rule 26, subdiv. d, or when the findings are contrary to the undisputed evidence, that they will be disturbed.—In re Hoffman's Estate, 183 Mich. 67.

¶ 1905. A finding of fact made by a court sitting without a jury will not be disturbed on appeal, except when clearly erroneous, or when it appears that the court misunderstood the evidence or was improperly influenced.—Knowlson v. Friar, 184 Mich. 464.

§ 443. Conclusiveness and effect of verdict.

See also post §§ 444-449.

Facts as to which judgment is res adjudicata because established by verdict or findings, see Former Adjudication.

¶ 1906. A jury's verdict or finding is conclusive as to facts if there was any evidence, however slight, to justify it; and it cannot be reviewed.—Filer v. Jenks, 38 Mich. 585; Conely v. McDonald, 40 Mich. 150; Briggs v. Milburn, 40 Mich. 512; Roger Williams Ins. Co. v. Carrington, 43 Mich. 252; Tyler v. Smith, 46 Mich. 292; Leonard v. Beaudry, 80 Mich. 163; Stevens v. Pendleton, 94 Mich. 405; Crockett v. Bearce, 104 Mich. 257; Boyle v. Walsh, 105 Mich. 237; Painter v. Ledyard, 109 Mich. 568; Fuller v. Ehle, 116 Mich. 13; Childs v. Nordella, 116 Mich. 511; English v. Yore, 123 Mich. 701; Donovan v. Dalber, 124 Mich. 49; Mulvey v. Stevenson, 138 Mich. 63.

¶ 1907. A verdict will be sustained where there was evidence sufficient to go to the jury.—D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Waterloo, 138 Mich. 588.

¶ 1908. Where there is a scintilla of evidence the verdict will not be disturbed.—Freedman v. Campfield, 92 Mich. 118; Ferris v. McQueen, 94 Mich. 367.

¶ 1909. The conclusion of a jury upon a question of fact fairly submitted to it on competent evidence is final.—Filer v. Jenks, 38 Mich. 585; Whenting v. Torrent, 75 Mich. 309; Littleson v. Martindale, 111 Mich. 675.

¶ 1910. If the Supreme Court sees from the case as made that there is no evidence tending to support any particular point essential to support a judgment, they will reverse it.—Walrath v. Campbell, 28 Mich. 111.

¶ 1911. The finding of a jury will be set aside if there is no evidence to support it.—Turner v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Hartford, 55 Mich. 236.

¶ 1912. Where there was evidence tending to show a promise made by an authorized agent of defendant to pay plaintiff a given sum for his services, and the facts have been properly submitted to the jury, who have found for plaintiff, their verdict is final.—Wyman v. Crowley, 33 Mich. 84.

¶ 1913. Where there is sufficient evidence to go to the jury upon the making of the agreement as claimed by plaintiff, and upon his performance thereof, the verdict cannot be disturbed on error.—Montross v. Eddy, 94 Mich. 100.

¶ 1914. A refusal to grant a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal where there was a sharp conflict of testimony and the case was submitted to the jury under a clear and careful charge, and there was testimony which justified the verdict rendered.—Loeser v. Jorgenson, 137 Mich. 220.

¶ 1915. A verdict cannot be disturbed where the issue is purely of fact and is submitted upon the theory of each party in a proper charge.—Buttrick v. United States Fish Freezing Co., 52 Mich. 172; Linsell v. Linsell, 143 Mich. 358.

¶ 1916. Where there is some evidence to support the findings of fact, judgment will not be reversed unless the conclusions of law are erroneous.—Brown v. Doren, 76 Mich. 482.

¶ 1918. The conclusion of the jury upon a question proper for it to pass upon, and under a correct charge, cannot be reviewed upon error.—Fire Ins. Assoc. v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. ed. 860, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84.

¶ 1919. The Supreme Court will not notice evidence where the verdict below shows that the jury must have found against it.—Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 Mich. 205.

¶ 1920. One who submits a special question to the jury is bound by an adverse finding.—Stevens v. Rose, 69 Mich. 259.

¶ 1921. Whether a defendant in contracting for the printing of a record bound himself or his client was held as a question of fact conclusively settled by the jury's finding against defendant.—Wolf v. Irwin, 84 Mich. 344.

¶ 1922. A judgment for defendant in an action to recover an alleged balance of a loan was affirmed; there being testimony in the case which, if believed, would sustain the jury's finding that the claim in suit had been included in a settlement between the parties.—Kunst v. Ringold, 116 Mich. 88.

¶ 1923. Findings of fact in an action in replevin will not be disturbed when there is not only testimony to sustain the findings, but a clear weight of testimony in favor of such findings.—Condon v. Bailey, 121 Mich. 570.

¶ 1924. The question of contributory negligence in fact having been fully and thoroughly submitted to the jury will not be discussed on appeal.—Wellihan v. National Wheel Co., 128 Mich. 1.

¶ 1925. In an action to try the title to a public office, the finding of the jury in response to a special question if the ballots counted at the recount were the same ballots as were voted at the election, is conclusive where the issue was properly presented to the jury.—Attorney General, ex rel. Garthe v. Campbell, 132 Mich. 82.

§ 444. ——Of finding by court without jury.

Of referee's findings, see post § 462.

¶ 1926. The finding of the court on a trial without a jury is conclusive as to facts where there is any evidence, legally admitted, tending to support it; and it will not be reviewed.—Sweetzer v. Mead, 5 Mich. 107; Ortman v. Wilson, 23 Mich. 269; Peabody v. McAvoy, 23 Mich. 526; Compton v. Blair, 27 Mich. 397; Shotwell v. Harrison, 30 Mich. 179; Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Bates, 31 Mich. 158; Todd v. Davis, 32 Mich. 160; Webber v. Donnelly, 33 Mich. 469; Gillam v. Boynton, 36 Mich. 236; Gano v. Heath, 36 Mich. 441; Thatcher v. St. Andrew's Church Wardens, etc., of Ann Arbor, 37 Mich. 264; Sly v. Freeman, 38 Mich. 689; Johnson v. Crispell, 43 Mich. 261; Farrington v. Sexton, 43 Mich. 454; Green v. Gill, 47 Mich. 86; Kane v. Stowe, 50 Mich. 317; Kundinger v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 51 Mich. 185; Neumann v. Calumet & Hecla Min. Co., 57 Mich. 97; Ball v. Busch, 64 Mich. 336; Montague v. Dougan, 68 Mich. 98; In re Corby's Estate, 154 Mich. 353; Buckhout v. Browne, 160 Mich. 460; Skeels v. Snow, 162 Mich. 561; Nelson v. Stewart, 174 Mich. 127; Edgerly v. Ladies of Modern Maccabees, 175 Mich. 28; Scofield v. Farmer, 125 Mich. 470; Newman v. Baker, 131 Mich. 89; Hoffman v. Silverthorn, 137 Mich. 60; Walton v. Ryan, 141 Mich. 502; Cummings v. Baker, 141 Mich. 536; Chadwick v. Phoenix Accident & Sick Benefit Ass'n, 143 Mich. 481; Maher v. McKnight, 145 Mich. 381.

¶ 1927. A finding of facts is conclusive if there is evidence in the case tending to sustain it in its entirety; and if there is an absolute want of evidence to sustain any material part of the findings, it is, to that extent, of no force.—Hilsendegen v. Scheich, 55 Mich. 468.

¶ 1928. A finding of fact by the trial court sitting without a jury will not be disturbed where there is a scintilla of testimony to support it.—Barnes v. Brown, 95 Mich. 576.

¶ 1929. A finding of facts by the court sitting without a jury is to be treated as a special verdict, and is conclusive if there is evidence sustaining it, and the evidence introduced has not been excepted to.—Lovell v. Willard, 28 Mich. 346; Darling Milling Co. v. Chapman, 131 Mich. 684; Mastenbrook v. United States Acc. Ass'n, 154 Mich. 16; People v. Spencer, 199 Mich. 395; Talge Mahogany Co. v. Lindner Interior Mfg. Co., 179 Mich. 606.

¶ 1930. After a trial by the court, where the evidence is all given in the record, and exception is taken and error assigned for lack of evidence to support particular findings, such findings must be held erroneous, and not binding so far as there is no evidence to sustain them or any material part of them.—Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Bates, 31 Mich. 158,

¶ 1931. Where the Supreme Court is of opinion that on the various points covered by a judge's finding there was evidence upon which he might have reached his conclusions, the judgment based upon it is affirmed.—Clapp v. Born, 41 Mich. 152.

¶ 1932. Findings of fact by a judge take the place of a verdict by a jury, and if there is testimony upon which to base the findings, such testimony will not be reviewed on appeal.—Congdon v. Bailey, 121 Mich. 570.

¶ 1933. The finding of the circuit judge, as to payments made, computations of interest, and all other questions of fact, are conclusive on error provided no rule of law be violated in arriving at such conclusion.—Bateman v. Blake, 81 Mich. 227.

¶ 1934. The findings of fact by a trial court in an action by an attorney against a county for compensation for services rendered must be accepted by the Supreme Court as conclusive if there is any evidence tending to sustain them.—Powers v. Calhoun County, 172 Mich. 670.

¶ 1935. In an action to recover taxes paid under protest, tried by the court without a jury, the questions of fact were not reviewed, where there was testimony upon which to base findings in favor of defendant.—Aurora Iron Min. Co. v. City of Ironwood, 119 Mich. 325.

¶ 1936. On writ of error the Supreme Court will not review the findings of fact and substitute its own judgment for that of the circuit judge where there is evidence tending to support such findings.—Burgess v. Stribling, 134 Mich. 33.

¶ 1937. On review the Supreme Court cannot draw inferences from the testimony contrary to the facts found by the court below.—Bateman v. Blaisdell, 83 Mich. 357.

¶ 1938. Findings of fact by the court in a trial without a jury under C. C. Rule 26, are conclusive on error unless there is a total lack of evidence, or where the finding is contrary to the undisputed evidence in the case.—Crusoe Bros. Co. v. Kudner, 136 Mich. 583.

§ 445. ——Weight and credibility of evidence.

See also ante § 444.

Presumption as to weight and sufficiency of evidence, see ante § 378.

Reversal on weight of or insufficiency of evidence, see post §§ 452-454.

Review of discretion as to new trial where evidence is conflicting, see also ante § 413.

¶ 1939. The conclusions of the court below on a trial without a jury as to the weight and bearing of the evidence are not reviewable.—Green v. Gill, 47 Mich. 86; Parsons v. Clark, 59 Mich. 414; Beal v. Polhemus, 67 Mich. 130.

¶ 1940. The Supreme Court in law cases cannot consider the weight of the testimony or the credibility of the witnesses; all matters of fact are within the jury's province.—Franks v. Stevens, 82 Mich. 192.

¶ 1941. Where there is some testimony to sustain a finding of fact the weight of it cannot be considered on error.—Cole v. Shaw, 103 Mich. 505.

¶ 1942. The Supreme Court will not review the conclusions of a jury upon the weight of testimony, in a case at law, if there was any evidence to be submitted to the jury, even if it were only circumstantial.—Peoples v. Evening News Ass'n, 51 Mich. 11.

¶ 1943. Where the conclusions of a jury upon contradictory testimony depend upon their convictions as to the credibility of witnesses, the Supreme Court will not review them nor sustain an assignment of error based on the refusal to charge that the verdict should have been for the other party.—Dustin v. Radford, 57 Mich. 163.

¶ 1944. An appellate court cannot consider an assignment of error that the jury had found for plaintiff, or that their finding was against the weight of evidence.—Barton v. Gray, 57 Mich. 622.

¶ 1945. A verdict supported by admissible testimony in a case fairly submitted to the jury cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court to see whether the jury acted judiciously in determining which witnesses should be believed and which should not.—Balch v. Grand Rapids & I. R. R. Co., 78 Mich. 654.

¶ 1946. A judgment is not reversed on the ground that the jury should have discredited the testimony, other testimony being more probable.—Balch v. Grand Rapids & I. R. R. Co., 78 Mich. 654.

¶ 1947. Where there is testimony tending to support findings of fact, the Supreme Court will not go into the testimony for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it would have reached the same result upon the facts. —Lamoreaux v. Creveling, 103 Mich. 501.

¶ 1948. The court of appeal will not try the facts, whatever its opinion as to the credibility or weight of the testimony given. —Metropolitan Lumber Co. v. McColeman, 140 Mich. 333.

¶ 1949. Where a case turns entirely upon the credibility of the witnesses, and mainly upon that of the parties, and where no error appears in the charge in the admission of testimony, judgment will be affirmed.—Kenan v. Cummins, 88 Mich. 43.

¶ 1950. Where there was any evidence tending to sustain the verdict of the jury, the Supreme Court cannot consider whether that evidence was sufficient in amount or character.—In re Stebbins' Estate, 94 Mich. 304.

¶ 1951. A verdict will not be set aside because the defendant's testimony is corroborated as against the plaintiff's unsupported testimony.—Stevens v. Michigan Soap Works, 134 Mich. 350.

¶ 1952. The finding of a trial judge, sitting without a jury, is conclusive as to the credibility of a witness and the effect of his evidence.—Hyler v. Nolan, 45 Mich. 357.

¶ 1953. Findings of fact in assumpsit tried without a jury, for work and labor performed, will not be disturbed on appeal where there was evidence to support, or tending to support, such findings; since the weight of the evidence was for the trial judge to determine.—Thompson v. Homan, 77 Mich. 134.

¶ 1954. The weight and credibility of testimony tending to show on a plea in abatement that person on whom summons was served was the agent of defendant corporation, is for the trial judge, and not reviewable on error.—Vorheis v. People's Mut. Benefit Soc., 86 Mich. 31.

§ 446. ——On conflicting or disputed evidence.

In chancery cases, see ante § 428.

Reversal because against weight of evidence though conflicting, see post §§ 452-454.

¶ 1955. The decision of the jury on a conflict of evidence will not be disturbed on review.—Somers v. Losey, 48 Mich. 294; Myron v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 61 Mich. 387; Whentling v. Torrent, 75 Mich. 309; Wolf v. Irwin, 84 Mich. 344; Converse v. Wallace, 125 Mich. 272; Crosson v. Vogt, 130 Mich. 482; Cronenwett v. United States Health & Accident Ins. Co., 140 Mich. 522.

¶ 1956. Where there is a decided or sharp conflict in the evidence, the verdict will not be set aside on appeal as against the weight of the evidence.—McDonnell v. Central Drug Co., 170 Mich. 291; Vincent v. Heenan, 194 Mich. 316; Chapman v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 196 Mich. 671; Johnston v. Cornelius, 200 Mich. 209.

¶ 1957. A law case cannot be reversed upon disputed facts, though the impression made by them upon the Supreme Court differs from that made upon the jury.—Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 336, affirming on rehearing, 82 Mich. 315; Rajnowski v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 74 Mich. 15; Finkbinder v. Ernst, 135 Mich. 226.

¶ 1958. The special finding of a jury upon a point where the testimony conflicts is not reviewable by the Supreme Court.—Dehring v. Comstock, 78 Mich. 153.

¶ 1959. A verdict for the plaintiff suing on a contract of sale of a stock of goods sold orally according to his testimony and partly delivered is conclusive that there was a contract of sale, as against testimony of the defendant that there was no contract but merely an agreement to buy, if the goods were as represented, and that there was no delivery of any part of them; and the review is not affected by the statute of frauds, since as found the contract was valid by delivery.—Wilcox v. Young, 66 Mich. 687.

¶ 1960. A finding on conflicting evidence that a building is part of the realty will be affirmed.—Sowles v. Raymer, 110 Mich. 189.

¶ 1961. In an action against alleged partners, the reviewing court will not reverse on the ground that the trial court assumed the written contract to contain the whole agreement where the evidence of surrounding circumstances is conflicting on that question.—Robson v. Price, 134 Mich. 371.

¶ 1962. A verdict as to the actual balance due plaintiff for personal services, in an action under the log-lien law, is final, since it is a question of fact, even though the evidence was indefinite, or disputed.—Van Slyck v. Arseneau, 140 Mich. 154.

¶ 1963. A verdict of the jury, in ejectment, as to whether a boundary fence had been moved or not, is conclusive, even though the testimony is conflicting.—Spacek v. Schaub, 140 Mich. 212.

¶ 1964. Plaintiff and defendant made an oral contract for the sale of a boat. In a suit for breach of it, plaintiff and defendant gave contradictory testimony as to the time of payment. Held, the finding of the jury on this point was final.—Baker v. Temple, 160 Mich. 318.

¶ 1965. A son made a claim for services against his father's estate in addition to similar claims as evidenced by notes. The evidence of what the labor was worth and whether it was performed before or after the making of the notes was conflicting, and the court limited the recovery to labor after the date of the note. Held, the merits of the claim being its only issue, it was a question settled by the jury.—Abel v. Roosenraad, 173 Mich. 93.

¶ 1966. In a suit for personal injury the Supreme Court will not substitute its opinion for that of the jury deciding for the plaintiff where there is testimony to support plaintiff's theories as to the nature and extent of his injuries, and where there is no demonstrable scientific infirmity in the views expressed by the physicians called as plaintiff's witnesses, although plaintiff and some of his medical witnesses did not agree in all particulars as to the nature of said injury.—Wilkens v. Detroit United Ry., 169 Mich. 437.

¶ 1967. A verdict for the plaintiff in an action for damages for the defective construction of a building will not be disturbed as against the weight of evidence on error where there was testimony, which, if believed, would have warranted a larger verdict, and a careful inspection of the premises was made by the jury after hearing all the evidence.—Gutov v. Clark, 190 Mich. 381.

¶ 1968. Upon a question of fact where the evidence is conflicting the finding of the trial court sitting without a jury is conclusive.—Schuler v. Eckert, 90 Mich. 165; Village of Essexville v. Emery, 90 Mich. 183; Jacobia v. Terry, 92 Mich. 275; Hanish v. Kennedy, 106 Mich. 455; Morse v. Blanchard, 117 Mich. 87; Fairfield v. Hart, 139 Mich. 136; Smith v. Smith, 144 Mich. 139.

¶ 1969. Where in a suit in assumpsit for rent before the trial court sitting without a jury, the evidence is disputed and there is evidence to support the finding of facts made by said court, the Supreme Court will not disturb these findings and the judgment necessarily resulting therefrom.—Hindman v. Friedrich, 163 Mich. 655.

¶ 1970. Plaintiff attorney did certain legal work in connection with the prospective sale of lands belonging to his client. There was evidence that plaintiff was to have in addition a certain fee if he and the defendant succeeded in selling the land at a fixed price. Plaintiff attempted to prove that he was entitled to the fee, even though the sale was not consummated, since defendant had prevented its consummation. Held, the findings of fact by the court sitting as a jury under this conflicting evidence, and its decision that plaintiff was not entitled to fee unless the deal was actually consummated, would not be disturbed on appeal.—Skeels v. Snow, 162 Mich. 561.

§ 447. ——Amount or propriety of verdict.

¶ 1971. The amount or propriety of a verdict cannot be reviewed if there is any evidence to uphold it. Relief for errors of the jury should be sought below by moving for a new trial.—Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. De-Graff, 12 Mich. 124; Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49; Youmans v. Heartt, 34 Mich. 397; Briggs v. Milburn, 40 Mich. 512; Nicholson v. Dyer, 45 Mich. 610; De Mill v. Moffat, 49 Mich. 125; Baylis v. Stout, 49 Mich. 215; Warner v. Mason, 50 Mich. 53; Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co., 50 Mich. 163.

¶ 1972. If the case is a proper one for exemplary damages, and it does not appear that the court's charge or rulings were misleading, the remedy for an award claimed to be excessive is by application below for new trial; the Supreme Court is not concerned with the amount.—Brushaber v. Stegemann, 22 Mich. 266; Welch v. Ware, 32 Mich. 77; Briggs v. Milburn, 40 Mich. 512; and see Dalman v. Koning, 54 Mich. 320.

¶ 1973. The Supreme Court on error has no concern with a claim that the verdict below was excessive.—Richmond v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 87 Mich. 374.

¶ 1974. Whether damages found by a jury are excessive or not does not present a question of law, and in case no improper testimony affecting the subject of damages has been admitted, and the court has given to the jury proper instructions to guide them in reaching a conclusion, the amount of damages awarded is beyond the reach of writ of error.—Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 78 Mich. 513.

¶ 1975. The court rarely interferes with the damages given by the jury in an action of seduction.—Bennett v. Beam, 42 Mich. 346.

¶ 1976. Where in an action for services it is claimed on error that the items allowed were excessive, such items will not be reviewed where the allowance was sustained by the evidence.—Wright v. St. Louis Sugar Co., 146 Mich. 555.

¶ 1977. A verdict for damages in an action for breach of contract in constructing a building in a defective manner will not be disturbed as excessive where there is testimony, which, if believed, would have warranted a larger verdict than the one rendered, and the jury, after hearing the evidence, inspected the premises carefully.—Gutov v. Clark, 190 Mich. 881.

¶ 1978. Record in its entirety held to show the jury were not influenced or actuated by malign or improper motives in arriving at their verdict as to amount of plaintiff's damages, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries.—Griggs v. Saginaw & F. Ry. Co., 196 Mich. 258.

§ 448. ——Where trial judge passed on verdict.

Presumptions as to evidence and truth of it on review of directed verdict, see ante §§ 386-388.

¶ 1979. A verdict must be clearly against the weight of the evidence to require the Supreme Court to overrule the decision of the circuit judge, refusing a new trial.—Gardiner v. Courtright, 165 Mich. 54; Reed v. McCready, 170 Mich. 532.

¶ 1980. The fact that a circuit judge, in refusing a new trial to a defendant in a personal injury suit, indicates an opinion that the verdict is not according to the weight of the evidence, is not controlling upon the Supreme Court.—Krouse v. Detroit United Ry., 170 Mich. 438.

¶ 1981. Where in an action at law the trial court, on refusing a motion for a new trial, states that in his opinion the verdict is not against the evidence, the Supreme Court will not reverse the judgment unless it clearly appears from the record that the trial judge was in error.—Pelton v. Mayhew, 166 Mich. 546.

¶ 1982. The Supreme Court, after having found the plaintiff in a personal injury suit guilty of contributory negligence, will not sustain the judgment in his favor on the ground that the defendant might have avoided the accident after discovering plaintiff's negligence, where the trial court has expressed the opinion that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence.—Cardinal v. Houghton County St. Ry. Co., 165 Mich. 155.

¶ 1983. A verdict will not be disturbed as unsupported by the evidence unless it is against the overwhelming weight of the evidence, especially where the trial court, on a motion for a new trial, rules that the verdict shall not be disturbed.—Cornell v. Fidler, 194 Mich. 509.

§ 449. ——Where previous trials had same result.

Conclusiveness of law of the case, retrial on same facts, see post § 555.

Final judgment without new trial where different result is improbable, see post § 510.

¶ 1984. In an action involving the title to certain railroad ties, where the verdict in favor of plaintiff has twice been set aside, the court is justified in refusing to set aside a third similar verdict where there is substantial evidence to support it.—Hyde v. Haak, 132 Mich. 364.

¶ 1985. Judgment upon a third trial of the case was affirmed, it appearing that there was evidence to justify the verdict and that the jury were properly instructed on the only question argued in the brief.—Page Woven Wire Fence Co. v. Pool, 139 Mich. 706.

¶ 1986. Where in a suit for personal injuries plaintiff's version of the accident is contradicted by four disinterested witnesses, and is sustained by her own testimony and that of another disinterested witness, and three juries all found in plaintiff's favor, a verdict in her favor is not so manifestly against the weight of the evidence as to require the Supreme Court to reverse the ruling of the trial court denying a fourth trial to defendant.—Krouse v. Detroit United Ry., 170 Mich. 438.

§ 450. Instructions or theory as test of sufficiency.

¶ 1987. The court of appeal, in an action for personal injury, is not called upon to consider whether there was evidence of gross negligence as properly defined, but whether there was evidence of gross negligence as defined by the trial court, where the court adopted the definition requested by the appealing defendant.—Ladd v. Germain, 145 Mich. 225.

§ 451. Facts concluded by verdict or finding.

Construction of verdict as to facts found and implied, see ante § 383, and see also Verdicts and Findings.

¶ 1988. A verdict is conclusive as to the fact necessary to be found in order to support the plaintiff's claim.—Boglarsky v. Singer Mfg. Co., 65 Mich. 510.

¶ 1989. Facts cannot be considered established by the finding of a jury, if the finding was based on an improper premise of other facts.—Fairbanks v. Bennett, 52 Mich. 61.

¶ 1990. Where special damages are claimed, and the case is submitted under such instructions as would require the jury to return a verdict therefor if there were any, a verdict for defendant determines that none was suffered.—Clark v. Wiles, 54 Mich. 328.

¶ 1991. The finding of the circuit judge, upon a trial by the court without a jury, is conclusive upon every question of fact specifically passed upon.—Tower v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 34 Mich. 328.

¶ 1992. A transfer of land cannot be treated in the Supreme Court as by way of security if the jury below has found it to be a sale.—Stanley v. Nye, 54 Mich. 277.

¶ 1993. Where, in an action of trespass for an alleged unlawful entry into leased premises by the wife and sons of the landlord, the question whether or not the oral lease under which plaintiff's husband held had terminated at the time of the entry is submitted to the jury, their finding will not be disturbed on error.—Brown v. McKimmie, 102 Mich. 35.

¶ 1994. It cannot be said on error that there was a misjoinder by reason of the fact that one of coplaintiffs had parted with his claim against the defendant to the other coplaintiff, and that plaintiff's claims were several, where those facts were properly submitted to the jury on evidence and found against the contention.—Forbes v. Forbes, 112 Mich. 630.

¶ 1995. In mandamus to compel a drain commissioner to issue orders of payment for work on drains, a finding of fact that the drains were accepted as completed and the issuance of the mandate will justify the conclusion that the court found that the drains were completed according to contract and the finding of fact cannot be reviewed.—Heineman v. Sullivan, 127 Mich. 682.

§ 452. Ground for disturbance or reversal.

See also post §§ 453, 454.
Questions open on review of verdicts and findings, see ante §§ 438-442.
Rules as to force and effect of verdicts and findings on the facts, see ante §§ 443-451.
Sufficiency as law of the the case on second review, see post § 465 et seq.

¶ 1996. Although there may be a conflict of evidence, a judgment may be reversed where the verdict is clearly against the weight of the evidence.—Woods v. Palmer, 151 Mich. 30.

¶ 1997. A trial court's finding of facts will be reversed only when entirely unsupported by evidence.—First Nat. Bank of Allegan v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 195 Mich. 1.

¶ 1998. A judgment will be reversed and a new trial ordered where the verdict was clearly against the weight of evidence.—County of Montmorency v. Putnam, 144 Mich. 135.

¶ 1999. Where the main question is one of fact, the jury's finding cannot be disturbed unless the trial court was at fault in its rulings or instructions.—Hart Mfg. Co. v. Mann's Boudoir Car Co., 65 Mich. 564.

¶ 2000. A verdict not supported by any evidence must be set aside; so held where the issue involved was fraud on the wife's part in taking a bill of sale in her own name, and where there was no evidence warranting the submission of the question of fraud to the jury.—Clark v. Phelps, 76 Mich. 564.

¶ 2001. Judgment in trespass quare clausum fregit was set aside on the evidence where it was apparent that other controversies depended upon the one in question, and that important attainable evidence as to boundaries had not been introduced.—Kilgannon v. Jenkinson, 57 Mich. 325.

¶ 2002. Whether a verdict in a suit under the Survival Act (Comp. L. 1897, § 10117) for injuries resulting in the death of a child of five years is excessive or not presents a question of fact and not of law, and the reviewing court will not disturb the verdict of the jury except where the damages are so clearly excessive as to show they were the result of partiality or prejudice.—Love v. Detroit, J. & C. R. Co., 170 Mich. 1.

¶ 2003. A verdict cannot be disturbed solely on the ground that its amount is greater than the Supreme Court thinks should have been given, unless the amount is such as to shock the common sense of mankind.—Retan v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 94 Mich. 146.

¶ 2004. The weight of evidence is for the trial court; the Supreme Court cannot disturb any of his findings of fact unless the record shows an absolute want of testimony to support them.—Drake v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 168.

§ 453. ——Contrary to or against weight of evidence.

See also ante § 452, post § 454.

¶ 2005. A verdict will not be set aside as against the weight of evidence unless clearly against the overwhelming weight of evidence.—Druck v. Antrim Lime Co., 177 Mich. 364; McGary v. Buick Motor Co., 182 Mich. 345; Darling v. Grand Rapids, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 184 Mich. 607; McGavock v. Ducharme, 192 Mich. 98.

¶ 2006. This court will reverse a case upon the question of the weight of evidence only when the verdict is clearly against the overwhelming weight.—Fike v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 174 Mich. 167.

¶ 2007. The Supreme Court will not reverse a verdict in favor of plaintiff in a personal injury suit simply because its members might, if jurors, incline to a different verdict.—Krouse v. Detroit United Ry., 170 Mich. 438; Faulkner v. Parish Mfg. Co., 201 Mich. 182.

¶ 2008. The Supreme Court will only interfere when a verdict for plaintiff in a personal injury suit is so manifestly contrary to the overwhelming weight of the evidence, and so palpably wrong, as to force the conviction that it was the result of either passion or prejudice or a dense incapacity to analyze the testimony and discern the truth. —Krouse v. Detroit United Ry., 170 Mich. 438.

¶ 2009. A judgment for plaintiff will not be disturbed by this court because the testimony seems to preponderate in favor of defendant; the testimony on the part of defendant must be conclusive of the matter to justify a reversal.—Muir v. Kalamazoo Corset Co., 155 Mich. 624.

¶ 2010. Where from the record it appears that the instructions were proper, that the trial was fair, well conducted, and impartial, and it does not appear that the verdict was against the overwhelming weight of evidence, the verdict will not be set aside.—Tyler v. Wright, 171 Mich. 579.

¶ 2011. Where the verdict rendered is clearly against the weight of the evidence by every permissible assumption of fact, judgment will be reversed and a new trial ordered.—Farrell v. Jerry Madden Shingle Co., 148 Mich. 275.

¶ 2012. A verdict should not be held to be against the weight of evidence where the testimony as to the essential facts is sharply conflicting.—Hydrex Silent Exhaust Works v. Seager Engine Works, 189 Mich. 431.

¶ 2013. Where there is evidence in a suit on an insurance policy which, if believed by the jury, would furnish a basis for the verdict returned by them, the court will not disturb their verdict as being against the evidence.—Goodwin v. Union Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 163 Mich. 41.

¶ 2014. Where the differences between the parties to a personal injury action is supported by affirmative testimony, which, if believed by the jury, would sustain a verdict for the plaintiff, the court will not set the verdict aside as against the weight of the evidence, where to do so they must enter upon the province of the jury in determining controverted questions of fact.—Mollanen v. Washington Iron Co., 176 Mich. 505.

¶ 2015. Where it was questionable whether the defendant should have been permitted to amend his plea of the general issue with notice of set-off so as to give notice of accord and satisfaction, and there was a dispute of the fact that a check was tendered or taken in settlement, and the court submitted the question to the jury, instructing them as requested by defendant, the determination of the jury was not so clearly against the weight of the evidence as to justify the court in disturbing a verdict for the plaintiff.—Quinlan v. Heyboer, 171 Mich. 228.

¶ 2016. Where in a suit for injuries the plaintiff's evidence, given solely by himself, as to defendant's negligence, is flatly contradicted by many disinterested and unimpeached witnesses, and by the physical circumstances and conditions, so as to make it appear that the verdict in his favor is clearly against the weight of the evidence, the Supreme Court will reverse the judgment.—Bernard v. Grand Rapids Paper Box Co., 170 Mich. 238.

¶ 2017. In an action by an indemnitee to recover from the indemnitor for a loss sustained on a construction bond, findings of fact as to a waiver of a provision that suits should be begun in a certain time will not be reviewed unless there is a total want of evidence or the finding is contrary to the undisputed evidence.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Hibbler, 177 Mich. 490.

¶ 2018. In an action against a corporation to recover the value of property turned over to the corporation in payment for stock in the corporation as reorganized because of fraud on the part of agents and directors in misrepresenting the amount of debts and the ability of the directorate to procure funds when the cash was exhausted, held that the findings of the trial court in favor of defendant were not clearly against the weight of evidence so as to warrant a reversal under Comp. Laws 1915, § 12587.—Woodward v. Huron Implement Co., 200 Mich. 523.

¶ 2019. The Supreme Court cannot interfere with the findings of fact unless a conclusion contrary to that drawn by the trial judge must necessarily be drawn from the evidence.—Bates v. Herrick, 82 Mich. 295.

§ 454. ——Insufficiency to go to jury.

See also ante §§ 452, 453.
Law of the case on second review, see post § 465.

¶ 2020. The Supreme Court will not hold that the determination of questions of fact was improperly left to the jury except where there is absolutely no evidence to sustain the findings.—Baumier v. Antiau, 79 Mich. 509.

§ 455. Refusal or omission to find facts.

Impropriety of findings in appellate judgment, see post §§ 489, 490.

¶ 2021. In an action tried without a jury it is for the trial judge, and not for the Supreme Court, to hear argument as to the force of the evidence, and as to inferences and presumptions, and to draw therefrom and state the necessary conclusions of fact.—Berrien County Treasurer v. Bunbury, 45 Mich. 79.

¶ 2022. In a case tried by a judge without a jury it is for the trial judge himself, and not for the Supreme Court, to decide what conclusions the evidence will warrant.—Butts v. Davis, 50 Mich. 310.

¶ 2023. The findings of fact made by the court on a trial without jury cannot be supplemented by the testimony, and the Supreme Court cannot go beyond them.—Ionia, E. & B. Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Otto, 97 Mich. 522.

¶ 2024. The failure of a circuit judge to make certain findings of facts, cannot be reviewed when the testimony to support such findings was not undisputed.—Williams v. Merritt, 152 Mich. 621.

¶ 2025. Where a case is tried by the court, it is the exclusive province of the judge to pass upon the testimony, and to draw inferences therefrom, and when findings of fact proposed by a party are refused, such refusal is not subject to review in this court.—Hogle v. Meyering, 161 Mich. 472.

¶ 2026. The refusal of a court sitting without a jury to allow amendments to findings of fact is not a subject of review in the upper court, where the findings are supported by the evidence.—McBroom v. Cheboygan Brewing & Malting Co., 162 Mich. 323; Beal v. Polhemus, 67 Mich. 130.

§ 456. ——Findings not written and specific.

¶ 2027. Where a cause is tried by the court without a jury and no special finding made, the general finding is in substance the same as a general verdict, and objections based on the effect which ought to have been given by the court on the trial to certain evidence will not be considered on error where no exception has been taken to the finding.—Van Middlesworth v. Van Middlesworth, 32 Mich. 183.

¶ 2028. Where a case is tried by the court without a jury, and no written finding of facts and law is requested, the Supreme Court cannot analyze the process by which the trial court arrived at its conclusion, to ascertain whether such conclusion contains items not warranted by the testimony.—Keystone Lumber & Salt Mfg. Co. v. Jenkinson, 69 Mich. 220.

¶ 2029. Where there are no findings of fact or law, the court cannot, on error, examine the testimony to see whether it supports the judgment reached by the trial court without a jury.—McDonnell v. Union Trust Co., 139 Mich. 386.

§ 457. Inconsistent or repugnant findings.

¶ 2030. The Supreme Court will not inquire into apparent inconsistencies in a finding of facts where the final result supports the judgment and no exceptions are taken.—Leitelt v. Parker, 48 Mich. 297.

§ 458. Findings on appeal or certiorari from justice.

¶ 2031. The Supreme Court, upon a writ of error in cases taken to the Circuit Court on certiorari, can correct errors of law only; disputed questions of fact cannot be reviewed.—Miller v. Chaffee, 1 Mich. 257; Higley v. Lant, 3 Mich. 612; Webber v. Hanke, 4 Mich. 198; Elliott v. Whitmore, 5 Mich. 532; Bromley v. People, 7 Mich. 472; Cicotte v. Morse, 8 Mich. 424.

¶ 2032. On error in cases removed to the circuit from justice's court by certiorari, the Supreme Court will reverse the justice's judgment if there is no evidence legally tending to prove any essential fact.—Cicotte v. Morse, 8 Mich. 424.

¶ 2034. On error to the circuit from a judgment on certiorari to a justice of the peace, the findings of the justice on contradictory evidence cannot be reviewed, nor could the circuit court have weighed it.—Goodman v. Shipley, 105 Mich. 439.

§ 459. ——On appeal from probate.

¶ 2035. Where under the Judicature Act, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, Chap. XVIII. § 15, upon trial by the court of a proceeding for the allowance of a claim against an estate, exceptions are duly filed by the claimant to each of the findings of fact made by the court on the specific ground that such findings were against the clear weight of the evidence, the Supreme Court will only reverse the case on the question of the weight of the evidence when the verdict is against the overwhelming weight of evidence.—In re Cutter's Estate, 194 Mich. 34.

¶ 2036. The finding of the circuit court on appeal from the probate court as to what is a reasonable compensation for extraordinary services rendered by an executor is open to review in the Supreme Court.—Wisner v. Mabley's Estate, 74 Mich. 143.

¶ 2037. On writ of error to the circuit court in an appeal from an order of the probate court allowing the final account of administrators the findings of fact of the circuit court will not be reviewed where there is evidence to support them.—Gee v. Hasbrouck, 128 Mich. 509.

¶ 2038. Findings of fact by the trial judge in an accounting by an executor where based on conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal.—Webb v. Peck, 131 Mich. 579.

¶ 2040. In a will contest on the ground of mental incompetency, the Supreme Court will not disturb a verdict where the evidence is conflicting, where the trial court refused to disturb the verdict, where the verdict is not clearly against the weight of the evidence, and where there is no indication of passion or prejudice upon the part of the jury.—In re Hoyles' Estate, 162 Mich. 275.

¶ 2041. A finding by the circuit court in a trial without a jury and upon appeal from the probate court in proceedings upon petition to probate a will, that a certain section of the will was obliterated by the testator with the intention of revoking it, will not be disturbed upon review if there is any evidence to sustain it.—In re Fox's Estate, 192 Mich. 699.

¶ 2042. The Supreme Court will only consider questions of law in reviewing on error the proceedings had at the circuit on appeal from a probate order appointing a guardian for an incompetent. The sufficiency of the evidence to show incompetency is not such a question.—Norton v. Sherman, 58 Mich. 549.

¶ 2043. The decision of the trial court upon disputed facts will not be reviewed by the Supreme Court on appeal from the circuit court, to which an appeal was taken from the probate court, nor will testimony be reviewed as upon an appeal in chancery.—In re Bristol, 199 Mich. 453.

§ 460. Decision of fact on offer of evidence.

Presumptions as to foundation having been laid, see ante § 371.

¶ 2044. Where testimony fairly tends to show facts entitling documents to be admitted in evidence, the Supreme Court will not review the conclusion of the trial judge as to its weight.—Ortmann v. Merchants' Bank of Canada, 41 Mich. 482.

¶ 2045. The Supreme Court will not be disposed to review evidence to show what efforts were made to secure the attendance of a subscribing witness, if they were diligent and satisfactory to the trial court.—McMillan v. Larned, 41 Mich. 521.

¶ 2046. A decision of the trial court as to the sufficiency of a notice to take depositions is reviewable on appeal where there are no circumstances better known to the trial judge than to the appellate court.—McCall Co. v. Jacobson, 139 Mich. 455.

§ 461. Decisions of fact on motions.

¶ 2048. A referee's findings of fact are conclusive, and are not reviewable on error.—St. Denis v. Saunders, 36 Mich. 369; O'Connor v. Beckwith, 41 Mich. 657; McHugh v. Curtis, 48 Mich. 262.

¶ 2049. A referee's finding cannot be disturbed unless in violation of some rule of law.—Nutting v. Burked, 48 Mich. 241.

¶ 2050. A referee's finding that parties were not partners can only be disturbed if the facts found by him necessarily created a partnership. And if there was no partnership in fact, the effect of the apparent indications, if warranting any inference, would raise one of fact, and where the referee has drawn his own inferences of fact they cannot be disturbed on review.—St. Denis v. Saunders, 36 Mich. 369.

¶ 2052. Judgment on the report of a referee will not be disturbed where there was more than a mere scintilla of evidence to support his findings and he considered it sufficient.—Botsford v. Sweet, 49 Mich. 120.

¶ 2053. Where an administrator excepted to a referee's finding in favor of a claim against the estate, and afterwards acquiesced in the decision of the circuit judge confirming the finding but overruling the conclusion of law, it was held that on error brought by the claimant he could not contest the findings of fact.—O'Connor v. Beckwith, 41 Mich. 657.

§ 463. Review on case made.

Sufficiency of record showing of the evidence, see ante § 196.

¶ 2054. Since the statute of 1867 (How. St., § 6488) a case cannot be reviewed on the facts; yet any question of law presented by a case may be reviewed, and other matter disregarded as surplusage, although the case appears to have been settled with a view to a review of the facts as well as the law.—In re Wisner's Estate, 20 Mich. 128.

¶ 2058. The finding of facts cannot be disturbed on case made except where there is a total want of evidence to support it, or where the finding is contrary to the undisputed evidence.—Cragin v. Gardner, 64 Mich. 399.

F. ERRORS NOT AFFECTING THE JUDGMENT.

§ 464. In general.

Generally speaking an error will not work a reversal if it was trivial in its effect on the appellant party or harmless to him, or if it was cured or neutralized by something else in the case or in the outcome, or if it was favorable to him. See Harmless Error.

To be regarded as harmless it must appear to be so on the record, or the record must give rise to a presumption that it was harmless. See ante, this topic, XII, C.

The scope of review will not be extended to unnecessary or harmless errors. See ante XII, A.

Generally the defendant in error or the appellee will not be heard to urge error against the judgment. As to him the failure to appeal accepts the judgment and the error being waived does not affect it. See ante XI, D.

Exclusion from consideration of errors affecting nonappellant parties, see ante §§ 265, 315.

Questions become moot and unnecessary questions, see ante XII, A.

Technical errors on matters of practice, see also ante § 291.

Necessity of pointing out where error was committed, see ante § 235.

¶ 2059. A charge in favor of the party excepting will not be reviewed on error, whether right or wrong.—Brigham v. Gurney, 1 Mich. 349.

¶ 2060. The Supreme Court will not usually consider exceptions taken by the prevailing party.—Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 49 Mich. 148.

upon the bond for the amount received upon such sale, it becomes unnecessary to inquire whether other evidence tending to establish plaintiff's case was admissible or not, as at most, the admission of it was error without injury.—Durfee, Wayne Probate Judge v. Joslyn, 101 Mich. 551.

G. FORMER DECISION AS LAW OF THE CASE ON SECOND REVIEW.

§ 465. In general.

See also post § 466.
On retrial, see post XV.
Affirmance on law of the case, see post § 482.
Declination of questions settled on former appeal, see ante § 270.
Matters precluded because open on former appeal, see also ante ¶ 1286.
Effect of division of opinion, see post XIII, D.
[Note. The doctrine of estoppel and bar by judgment is distinct from the doctrine of adherence to the law of the case in that the estoppel is conclusive as to matters of fact and the former decision as to the law to be applied. Ordinarily the doctrine of estoppel by judgment is invoked in distinct or collateral litigation. See Former Adjudication.]

¶ 2069a. In reviewing upon error a second trial of a cause, the court will not change its former decision rendered on substantially the same state of facts, on the ground that it was misled upon the former hearing; counsel should have asked for a rehearing.—Damon v. DeBar, 94 Mich. 594.

¶ 2070. The opinion upon a former appeal of the same case becomes the law of the case upon a second appeal in the absence of anything to change the facts upon which the former opinion was based.—Pollock v. German Fire Ins. Co., 132 Mich. 225.

¶ 2073. The former decision is the law of the case upon a second appeal after a case has been reversed and retried, where the record shows that the evidence, as well as the witnesses, was the same as at the first trial and there is no claim that the record differs in any way from that upon the former appeal.—Fitzgerald v. City of Benton Harbor, 132 Mich. 645.

¶ 2073a. If counsel desire a reargument of a question disposed of on hearing, they should move for a rehearing, as on a second hearing upon the same state of facts the question so decided is res judicata.—McDonald v. McKinnon, 104 Mich. 428.

¶ 2073b. Where, on the hearing in the Supreme Court of an appeal in condemnation proceedings, the award of damages, which alone is appealed from, is set aside, and the question of damages ordered submitted to a new jury, and the parties enter upon a new trial without a motion for a rehearing, they adopt the decision on said appeal as the law of the case, and the questions then decided are therefore res judicata.—Fort St. Union Depot Co. v. Backus, 103 Mich. 556; affirmed in 169 U. S. 557, 42 L. ed. 853, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445.

¶ 2075. A prior decision is conclusive of the same question on a subsequent appeal and is the law of the case, unless the prior decision was erroneous.—Gourlay v. Ins. Co. of North America, 189 Mich. 384.

¶ 2080. Where on a former appeal it was held that ouster was admitted by the plea and notice, it is not open to question when the case is again before the Supreme Court.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 126 Mich. 217.

¶ 2081. Rulings upon a former trial that the questions whether the claimant failed to show that the money in question was claimant's money, and whether claimant's claim was barred by the statute of limitations, depended upon questions of fact, and that proper instructions had been given, furnished the law of the case for a second trial.—Shouldice v. McLeod's Estate, 135 Mich. 337.

¶ 2082. In a previous hearing by the Supreme Court of a suit on an insurance policy, plaintiff insured contended that a certain bill of sale was not received in evidence by the trial court. The Supreme Court passed on the question and ordered that the said bill of sale be added to the record. Upon a second hearing of the case by the Supreme Court, held, the question as to whether the bill of sale was in evidence was not open, as it had been decided by the previous ruling.—Suchocki v. Calumet Ins. Co., 159 Mich. 121.

¶ 2082a. Where, after the reversal of a judgment in an action for negligent injury on the ground of the contributory negligence of the father of the decedent, the case is again tried, and on a second writ of error the evidence of such negligence is the same as that given on the former trial, the question will be treated as res judicata.—Apsey v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 104 Mich. 646.

¶ 2083. Where, in an action for personal injuries, the testimony on the second trial was substantially the same as on a former trial, the holding of the Supreme Court on a former appeal, that there was sufficient evidence to justify the submission of the question of the defendant's negligence to the jury, was adhered to on a subsequent appeal.—Foley v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 193 Mich. 233.

§ 466. Similarity of questions or evidence.

See also post § 557.

Leave to amend involving same points covered by affirmance of judgment on demurrer, see also ante ¶ 1085.

Findings in commitment proceedings as binding Supreme Court on original habeas corpus to test commitment, see Former Adjudication, III.

¶ 2085. On a retrial after reversing a judgment on verdict directed for defendant, the former decision will rule the case, where the issues of fact are not eliminated though the trial judge rejected some evidence formerly admitted for plaintiff and new evidence was put in for defendant resulting in verdict on the facts for plaintiff.—Barr v. Guelph Patent Cask Co., 133 Mich. 322.

¶ 2086. Where a judgment for plaintiff on the first trial of a personal injury case was reversed, and on the second trial the only material difference was that certain facts which appeared by inference in the first record were clearly established in the second trial, the judgment for defendant was affirmed.—Welliban v. National Wheel Co., 136 Mich. 233.

¶ 2089. In a personal injury action the testimony is substantially the same as that presented on the first trial so as to render the determination on a former appeal that the evidence made a question for the jury the law of the case on the second trial, where the defendant offered no evidence on the first trial and called a large number of witnesses to establish its defense on the second trial and their testimony, if believed, would have warranted a judgment for defendant, but it related to questions within the realm of fact.—Rouse v. Blair, 198 Mich. 176.

¶ 2091. The holding on a former review that the testimony of a bank officer was consistent with a want of bona fides, and therefore did not overcome the presumption that the bank took municipal bonds with notice that they were bonus bonds without consideration, is the law of the case on a subsequent writ of error where such officer's testimony appears in the record as a transcript from the former trial, he being since deceased.—Thompson v. Village of Mecosta, 141 Mich. 175.

¶ 2093. In an action to recover on a fire insurance policy where plaintiffs were mortgagees and where on a former appeal a demurrer to the declaration was overruled, defendant cannot on a subsequent appeal make the point that the "loss payable" clause in the policy under which plaintiffs claim brings a new insured into the contract without consideration moving to defendant, the point being ruled by the decision on the prior appeal.—Gourlay v. Ins. Co. of North America, 189 Mich. 384.

§ 467. Instructions and rulings in conformity to former opinion.

As proper form on retrial, see post § 556.

¶ 2096. A decision upon a direct appeal that the evidence was sufficient to warrant a submission of certain questions to the jury, is conclusive upon a second appeal, where the record does not differ materially from the former record.—O'Dell v. Goff, 153 Mich. 643.

§ 468. Change of theory on second trial.

Adherence to decision on application for rehearing unless mistake or oversight appears, see post § 538.

¶ 2099. Plaintiff, who throughout two trials, professing on examination by his own counsel to state full details of the transaction in suit, has claimed on the theory of a particular contract, is estopped on a third trial from relying, under the same pleading and bill of particulars, upon a wholly inconsistent contract then newly put forth as just remembered.—Hamilton v. Frothingham, 71 Mich. 616.

¶ 2100. A defendant is not precluded from denying the existence of an agreement relied upon by plaintiff by the fact that, upon a former trial, he defended solely upon the ground that plaintiff was estopped to assert such agreement, which defense, upon error, was held to be ineffectual.—Ladd v. Brown, 108 Mich. 105.

¶ 2101. On the first trial of an action for commissions on the sale of a boat, counsel, on being asked to elect between alleged inconsistent items of the bill of particulars, claiming commissions for finding a purchaser in the D. company, for making a sale to the D. company, and for finding a customer in the S. company, respectively, stated that the items set out were all parts of one transaction; that plaintiff found a purchaser in the S. company, and made a sale to the D. company. He elected to recover upon finding a purchaser and making a sale to the D. company. Upon a second trial, counsel claimed on a transaction in which the D. company was the nominal, and the S. company the real, purchaser. Held, not a change of theory.—Humphrey v. Eddy Transp. Co., 115 Mich. 420.

¶ 2102. Recovery is properly permitted upon a new theory on a retrial after reversal of a case, when supportable on the proofs, the record in both trials showing similar testimony.—Cooley v. Kinney, 119 Mich. 377.

§ 469. Jurisdictional objections.

¶ 2104. The determination on an appeal from an order overruling a demurrer, of objections going to the jurisdiction of a court of equity over the subject-matter, is conclusive on a subsequent appeal from a decision on the merits.—Olson v. Williams, 185 Mich. 294.

¶ 2105. A determination on an appeal from an order overruling a demurrer, that grounds for equitable relief were disclosed by a bill of complaint, is conclusive on a subsequent appeal from a decision on the merits.—Olson v. Williams, 185 Mich. 294.

§ 470. Objections not passed on before.

Practice of passing on points without discussion unless important or instructive, see post § 487.

Decision based on stated grounds, see also post § 557.

Based on other reason, see post § 471.

¶ 2106. One is not precluded from insisting on an objection based on an error that appeared on a former appeal of the same case, but was not noticed, as the decree below was reversed without hearing the appeal on its merits, and on the ground that the decree had been taken before the case was ready for a hearing on the merits.—Hardwick v. Bassett, 29 Mich. 17.

¶ 2106a. The decision on a former writ of error that the contract of guaranty sued on was valid, is not binding as the law of the case on a second writ, where no contention was made on the first trial that the guaranty was an Illinois contract governed by the law of Illinois, but such contention was made and sustained on the second trial; and under the changed facts the decision of the Illinois court of last resort that a similar contract is invalid as a guaranty will be followed.—John A. Tolman Co. v. Reed, 115 Mich. 71.

¶ 2107a. A decision on prior appeal that the circuit court "found against all claims of the plaintiff, and we think correctly" is conclusive on all points ruled by the circuit, though but one point was specifically discussed; and on a second appeal will be followed as the facts and law of the case whether right or wrong if they are identical. —Hall v. City of Kalamazoo, 141 Mich. 503.

§ 471. Objections based on different reasons.

Not passed on before, see ante § 470.

¶ 2108. Where in a suit to recover for personal services, the defendant's contention on appeal that plaintiff could not submit his case on the theory of an implied contract, is overruled, the defendant cannot raise the same point on a second appeal, though urging different reasons for his contention.—Ruttle v. What Cheer Coal Mining Co., 161 Mich. 150.

¶ 2109. The Supreme Court will not consider the same record a second time in view of a new set of objections.—Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 171 Mich. 614.

H. TRIAL DE NOVO.

§ 472. Scope and nature in general.

Mode of preserving evidence for review, see ante VI, D.
Review of the findings, see generally ante XII, E, 1.
Decree on appeal, see post § 493.
Sufficiency of evidence in particular suits, see ante XII, E, 1, ¶ 2110. On appeals in equity the court inquires into the facts and forms its own conclusions.—McCullough v. Day, 45 Mich. 554.

¶ 2111. Each case is dealt with de novo according to the justice and equity upon the whole record.—Goodrich v. Smith, 87 Mich. 1.

¶ 2113. When a chancery case reaches the Supreme Court it is heard de novo.—Latham v. Savage, 166 Mich, 300.

¶ 2115. Chancery cases on appeal to the Michigan Supreme Court are heard de novo, said court making its own decree.—Kelly v. Gaukler, 164 Mich. 519.

§ 473. On appeal from intermediate decree.

¶ 2116. Where a bill for the partition of real estate was filed and defendants filed two cross-bills for an accounting for any sums due to them from the rents and profits collected by a deceased cotenant, of whom complainant and one of the defendants were the sole heirs, and an appeal was taken from an order denying motions to dismiss the cross-bills on the ground that the defendants' claims, if any, were against the estate of such deceased cotenant and could only be allowed by the commissioner of claims appointed by the probate court, held that the question could not be decided on the record as presented, and that the case should be heard upon its merits so that a complete record might be presented of the facts upon which chancery jurisdiction was sought.—Comstock v. Deane, 197 Mich. 388.

§ 474. Evidence considered or rejected.

¶ 2119. Where the conclusions of the trial judge in an equity case were based upon incompetent testimony to an extent not clearly disclosed, held that it became the duty of the appellate court to eliminate such testimony, and, independently of any presumption which might otherwise arise from the trial court's determination, pass upon the significance of the documentary evidence to which such testimony related in the light of properly proven surrounding facts and circumstances.—Maginn v. Cashin, 196 Mich. 221.

§ 475. Testimony taken in open court below.

Weight and effect of trial judge's conclusions, see ante § 423.

¶ 2120. In a chancery case where the question is a doubtful one, the Supreme Court will give great weight to the finding of the lower court upon questions of fact where the witnesses are examined in open court, but nevertheless the case will be examined de novo, and if satisfied that an error has been made, it will be reversed.—Lowry v. Paw Paw Sav. Bank, 132 Mich. 228.

¶ 2121. The fact that the trial court in determining the credibility of a witness, had the advantage of seeing and hearing him give his testimony, does not relieve the Supreme Court of the duty of exercising its own judgment in passing on the evidence on an appeal.—Heaton v. Heaton, 186 Mich. 87.

¶ 2122. On appeal the court is not relieved of the duty of exercising its own judgment in passing on the evidence, by reason of the fact that the trial court had the advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses when their testimony was given.—Emery v. Emery, 181 Mich. 146.

¶ 2123. While it is the duty of the Supreme Court upon appeal to hear a case de novo and pass upon the facts, yet the fact that the trial court has heard the testimony of the witnesses in open court is an element which may be considered in reviewing conflicting testimony.—Murray v. Keeley Institute of Western Michigan, 190 Mich. 295.

XIII. DECISION AND JUDGMENT ON REVIEW.

A. GENERAL NATURE, FORM AND EFFECT.

§ 476. In general; affirmance or reversal.

The ordinary ground for reversal is error in the trial or the verdict or judgment. The existence of such error and the saving of the question and presentation of it to the reviewing court involves such a variety of subjects that it is impossible to bring under a heading "grounds for reversal" more than a misleading fraction of the matter which might answer to it. If an error was concededly committed and the question is whether it was harmless or prejudicial, the matter is treated in Harmless Error. If it is contended that there was error because incompetent or irrelevant evidence was introduced, the question then becomes one of the admissibility of evidence, and is treated in Evidence or in those portions of the specific topics which treat of the relevancy of evidence, e. g., Contracts, X; Damages, XI; etc. And so if the propriety of an instruction is questioned, the matter should be sought for in Instructions or in the portion of the specific topic treating of instructions. General matters of trial practice are treated in Argument of Counsel; Trial; Examination of Witnesses; Verdicts and Findings. Matters of pleading are treated in Equity, VII; Pleading.

Propriety of remand to trial court or of final judgment above, see generally post XIII, B.

Character of judgment on case made, see post § 517.

Form of judgment on abatement or for want of jurisdiction, see post § 492.

Dismissal or affirmance without consideration of the cause, see post §§ 477-481.

Affirmance on condition of security, correction or reduction of recovery, see post § 483-485.

¶ 2124. Where all the facts and documents that could have been relied on below are before the appellate court, the want of a notice of hearing below will not be ground for reversal; it will only raise a question which may be adjusted by award of costs.—Munch v. Shabel, 37 Mich. 166.

¶ 2125. Although no argument is made in appellee's brief to support rulings at the trial admitting testimony, charge by the court, or the theory upon which the issue of fact was submitted to the jury, the judgment must be sustained if no error occurred at the trial. —International Text-Book Co. v. Marvin, 166 Mich. 660.

§ 477. Dismissal or other judgment without review.

The cause on appeal or error may be disposed of by the Supreme Court on motion pending review by a dismissal or by affirmance for want of sufficient steps to bring it properly before the reviewing court, or for violation of the practice or rules thereof. Where some obstacle has arisen to a proper review there may be a reversal and remand for new trial without review on the merits. All such disposals of the cause before final hearing and submission without any review or without coming to a hearing for review are treated ante X.

Disposal of cause for want of jurisdiction without consideration of other questions, see ante § 262.

Dismissals in chancery generally, see Equity, X.

§ 478. ——Want of proper record or procedure.

See also ante § 476.

¶ 2126. The court will not disturb a decree dismissing a bill where documents on which the rights of the parties depend are not set out in the record or proofs.—McCulloch v. Barnebee, 43 Mich. 622.

¶ 2127. The court refused to affirm a judgment merely because the bill of exceptions failed to include the assignments of error, as required by a recently amended rule (Former Sup. Ct. Rule 12), where error was manifest, and nothing would be gained by remanding the record for correction at appellant's expense.—Conely v. Dudley, 111 Mich. 122.

§ 479. Affirmance for want of parties.

Remand for revivors, see post § 515.

¶ 2128. Where complainants' appeal from a decree dismissing their bill is dismissed on motion as to a necessary defendant for want of notice of settlement of case, etc., such dismissal affirms the decree below as to him, and necessitates a dismissal on the hearing of the bill as to the remanding defendants for want of proper parties.—Banks v. African M. E. Church, 81 Mich. 371.

§ 480. Affirmance for want of reviewable question.

Affirmance of correct result where erroneous reasons are assigned below, see Harmless Error.

¶ 2129. A judgment will not be reversed for an error not legitimately before this court.—Achey v. Hull, 7 Mich. 423.

¶ 2130. If no error appears in the record of a case brought into this court by writ of error without exceptions, the judgment below will be affirmed.—Stendell v. Noak, 19 Mich. 391.

¶ 2131. Judgment is affirmed where no question is presented which the court can consider.—Irwin v. Schlief, 48 Mich. 237.

¶ 2132. Where the Supreme Court is unable to discover any ruling or any instruction by the trial judge that is clearly erroneous, or any failure to submit the issues fairly to the jury, the judgment will be affirmed with costs.—Forsyth v. Prentis, 48 Mich. 268.

¶ 2135. Where the evidence to support the findings of fact is ample, and where no claim is made that such findings do not support the conclusion of law, the judgment is affirmed.—Gould v. Doty, 104 Mich. 261.

¶ 2137. The reviewing court will not disturb a judgment where it cannot say that the findings of the trial court were not supported by the evidence and where such findings of facts support the judgment rendered.—Holcomb v. Sayers, 173 Mich. 238.

¶ 2138. On case made after judgment, the judgment being correct upon the facts, was affirmed, there being no exceptions of law.—Boullion v. Litchfield, 14 Mich. 299.

§ 481. Affirmance for want of substantial grievance or damages.

¶ 2140. Where defendant concedes the amount that the verdict should be in case one is recovered by plaintiff, he cannot urge on appeal that since he offered no proof of damages a verdict could have been directed in plaintiff's favor for nominal damages only, and for that reason a judgment for defendant should not be reversed.—International Text-Book Co. v. Marvin, 166 Mich. 660.

§ 482. Affirmance on law of the case.

¶ 2141. Where a case has been retried in accordance with the directions given on error, the judgment so obtained will be affirmed on a second writ of error.—Burtraw v. Clark, 107 Mich. 333.

¶ 2142. Where, after a careful review of the assignments of error in relation to the admission of evidence and to the instructions, it appeared that the case was fairly tried and submitted to the jury in accordance with the rules laid down in a former opinion of the Supreme Court in the same case, the judgment was affirmed.—City Bank v. Dill, 102 Mich. 305.

¶ 2143. A judgment will not be reversed upon a second writ of error for alleged error in giving or refusing instructions, where the testimony was the same upon both trials, and the cause was submitted to the jury in accordance with the opinion on the former writ of error.—Burgess v. Isherwood, 111 Mich. 220.

§ 483. Affirmance on conditions.

¶ 2144. Where the plaintiff, in an action against a township for personal injuries received through the negligence of the township in not keeping a bridge in repair, secured a judgment in the circuit court, which was reversed by the Supreme Court, an order for a new trial was granted only on condition that the township be secured for the expense of further defending the action, in case of another adverse judgment, by a bond for $500.—Abernathy v. Township of Van Buren, How. N. P. 148.

§ 484. ——Consent to correction.

Correction of judgment by remission of part, see also post § 485.

¶ 2145. A judgment in ejectment, under Comp. L. 1897, § 10973, in which the verdict was defective for the reason that the jury failed to state particularly the description of the parcel claimed by each defendant, was affirmed on condition that plaintiff consent to a correction of the verdict and judgment in that regard.—Townsend v. Kreigh, 133 Mich. 243.

§ 485. ——Remission of excessive part of recovery.

Reduction and affirmance, see post § 524.
Correction on record without reversal, see post § 526.
Remission pending error or appeal as waiver of right to complain, see ante § 228.
Remission as curing error, see Harmless Error.
Remission to avoid new trial, see New Trial.

¶ 2146. A judgment will be affirmed where the amount thereof is excessive, upon remission of the excess.—Cox v. Holkeboer, 200 Mich. 86.

¶ 2147a. Where, in second suit for the negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate, plaintiff's counsel in his argument states that the killing was so criminally negligent as to amount to murder, and such statement is unwarranted by the evidence, the Supreme Court attributing an excessive verdict to such argument and there being no other error, affirmed the judgment on condition of reduction to a reasonable award.—McDonnell v. Central Drug Co., 170 Mich. 291.

¶ 2148. Where, in an action to recover the balance of $145 due on a contract, the defendant filed a counter claim for $129.80, and there was evidence to sustain the allowance of defendant's claim in full, and the jury returned a verdict for $2.14 for defendant, held that any error of the court in requiring a remittitur of $20 by subtracting the sum of $125 from $145 and of the jury in returning a verdict for the defendant, the latter not having appealed, did not, under Pub. Acts 1915, No. 89, and Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, Chap. L, § 28, result in a miscarriage of justice except as to the excess sum allowed defendant and that the case should be affirmed on condition that defendant file a remittitur of the $2.14.—Sparks v. Lord, 198 Mich. 415.

¶ 2150. Where in a suit on a policy of insurance plaintiff recovers more than he is entitled to by law under the terms of the policy, the upper court, where the proper amount due plaintiff is clearly ascertained, may enter an order requiring plaintiff either to remit the excess or to submit to a new trial.—Allen v. Patrons' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Michigan, Ltd., 165 Mich. 18.

¶ 2151. Where a verdict was directed by the court, in an action for a penalty, for the maximum sum allowed by statute, whereas the amount was for the jury to determine within such limit, plaintiff, being entitled under the proofs to a verdict for at least six cents, was allowed to remit all above six cents, and the judgment, so modified, was affirmed.—Hines v. Darling, 99 Mich. 47.

¶ 2153. Where the extent to which a verdict has been increased by interest erroneously included therein is ascertainable by computation, plaintiff will be allowed to remit such excess, and the judgment, thus modified, will be affirmed.—Bresnahan v. Nugent, 97 Mich. 359.

§ 486. Affirmance or reversal in whole or in part.

Remand leaving questions open or with directions, see post §§ 512-516.
Construction of cost award on cross appeals, see also post ¶ 2402.
Construction as to joint or several liability for costs adjudged on affirmance as to one party, see post ¶ 2407.
Affirmance of decree of divorce as to both parties, where reversal as to one is impossible for want of appeal, see also Divorce, VII.

¶ 2155. Where a judgment is severable, it may be reversed in part and affirmed in part; but where it is an entirety against several parties, whether in tort or assumpsit, if reversed as to one it must be as to all.—Powers v. Irish, 23 Mich. 429; Matteson v. Nathanson, 38 Mich. 377.

¶ 2156. Where two causes of action for separate injuries are joined in one declaration and one is erroneously submitted to the jury, the error requires a reversal of the entire case.—Charters v. Industrial Works, 179 Mich. 1.

¶ 2157. Where there was no dispute as to the facts, and the judgment was correct except as to the amount of damages, it was affirmed to the proper amount with costs of the circuit to the plaintiff below, and reversed as to the excess with costs of the Supreme Court to the plaintiff in error.—Johnston v. Whittemore, 27 Mich. 463.

¶ 2158. Where a judgment is rendered in trespass against joint defendants and only one brings error, it may be set aside as to the plaintiff in error, when it would have been sustained as to the other defendant.—Sutherland v. Ingalls, 63 Mich. 620.

¶ 2162. On a bill by a creditor of a corporation to cancel two mortgages, one of which was given by the corporation to a stockholder and assigned to another person, and the other to such other person as security for the payment of a bond given as guaranty for the payment of other indebtedness to a bank, held that that part of the decree which found the amount due to such holder of the mortgages because of a payment on the bond should be affirmed; the other being reversed because he had notice of equities.—Osborn v. Detroit Kraut Co., 193 Mich. 664.

¶ 2163. If, in a suit brought to set aside as fraudulent a chattel mortgage executed by an insolvent debtor in anticipation of an assignment of his property for the benefit of creditors, the assignor could, because of the irregularity of an appointment of a receiver at chambers, ignore subsequent court orders adjudging that he had in his possession certain goods which passed by the assignment, and which should have been delivered either to the assignee or to the receiver, in so far as they required him to deliver said goods to the receiver; yet, so far as the action of the court went in determining the fact of the possession of the goods by the assignor, the orders were valid, and should be sustained on appeal, if the evidence warranted the conclusion of the circuit judge upon the question of fact.—Burnham v. Dillon, 100 Mich. 359, on rehearing of 100 Mich. 352.

§ 487. Opinion or discussion of questions.

Rendition and filing of decision, see Jud. Act. Chap. I, § 30; Comp. L. 1915, § 12035.

¶ 2164. It has been the practice of the Supreme Court not to discuss in the opinion every claim made by counsel, but it is intended to discuss every question that may turn the case one way or the other or which may be of interest to the profession.—Detroit National Bank v. Blodgett, 115 Mich. 160.

¶ 2165. In the absence of error the court will not discuss points raised unless such discussion would be of benefit to the profession in the trial of future cases.—Pichler v. DeHate, 125 Mich. 247.

¶ 2166. The Supreme Court will omit discussion of points not changing the decision and of little value to the profession.—Waterbury v. O'Brien, 125 Mich. 534.

¶ 2167. A decree granting specific performance of a contract and declaring a deed void, the question being one of fact and involving no legal principle or question of interest or benefit to the profession, affirmed without discussion.—Seventh Day Church of God v. Conference of Church of God, 130 Mich. 367.

§ 488. ——Statement of facts and syllabi.

¶ 2170. The Supreme Court will make no statement of fact where appellant, in disregard of Sup. Ct. Rule 40, has made none in his brief.—Cronenwett v. United States Health & Acc. Ins. Co., 140 Mich. 522.

¶ 2170a. The preparation of headnotes for the opinions is a constitutional duty of the reporter of the Supreme Court, and cannot be legislatively imposed on the judges thereof. See Letter From the Judges to the Governor (In re Headnotes), 43 Mich. 641.

§ 489. Findings of fact.

Review of omission or want of specific findings, see ante §§ 455, 456.
Conclusiveness and effect of findings below, see ante §§ 443-449.

¶ 2171. The Supreme Court does not make findings of fact.—Edgerly v. Ladies of Modern Maccabees, 175 Mich. 28.

¶ 2172. The Supreme Court cannot find the facts in a case tried by the court without a jury; but those not supported by the evidence may be rejected.—Wilson v. Sauble, 181 Mich. 406.

§ 490. Additional, amended or supplementary findings.

¶ 2174. The Supreme Court cannot change a finding of fact.—Kane v. Stowe, 50 Mich. 317.

¶ 2177. Judgment on a finding against the plaintiff was reversed on error and judgment entered for the plaintiff with costs of both courts; but as no damages had been found, only nominal damages were held recoverable. —Toll v. Wright, 37 Mich. 93.

§ 492. Judgment on abatement or for want of jurisdiction.

¶ 2180. A judgment on a treasurer's bond sued originally in justice's court was reversed on error because not within the jurisdiction of such court, but without prejudice to the bringing of another action in the proper forum.—Township of Richland v. Cliff, 131 Mich. 628.

¶ 2181. Plaintiff recovered a judgment against the warden of a reformatory for breach of a convict labor contract. Defendant appealed same by writ of error. Meanwhile the legislature passed Act. No. 219, Sess. Laws 1911, repealing Comp. Laws 1897, § 2091, which latter act authorized said suit. The attorney general moved before the Supreme Court to arrest further proceedings under said judgment and to dismiss said cause of action on the ground that said repeal deprived the Supreme Court of jurisdiction. Held, the Supreme Court could go no further than to arrest all further proceedings and dismiss the writ of error; it could not consistently dismiss said case because deprived of jurisdiction and at the same time exercise jurisdiction in passing upon the force of the judgment previously rendered in the same case in the trial court.—McDowell v. Warden of Michigan Reformatory at Ionia, 169 Mich. 332.

¶ 2184. An order will not be disturbed on appeal unless it satisfactorily appears that correction is required.—Haines v. Haines, 35 Mich. 138.

¶ 2185. A decree should not be reversed unless the appellate court is satisfied that it is wrong.—Sager v. Tupper, 42 Mich. 605.

§ 494. Decree without prejudice to other proceedings.

Where jurisdiction is lacking, see also ante ¶ 2180.
Amendment to dispose of cause without prejudice, see post ¶ 2323.

¶ 2186. The Supreme Court in dismissing a bill will do so without prejudice to further proceedings on the part of the complainant not inconsistent with its decision, where the legal questions presented had not theretofore been passed upon and there was much weighty authority in favor of complainant's contention which had been adopted by the circuit court in determining the law.—Nester v. Sullivan, 147 Mich. 493.

¶ 2187. A decree dismissing a tax title owner's suit to quiet title as against the owner who claimed that he was prevented from paying by the collector's misinformation, though reversible at complainant's instance because of the error of the trial court in allowing a collateral attack on the tax decree, will be reversed with leave to defendants to institute proceedings under the statute within a stated time, they having shown equity and having made their claims by collateral attack while that was not yet settled by the decisions of the Supreme Court.—Kneeland v. Hyman, 118 Mich. 56.

§ 495. Decree as to nonappealing parties.

¶ 2190. Relief cannot be given on review to a party who does not complain of a judgment against him.—Ford v. Detroit Dry Dock Co., 50 Mich. 358.

¶ 2193. A decree of the lower chancery court will not be modified in complainant's favor on an appeal by defendant where complainant does not appeal.—Herpel v. Herpel, 162 Mich. 606.

§ 496. Retention of all or part of cause.

Reserving questions, see post § 497.

¶ 2194. A bill by private individuals to restrain a railroad company from removing its tracks from the located line to the detriment of the community and themselves, they having contributed to a bonus to obtain such location, will not be retained by treating it as if the attorney general was a party plaintiff, and a rehearing allowed after decision on appeal adverse to such bill because he was not a party; where the record shows nothing indicative of his ever having been consulted about filing the bill and where nothing since hearing and before motion for rehearing has been done to cause him to intervene.—Henry v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 116 Mich. 314.

¶ 2195. On affirmance of a decree for a stockholder canceling stock sold by defendant corporation in fraud of his rights, a cross-bill by it for an accounting of credits taken on the corporate books for patents turned in by plaintiff should be retained as to that item, where it appears by a preponderance that the patents had already gone in against his original stock subscription.—Essex v. Essex, 141 Mich. 200.

§ 497. Reservation of questions.

Remand to lower court for further determination or with questions left open, see post §§ 512-516.

Retaining bill or part thereof, see ante § 496.

Leaving adjustment of interest to judgment below, see also post ¶ 2316.

Holding motion under advisement for inquiry of the facts below, see ante § 169, ¶ 724.

Construction of questions on retrial, see post § 563.

¶ 2196. Where, on a bill to redeem, redemption is allowed, and the case referred for an accounting with leave to take further testimony, the decree may be affirmed without a full examination of the transactions involved, until a later stage of the case, if it is clearly apparent from the record that complainant was entitled to the particular relief asked for.—Curtiss v. Sheldon, 47 Mich. 262.

¶ 2197. In a suit by an assignee to foreclose several mortgages and land contracts where some contracts have been mutually rescinded and one defendant, owner of some of the mortgaged premises, claims to be entitled to have the other mortgages and contracts first enforced, the case was remanded for the taking of further evidence as to the financial responsibility of the vendees and the consequent loss of security by the rescission of the contracts, before rendering decision on appeal.—Holliday v. Snow, 129 Mich. 494.

§ 498. Transfer from equity to law or law to equity.

¶ 2198. Where a case is improperly brought in equity instead of at law and decided by the trial court before the passage of Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, Chap. XI, § 2, authorizing the transfer of cases to the proper side by the trial court when improperly brought in equity or at law, and such law is in effect at the time of the hearing before the Supreme Court, the bill will not be dismissed, but will be transferred to the trial court for further proceedings.—Flint v. Le Heup, 199 Mich. 41.

§ 499. Effect of appellate judgment or decree.

Of rehearing or of motion for it, see post § 549.

Construction of appellate judgment and opinion to ascertain law of the case, see ante XII. G, post XV.

Reversal opening case as to other parties, see post § 558.

Reversal for want of jurisdiction without prejudice to proper action, see ante ¶ 2180.

Effect of reversal on rights traced through judgment or decree, see generally Judgments, VII; and particularly topics treating of the rights claimed or title acquired, e. g., Executions, XIII; Judicial Sales; Foreclosure of Mortgages, IV, V; Chattel Mortgages, VII.

Implied contract to refund or reimburse, see Implied Contracts.

¶ 2199. On reversing a decision made under a state of the statutory law since changed by amendment of the procedural law, which amendment was designed to operate prospectively, the reversal will operate as of the time when the order under review was made.—In re Estate of Sanborn, 96 Mich. 606.

¶ 2200. Plaintiff sued four defendants. Against two who did not appear default was entered, and on trial before jury, judgment was rendered against all four defendants. The two defendants who appeared removed the case to the Supreme Court where the judgment was reversed. A remittitur was filed and a new trial had, with judgment for defendants, which was affirmed by the Supreme Court. Held, that the ultimate result of the issue was, as to those who did not appeal as well as to those who did appeal, no cause of action.—Hoeft v. Koch, 171 Mich. 564.

B. FINAL JUDGMENT OR REMAND.

Particular circumstances and reasons for remand or final judgment, see generally post §§ 501-519.

Modification with final judgment as modified, see post XIII, C.

Remand with directions or leaving questions open, see post §§ 512-516.

Duty to try cause de novo on appeal, see ante XII, H.

¶ 2201. A new trial cannot be granted on reversal where all action below is set aside so that no issue of fact is left to be tried.—Smith v. Lloyd's Estate, 76 Mich. 619.

¶ 2202. In an action of garnishment where the questions involved were as to the validity of conveyances made by a debtor and alleged to be fraudulent because they hindered and delayed creditors, where no questions of fact are involved the court on reversing a judgment may enter the proper judgment without sending the case back for a new trial.—Wood v. Eldredge, 147 Mich. 554.

¶ 2203. In an action by executors upon promissory notes belonging to a testatrix's estate, the circuit judge found that the notes sued upon were executed by defendant, and delivered to the payee; that testatrix, at the time of her death, was the owner of the notes, and entitled to recover thereon; and that there was due on the notes the face amount thereof, with interest from their date at a stated rate. Defendant relied solely upon the alleged want of jurisdiction in the probate court to probate the will. Held, that if defendant had other grounds of defense which he considered fatal, he should have requested the court so to find, so that the entire controversy might have been settled upon this writ of error; and new trial will not be given, since he chose to rely upon the one point, but for which judgment would have been rendered by the court below for plaintiffs, and that judgment in their favor should be entered in the Supreme Court.—Rice v. Hosking, 105 Mich. 308.

¶ 2204. Where defendant in error has remitted the only erroneously included items in order to purge the judgment and verdict of error assigned and sustained, a case will not be remanded for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is still excessive—especially where it is uncertain from the record and the briefs of plaintiff in error that it is so.—Sloman v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co., 112 Mich. 258.

¶ 2205. Though an amendment should have been allowed below, yet where no recovery can be had as the declaration stands, a new trial must be awarded.—Hamilton v. Powers, 80 Mich. 313.

¶ 2206. Upon affirmance of a decree dismissing a bill for the reformation of a contract so as to reduce the amount thereof and to enjoin an action at law for recovery on the contract, the Supreme Court will not enter a decree for the amount due on the contract, the pleadings not being framed to meet such case.—Andrus v. Scudder, 120 Mich. 502.

¶ 2207. On reversing a judgment on verdict directed for plaintiff on a sick benefit policy, because it appeared that he was not "necessarily, entirely and continuously confined to the house" during the period sued for, the case was sent back for a new trial where the court could not say that he was entitled to recover for none of the time.—Cooper v. Phoenix Accident & Sick Ben. Ass'n, 141 Mich. 478.

¶ 2208. Where it appears from an examination of the record in an action for breach of a written contract for the sale and installation of machinery by a foreign corporation not licensed to do business within the state, which contract defendant claims is void because such act of installation constitutes intrastate commerce, that there is no evidence as to the complex character of the work so as to show that the necessity of the work of installation by the seller is an essential requisite to the sale, and defendant has failed to set forth the facts upon which its defense is based in a notice attached to its plea, a judgment for plaintiff should be reversed and the case remanded for a new trial.—Power Specialty Co. v. Michigan Power Co., 190 Mich. 699.

¶ 2209. A decree of a trial court vacating a tax decree for the sale of land, in a proceeding for a writ of assistance, will be vacated, and the case remanded, the record showing that the petitioners were not allowed to offer evidence in support of their petition, as the record is insufficient.—Robert v. Loxley, 121 Mich. 63.

§ 502. Material evidence excluded.

¶ 2210. Where a finding of facts was not such as it would have been if certain evidence had not been erroneously rejected, the Supreme Court did not give final judgment on it, but ordered a new trial.—Starkweather v. Martin, 28 Mich. 471.

§ 503. Damages or amount not ascertained.

¶ 2211. The Supreme Court cannot assess the damages in law cases.—Johnson v. Ballou, 28 Mich. 379; Baylis v. Cronkite, 39 Mich. 413; Wiley v. Lovely, 46 Mich. 83; Carmichael v. Northwestern Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 51 Mich. 494.

¶ 2212. This court cannot in a case at law proceed to ascertain and assess the damages involved, no matter how well established may be their measure.—Wiley v. Lovely, 46 Mich. 83.

¶ 2214. Where a judgment was made to cover interest and there were no data to show how much was due, the finding was treated on error as amounting to a mistrial.—Bell v. Ardis, 38 Mich. 609.

§ 504. Want of substantial damages or grievance.

¶ 2215. A case will not be remanded where the only error is the failure to award nominal damages, and where a judgment for such damages would not carry costs.—Haven v. Beidler Mfg. Co., 40 Mich. 287.

¶ 2216. New trial will not be granted unless the protection of substantial rights requires it, if the case is such that on new trial such damages only as are nominal and will not carry costs can be recovered.—Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 56 Mich. 638.

¶ 2217. Where a man suffered serious injury as a remote consequence of being carried by his railway station in the night, the only direct injury being that he was obliged to walk an extra hundred rods, he was still allowed a new trial on reversal of a verdict for the remote injury, as it could not be said that damages for the direct injury would not carry costs.—Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 56 Mich. 638.

§ 505. Want of necessary findings.

Damages not ascertainable, see ante § 503.

¶ 2218. Where the facts are not embodied in a finding, and the Supreme Court cannot therefore enter final judgment on reversal, a new trial is ordered.—Flint & P. M. Ry. Co. v. Weir, 37 Mich. 111.

¶ 2219. Final judgment cannot be given by the reviewing court on findings that do not cover the whole case.—Briggs v. Brushaber, 43 Mich. 330.

¶ 2220. Judgment cannot be entered for the appellant upon reversal of a case not based upon findings or a verdict.—Schmid v. Village of Frankfort, 134 Mich. 619.

¶ 2221. Where a material question of fact was not submitted to the jury, but doubtless would have been had the judge been requested so to do, the Supreme Court, on reversing a judgment for plaintiff as not sustained on other grounds, will grant a new trial.—Bryan v. Straus Bros. & Co., 157 Mich. 49.

¶ 2222. Where, in answer to specific requests, only a part of the facts necessary to support the judgment are found, the case is not in shape for review, but is sent back to be retried, the proceedings being treated as a mistrial.—Adams v. Champion, 31 Mich. 233.

¶ 2223. Where a finding substantially decided that a claim was established, but left it doubtful whether or not it had been satisfied, it was held there had been a mistrial, and the case was remanded to be tried over.—Danaher v. Ward's Estate, 40 Mich. 300.

¶ 2224. Where the finding of facts is incomplete and insufficient, and where amended findings which should be made are denied, a new trial will be granted.—Sheldon Axle Co. v. Scofield, 85 Mich. 177.

¶ 2225. Final judgment for plaintiff cannot be entered on reversal of a judgment for defendant as against the weight of evidence, if there are no special findings of fact to support such a final judgment.—County of Montgomery v. Putnam, 135 Mich. 111.

¶ 2226. Where a case is tried without a jury and comes up without a finding of facts and is reversed upon a point analogous to a request to charge, a new trial must be ordered.—Biddle v. Wendell, 37 Mich. 452.

§ 506. ——Concession or waiver of findings.

¶ 2227. In a case tried without a jury questions of fact were submitted to the judge and answered by him, and he made findings on some questions of law, and exceptions were taken to findings of both classes. But no finding of facts was asked or made. Held, that the Supreme Court could not review the case, even upon a record containing the whole testimony, and that as both parties acquiesced in the irregular practice the case would be treated as a mistrial.—Wildey v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Van Buren County, 49 Mich. 264.

¶ 2228. In a case tried by a judge without a jury certain specific speculative questions were submitted to him and exceptions taken to his answers. But no special finding was asked for or made. Counsel stipulated to dispense with formal proof of the items contained in their respective bills of particulars, but reserved their rights and objections in other respects, and on error asked the Supreme Court to review the answers made by the trial judge to the questions submitted, and thereon adjudicate the whole case. Held, that such practice was anomalous and unauthorized, and the case was treated as a mistrial.—Kinney v. Robison, 49 Mich. 247.

§ 507. Uncertain or ambiguous verdict or findings.

¶ 2230. In an action of trover for timber cut on two different sections of land, the title to which was so involved as to make a case of two distinct heads, the jury, in answer to special questions, found the value of the logs cut on the respective sections. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment on one branch of case, and held that there was no error on the other branch, but nevertheless declined to enter final judgment as to the logs covered thereby, as it did not appear how the jury had made up the amount of their verdict, and what they had included or rejected in finding it.—Johnson v. Ballou, 28 Mich. 379.

¶ 2231. New trial ordered on reversing a judgment rendered on a referee's report so defective that the court could not understand the merits.—Carroll v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 19 Mich. 94.

¶ 2232. New trial is not granted on reversal if the lower court has no jurisdiction. Bush v. Meacham, 53 Mich. 574.

¶ 2233. Where plaintiff cannot recover under his declaration, and jurisdiction by attachment of a nonresident was obtained by an abuse of the process of the court a new trial will not be ordered on reversing judgment for plaintiff.—Webb v. Leominster Shirt Co., 101 Mich. 136.

§ 509. Cause of action barred, disproved or nonexistent.

No cause pleaded, see post § 511.
Reversal on weight or insufficiency of evidence, see also ante §§ 452-454.

§ 510. New trial useless or hopeless.

¶ 2240. Where a judgment for plaintiff is reversed because his case lacks a condition precedent to recovery, a new trial will not be ordered if it is clear that a different case cannot be made.—Wadhams v. Western Assur. Co., 117 Mich. 514.

§ 511. ——No cause of action stated.

Cause of action disproved or nonexistent, see ante § 509.

¶ 2241. No new trial will be awarded by the Supreme Court in reversing a judgment against plaintiff, where the declaration states no cause of action.—Delashman v. Berry, 21 Mich. 516.

¶ 2242. A new trial is not granted on reversal where the count of the declaration on which the verdict rests presents no cause of action, even though the plaintiff might have recovered on some other count.—Dayton v. Fargo, 45 Mich. 153.

¶ 2245. Where plaintiff's claim is bad on its face no new trial is allowed when a judgment in his favor is reversed.—In re Hiscock's Estate, 79 Mich. 536.

¶ 2246. Where no recovery can be had under the bill of particulars, a new trial is not granted on reversal.—Sheldon v. Rounds, 40 Mich. 425.

§ 512. Remand leaving questions for trial court.

With directions for further action, see post §§ 513-516.

Reserving questions by appellate decree, see ante § 497.

Passing questions because unnecessary or likely to be eliminated on retrial, see ante §§ 261-266.

¶ 2247. Where a bill of complaint was dismissed, without the taking of proofs, under a misapprehension of the rights of the parties, and the property in controversy was already in the hands of a receiver, and all charges of fraud were denied by the answer, the Supreme Court upon reversing and remanding the cause, refused to pass upon the matter of the appointment of a new receiver, but left the same for determination by the lower court.—Albion Malleable Iron Works v. First Nat. Bank, 116 Mich. 218.

¶ 2248. The question of costs in appeal cases is largely in the discretion of the court, but on reversal of an action for official misconduct of a justice of the peace, where the judgment in favor of the plaintiff may be largely increased on a new trial, the question is not of much consequence, and the case will be remanded for a new trial, leaving it for the circuit to decide on retrial what should be allowed by way of damages for costs expended in rectifying the wrong done.—Cagney v. Wattles, 121 Mich. 469.

Correction without reversal, see post §§ 526, 527.

Reserving questions in appellate decree, see ante § 497.

Delay in seeking rehearing and remand for further proof or review, see post ¶ 2351.

Grounds for rehearing and remand for bill of review, see post ¶ 2340.

Denial of remand to hear motions below as penalty for delay, see also ante ¶ 618.

¶ 2249. The proofs will not be opened in the appellate court; but where a proper case is made out for a rehearing upon new evidence the cause will be remanded to the court below with proper directions for a rehearing there.—Adams v. Field, 25 Mich. 16.

¶ 2250. When a case of accounting is brought to the Supreme Court without any regular accounting having taken place below the court will refuse to hear it, and will remand it for proper proceedings.—Barnebee v. Beckley, 43 Mich. 618.

¶ 2251. Where a cause was heard on pleadings and stipulations which did not set out in terms documents necessary to be considered, the decree was vacated and the cause remanded for such further proceedings as should remedy the deficiencies.—Wilkins v. City of Detroit, 46 Mich. 120.

¶ 2252. Complainant, as remainderman, secured a decree on her bill in the lower court enjoining the sale of land to pay a drain tax. The tax was in form levied on the north sixty acres of the quarter section in question, but had by mistake been returned to the auditor general as levied upon the entire quarter section. After the appeal, the defendant auditor general produced evidence to show that the board of county supervisors had reassessed the tax and that the life tenant had paid it. Held, the case should be remanded to the lower court to have this question of fact determined.—Klotz v. Chatfield, 163 Mich. 86.

¶ 2256. Where, in an action to set aside tax deeds because taken by defendant in his own name while in possession under an agreement with the agent of the owner, to pay the taxes for him, the connection of the agent with the owner was not, through some oversight, established by the evidence, the case was remanded with leave to complainant to supply the missing proof.—Day v. Davey, 132 Mich. 173.

¶ 2257. Where, on an appeal in a suit brought to declare a deed absolute in form to be a mortgage, it appears that, while the complainant has established her claim, the record is not sufficiently full to justify the entry of a decree without an accounting as to the amount due the grantee, the case will be remanded for such an accounting.—McArthur v. Robinson, 104 Mich. 540.

¶ 2258. In a suit by the administrator and heirs of an insane decedent against the wife and children of a deceased guardian of decedent to marshal the assets of the estate and to bring such assets into the probate court for distribution according to law, where the bill charged fraud by the guardian in having decedent declared insane, in failing to keep books of account, in failing to file an inventory or any account in the probate court, in procuring quitclaim deeds of the interests of children of the ward during her lifetime and deeding such property to his wife and children, and defendants by cross-bill claimed the benefit of the acts of the guardian and ownership of all the property, including funds in the hands of the administrator, held that in view of the complexity of the questions and inadequacy of the pleadings the case should be heard on its merits in the lower court, and that demurrers to the bill and cross-bill should be overruled and the case remanded with directions to file proper pleadings to bring the case to an issue.—Elwell v. Pierce, 200 Mich. 479.

§ 514. ——Direction to limit issues.

§ 515. Remand for revivor or amendment.

Amendment as to parties on appeal, see post § 523.

Amendment on entering final judgment, see post § 522.

Amendment of appellate judgment to allow remand for amendment below, see post § 534, ¶ 2318.

Remission of record for amendment or further action without review, see ante §§ 118, 143.

Remand on appeal from order made on motion to dismiss bill, see Jud. Act, Chap. L, § 18; Comp. L. 1915, § 13753.

¶ 2260. Where plaintiff died after a referee had found in his favor, and judgment was rendered on the finding without reviving the cause, the Supreme Court, on affirming the judgment remanded it for revivor.—Botsford v. Sweet, 49 Mich. 120.

¶ 2261. On reversing a decree for want of a necessary party, the Supreme Court granted leave to amend the bill, and remitted the cause for further proceedings.—Palmer v. Rich, 12 Mich. 414; Folkerts v. Power, 42 Mich. 283.

¶ 2262. Where a bill in equity, filed by the holder of mortgages supposed to be void, claimed an equitable lien in the nature of a mortgage, and the record showed that the parties had gone fully into their equities, that the proofs were all in, that there was no conflict on the facts constituting the complainant's case, and that the case that would have been made on a foreclosure bill was fully before the court, the record was remanded by the appellate court, with leave to so amend the bill as to pray a foreclosure of the mortgages in case they were adjudged valid.—Church v. Holcomb, 45 Mich. 29.

¶ 2263. Where complainant had stated a case not entitling him to relief, but on cross-bill an issue had been made which allowed the whole equities of the parties to be shown, and it appeared from the evidence that the complainant should have relief, the Supreme Court, on appeal, instead of dismissing the bill, ordered the case remanded, with leave to complainant to amend without prejudice to the proofs taken.—Morgan v. Palmer, 13 Mich. 367.

¶ 2266. A contention that a deed obtained on a tax sale is invalid because the grantees did not pay taxes then a lien on the property, cannot be considered when made for the first time on appeal; but leave will be granted to the petitioner objecting to the validity of the tax deed under such circumstances, to have the case remanded with leave to file an amended petition, and a rehearing, upon the payment of costs.—Hall v. Mann, 118 Mich. 201.

§ 516. Remand with directions for judgment and execution.

Correction on record without reversal, see post § 526.
Construction of directions, see post § 563.
Remand of ejectment cause for writ of possession, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXIX, § 55; Comp. L. 1915, § 13222.

¶ 2267. The prohibition of the sale of liquor within a certain district in Ann Arbor by Local Acts 1903, No. 543, passed after the suit was brought to the Supreme Court, justifies the remanding of a case to the lower court to vacate an order granting mandamus to compel the common council to approve a liquor bond for that district.—Rose v. Common Council of Ann Arbor, 134 Mich. 102.

¶ 2268. Where in an appeal on stipulated facts a judgment for defendant is reversed, and only a question of law is involved, the Supreme Court will order no new trial, but will on plaintiff's motion order the lower court to enter judgment for plaintiff.—Brown & Brown Coal Co. v. Antezak, 164 Mich. 110.

¶ 2269. Where a bill to enjoin an ejectment suit and to quiet title is taken as confessed against three of the defendants and is dismissed by the Supreme Court as to the rest, a decree will be entered by the Supreme Court sending the cause back to enable the complainant to have a decree entered by the trial court against said three defendants.—Vincent v. Evans, 165 Mich. 695.

Modification and affirmance, see post § 524.

¶ 2270. On case made after judgment for review upon the facts, the Supreme Court cannot send the case back for a new trial.—Barman v. Carhartt, 10 Mich. 338.

§ 518. On case submitted on agreed facts.

¶ 2272. When a case has been submitted below on an agreed state of facts, a new trial will not be granted upon a reversal of judgment.—Harrington v. Hilliard, 27 Mich. 271.

§ 519. On appeal from judgment on arbitration.

¶ 2273. Where land matters not subject to arbitration were so mixed up with the other matters submitted that no settlement would be perfect without passing upon the question of their ownership, and the arbitrators were no longer impartial, the Supreme Court, upon setting aside a judgment based upon the award, declined to remand the case for further action.—Gallagher v. Kern, 31 Mich. 138.

C. MODIFICATION OR CORRECTION OF JUDGMENT.

§ 520. In general; affecting nonappellants.

Affirmance on condition of correction or reduction in amount, see ante §§ 484, 485.
Affirmance in part and reversal in part, see ante § 486.
Allowing offsets without changing decree, see post § 521.
Right to urge errors affecting nonappellant, see ante §§ 219-222.
Amendment of or relief from appellate judgment, see post XIII, F.

¶ 2274. A decree cannot be modified, or its amount increased, to appellant's prejudice, in favor of a party who has not appealed.—McCabe v. Farnsworth, 27 Mich. 52; Proctor v. Robinson, 35 Mich. 284; Brown v. Bronson, 35 Mich. 415; Match v. Hunt, 38 Mich. 1; Heath v. Waters, 40 Mich. 457; Bundy v. Youmans, 44 Mich. 376; Hoff v. Hoff, 48 Mich. 281; Hopkins Mfg. Co. v. Ruggles, 51 Mich. 474; Chadwick v. Chadwick, 59 Mich. 87.

¶ 2275. A decree in foreclosure cannot be changed in favor of the defendants when they have not appealed.—Foster v. Malone, 45 Mich. 255.

¶ 2276. Relief beyond that afforded by the decree below cannot be granted to a nonappellant.—Harrington v. Upton, 78 Mich. 28.

¶ 2277. One who does not appeal from a decree in his favor cannot be allowed additional relief on an appeal by his opponent.—Campbell v. Smith, 103 Mich. 427; Bowman v. Gork, 106 Mich. 163.

¶ 2278. Where defendant fails to appeal the decree cannot be revised so as to increase the sum to be paid to him.—Millard v. Truax, 73 Mich. 381.

¶ 2279. An item disallowed below cannot on appeal be allowed in favor of a nonappellant.—Lamont v. LaFevre, 96 Mich. 175.

¶ 2280. A defendant interested only as a subsequent incumbrancer, and appealing alone, has a right to have the decree altered by striking out the amount of an attorney's fee improperly allowed, even though the alteration operate incidentally to the benefit of the other defendants who have not appealed, and the value of the property exceeds the amount of the liens upon it.—Hardwick v. Bassett, 29 Mich. 17.

¶ 2281. On an appeal from a decree dismissing a judgment creditor's bill, the Supreme Court can determine the claims of an appealing defendant impleaded as holding securities belonging to a principal defendant, but claiming them in complainant's interest and against the owner's will and with no lien upon them, the other defendant not objecting.—Brown v. Vandermeulen, 44 Mich. 522.

§ 521. Offsets affecting nonappellant.

¶ 2282. If items claimed below by a nonappellant were erroneously rejected they may be offset against changes made above in appellant's favor.—Grant v. Merchants' & Manufacturers' Bank of Detroit, 35 Mich. 515; Robertson v. Gibb, 38 Mich. 165; Lambert v. Griffith, 44 Mich. 65; Bundy v. Youmans, 44 Mich. 376; University of Michigan v. Rose, 45 Mich. 284.

¶ 2283. A decree for complainant in an action for an accounting, will not be decreased because of an error in giving him a credit to which he was not entitled where such amount is offset by an excessive credit given defendant through an error in computation, though complainant has not appealed.—Snyder v. O'Beirne, 132 Mich. 340.

§ 522. As to amendments or further pleadings.

Remand for amendment, see ante § 515.

Amendments and additional records on appeal, see ante XI, F.

¶ 2284. Where a bill was dismissed without prejudice to the complainant's right to file a new bill based on the facts set up and admitted in defendant's answer, and it appeared from the testimony of the defendant in the case that a ground for relief existed, which was only contingently admitted in the answer, held, that the decree dismissing the bill should be so modified as to allow the complainant to amend his bill in accordance with the facts sworn to by defendant, and that on such amendment a decree for the appropriate relief should be entered.—Babcock v. Twist, 19 Mich. 516.

¶ 2285. The fact that the complainant in a bill for the specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land failed to aver a willingness to pay a mortgage upon the land, to which payment he was bound by the contract sought to be enforced, will not on appeal sustain a decree of the circuit judge wholly denying to the complainant the relief to which, but for the omission, he would have been entitled; since an amendment may be allowed in the Supreme Court to remedy the defect.—Palmer v. Palmer, 114 Mich. 509.

¶ 2286. Where the answer to a bill for an injunction to restrain the opening of a new right of way over complainant's land in lieu of the one used by defendant asks simply for a dismissal of the bill and fails to ask for affirmative relief so as to authorize a decree establishing the new right of way, subject to right of complainant to a passage across it, the Supreme Court, upon dismissing the bill, may direct that the pleadings be amended so as to conform with the proofs and so as to ask for affirmative relief, although the trial court granted such relief without amendment of the answer over objection of complainant.—Whitman v. Cook, 191 Mich. 453. (Equally divided court.)

¶ 2287. Where the final decree in an assignment case provides for a distribution of the funds in the hands of the receiver arising from the sale of the assigned property in disregard of the right of the assignor to exemptions, the decree will be so modified on appeal as to permit him to apply for an allowance for exemptions, notwithstanding the claim therefor was not made at the hearing below.—Burnham v. Dillon, 100 Mich. 359.

§ 523. As to parties to judgment.

Modification to impose costs on survivor, see post ¶ 2296.

¶ 2288. Where verdict in replevin is against plaintiff, error in entering judgment in favor of all defendants, whereas it should have been in favor of one, does not necessitate a new trial, but judgment for the proper defendant may be entered.—Whitney v. Hyde, 91 Mich. 13.

¶ 2289. Where, on certiorari from justice's court, the judgment of affirmance runs by inadvertence in favor of the next friend in his individual capacity, and the only complaint made by defendant is that the judgment will not preclude the infant from bringing another suit, he should have asked the circuit court to amend the judgment, and on affirmance of the circuit court judgment the amendment will be directed to be made.—Kees v. Maxim, 99 Mich. 493.

¶ 2290. Where, after trial of suit against principal and sureties in a bond, principal died and an order reviving suit against his administrator was entered without objection, and judgment was rendered in favor of surviving defendants and such administrator, writ of error, on reversal in Supreme Court, was dismissed as to administrator, and judgment entered against surviving defendants.—Healy v. Newton, 96 Mich. 228.

§ 524. As to amount or relief given.

See also Divorce, VII, X, E.

Reduction as condition of affirmance, see ante § 485.

Correction on record without reversal, see post § 526.

Modification to comply with directions in former appellate decree, see post ¶ 2391.

¶ 2291. Where certain items of damages allowed to be recovered by plaintiff in replevin were improper, the Supreme Court will not reduce and affirm the judgment instead of reversing it entirely, if the record does not show upon what theory the jury proceeded in awarding damages.—Riley v. Littlefield, 84 Mich. 22.

¶ 2292. Where in an action upon an insurance policy the jury disregarded the instruction of the court limiting the loss recoverable under a certain clause of the policy to a sum less than that covered by the clause, and the jury rendered a verdict for the greater amount, and no application was made to the trial court to correct the error, the judgment will not be reversed, but will be corrected by making the necessary deduction.—Tubbs v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 646.

¶ 2293. Where, in a suit for the violation of a penal statute, which imposes a penalty not exceeding a given sum for such violation, the proofs establish the offense, and a verdict is directed for the full amount of the penalty, and on error plaintiff files a writing waiving the recovery of the amount of the penalty above six cents, and remitting the excess, the judgment will be modified to that extent, and affirmed.—Hines v. Darling, 99 Mich. 47.

¶ 2294. Where the only legal objection to a judgment rendered against the appellant and his surety on an appeal from justice's court is that is exceeds the penalty of the appeal bond, the judgment will be modified, as to the surety, by rejecting such excess, and, as modified, affirmed.—Vreeland v. Loeckner, 99 Mich. 93.

¶ 2295. On case made where the only error appearing is that the judgment is excessive, the Supreme Court may correct it by reducing the amount to the proper sum as shown by the record.—Walrath v. Campbell, 28 Mich. 111.

§ 525. As to costs.

¶ 2296. On reversing a judgment for plaintiffs, where a suggestion of death of one of them was made after judgment on error, the judgment in so far as it allowed costs was modified so that the costs would run against the surviving plaintiff.—Seymour v. Bruske, 140 Mich. 244.

§ 526. Correction on record without reversal.

See also post § 527.

¶ 2297. It is the practice of this court to refrain from ordering new trials where the record is such as to enable the court to eliminate errors and to render a judgment for the items regarding which error is shown.—Sloman v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co., 112 Mich. 258.

¶ 2300. An error of the trial court in permitting interest to be given upon a note for too long a time can be remedied by a mere computation, and does not require the case to be sent back for a new trial.—In re King's Estate, 94 Mich. 411.

¶ 2301. On appeal from a judgment in a case, in which one of the defendants has failed to plead, but the plaintiff has neglected to file an affidavit thereof, under How. St., § 7636, the defendant's default for not pleading may be entered nunc pro tunc by the Supreme Court to save the verdict and judgment.—Steers v. Holmes, 79 Mich. 430.

§ 527. Correction of clerical errors.

¶ 2302. The Supreme Court on appeal may correct a mere clerical error of computation as to the amount of a judgment.—Moden v. Superintendents of Poor, 183 Mich. 120.

§ 528. In cases on certiorari from justice.

¶ 2303. Since the circuit court was required by Comp. L. 1871, § 5477, to give judgment as the right of the matter might appear, this court can render the proper judgment in a case brought to the circuit court on certiorari and taken up on error; but if the plaintiff in error has received too favorable a judgment below, and the other party does not complain, it can only affirm the judgment, though it may give costs to the defendant in error.—McClatchie v. Durham, 44 Mich. 485.

D. DIVISION OF OPINION.

§ 529. Decision by majority.

Dissenting opinions, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, §§ 5, 30; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12010, 12035.

¶ 2304. Where only seven judges participate in a decision, the conclusion of four of them shall be held not only to dispose of the property in question, but to settle the law.—Dolph v. Norton, 158 Mich. 417.

¶ 2304a. By statute the Supreme Court of Michigan consists of eight justices, five constituting a quorum. Held, that where five justices concur in an opinion, no dissenting opinion being offered, the formal decree may be settled and entered by three of the five.—Scott v. Sullivan, 164 Mich. 467.

§ 530. Affirmance by equal division.

Equal division, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, § 26; Comp. L. 1915, § 12031.

¶ 2305. Where the Supreme Court is equally divided the judgment below is affirmed.—Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 Mich. 90; Marquette & O. R. Co. v. Taft, 28 Mich. 289; Sands v. Finan, 88 Mich. 616.

¶ 2306. In an action to determine the rights to the proceeds of an insurance policy, a decree of the circuit court finding the sale to be for security only, was affirmed by a divided court, the only question involved being sufficiency of the evidence.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Preston, 142 Mich. 232.

¶ 2308. In an action by a farmer against the owner of a bull and one who had charge of it on his own premises to recover damages for getting one of plaintiff's heifers with calf while at large on plaintiff's premises, a judgment for plaintiff was affirmed by divided court.—Hosley v. Bamber, 199 Mich. 655.

§ 531. ——On different grounds from those below.

¶ 2309. Where the court is equally divided on a question, the decision of the lower court is affirmed although the justices for affirmance give a different ground for their opinion from that of the lower court.—Scharman v. Bay County Bridge Commission, 158 Mich. 77.

§ 532. Effect of diversity of opinions.

Majority of quorum as deciding vote, see ante § 529.

Effect on law of the case on retrial, see post § 554.

Dissenting opinion on quorum decision as ground for rehearing, see post § 544.

Effect on value of opinion as precedent, see Courts, IV.

¶ 2310. It is the practice in this state to regard judgments of the Supreme Court entered of necessity and not by a concurrence of the opinions of the justices as the same in effect as a judgment entered by a vote of the majority of the justices.—Gourlay v. Ins. Co. of North America, 189 Mich. 384.

¶ 2311. The conclusiveness of a judgment affirmed by operation of law in case of the justices of the reviewing court being equally divided in opinion is not affected by the fact that the judgment was entered on demurrer.—Gourlay v. Ins. Co. of North America, 189 Mich. 384.

E. AMENDMENTS OF, OR RELIEF FROM APPELLATE DECREE OR JUDGMENT.

§ 533. In general; time or stage of the cause.

Motion to dismiss made after judgment on error, see ante § 145, ¶ 627.

Disability of trial court to grant relief, see post § 564.

Power of court respecting amendments to record, see also ante § 240.

Granting amendment on rehearing, see post § 550.

Time for application for rehearing, see post § 546.

Amendment or modification of judgment under review, see ante XIII, C.

¶ 2312. Where a judgment rendered in the circuit court in favor of a plaintiff in certiorari who had given bond simply to pay any judgment rendered against him in the circuit court has been reversed in the Supreme Court, and where, upon the judgment entered in the latter court, execution has been taken out, it is too late to ask that the judgment entry in the Supreme Court be changed so as to empower the circuit court to enter judgment against the surety in such bond; the proper practice would have been to ask for a new bond in the circuit court.—Stoll v. Padley, 100 Mich. 404.

¶ 2313. If judgment overruling a demurrer is sustained in error, the court cannot thereafter remit the case with leave to withdraw the demurrer and plead over.—Farwell v. Fox, 19 Mich. 10.

§ 534. Occasion or ground for relief.

¶ 2315. A decree of the Supreme Court may, on motion, be amended so as to correct a mistake of the date from which interest should be allowed.—Crawford v. Osmun, 90 Mich. 82.

¶ 2316. The Supreme Court, having set aside a judgment entered nunc pro tunc, will not modify its order so as to allow the judgment to stand as of the date actually entered, for the sake of saving to the party his interest upon the judgment, inasmuch as interest may be saved in the entry of a new judgment.—Detroit v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 12.

¶ 2317. Where the decree of the Supreme Court awarded a money judgment against a corporation and its surety on an appeal bond, limiting the liability to the amount of the bond and providing that the decree should constitute a claim against the property of the corporation, but not making it a preferred claim on the assets of the corporation, which had afterwards become insolvent and gone into the hands of a receiver, the Supreme Court will neither modify the decree by making the claim a preferred one, nor grant a rehearing on the application of the surety company, which for a consideration had given its undertaking to pay the decree or the penalty of its bond, it having no claim to a preference or to be relieved from its obligation at the expense of the creditors generally.—Sparrow v. E. Bement & Sons, 146 Mich. 326.

¶ 2318. An order overruling a demurrer to a bill was reversed on appeal. The bill was dismissed, instead of being sent back for amendment, on the ground that its allegations of fraud were insufficient. A motion was made by complainant before the Supreme Court to amend the decree, substituting for the order of dismissal an order that the cause be remanded with leave to the complainant to file an amended bill, the application being based on new allegations of fraud. Held, the motion should be granted.—Macomber v. Cottrell, 162 Mich. 718.

In application for rehearing, see post § 545.
In seeking leave to apply to trial court for rehearing, see post § 545, ¶ 2348.

¶ 2319. Where a party to a bill for partition consented that it be dismissed as to him, and the case as to the others went to decree, and the case was afterwards appealed to the Supreme Court, that court refused to arrest the proceedings for his relief and remit the cause to make him a party and allow him to plead, there being no showing of mistake or fraud, and he having had ample time to apply for relief in the court below and failed to do so.—Campau v. Campau, 19 Mich. 180.

¶ 2320. A decree of foreclosure and sale in the Supreme Court was signed January 7, 1911, and by clerical error required the mortgagors to pay the sum decreed by January 5, 1911. The statute gave the right to redeem within six months after sale. The decree expressly provided that defendants, at any time before the date set for sale of the premises, might, by paying instalments in default and costs, be reinstated under the mortgage. Defendants discovered said error January 23, 1911, but did not call the court's attention to it. The sale did not take place until after the decree was settled. Held, defendants had ample notice and time to redeem and the decree should not be disturbed on rehearing.—Union Trust Co. v. Electric Park Amusement Co., 168 Mich. 574.

¶ 2321. No formal notice was given defendant mortgagor's solicitor of the filing in the Supreme Court of a decree of foreclosure and sale or of the steps taken to advertise and sell. The record showed he had actual notice and was fully advised thereof in ample time to protect defendant's rights. The first published notice of sale was seen by him two days after its issue. He was served with notice of taxation of costs before sale. A person from his office attended the sale and took memoranda thereof. He was notified of the commissioners' report of sale and filed exceptions thereto. Held, upon rehearing, the decree of the Supreme Court for foreclosure and sale should not be disturbed.—Union Trust Co. v. Electric Park Amusement Co., 168 Mich. 574.

§ 536. Discretion to grant relief.

Relief grantable on rehearing, see post § 550.

¶ 2322. On appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to a bill of complaint the court may, in their discretion, after affirming the ruling, permit an amendment to the bill, or dismiss the latter without leave to amend. (Pub. Acts 1909, No. 299; Comp. Laws 1897, § 549; How. St. (2nd Ed.), § 12071.)—Macomber v. Cottrell, 173 Mich. 352.

§ 537. Protection of third persons.

¶ 2323. An order discontinuing a writ of error in a suit involving title to land, entered on stipulation signed after some of the plaintiffs in error had assigned their interest in the land to a third person and without authority from him, was amended on his petition so as not to prejudice his right to proceed in the court below for the protection of his interest.—Woodman v. Missionary Soc. of M. E. Church, 124 U. S. 161, 31 L. ed. 352, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 416.

XIV. REHEARINGS AND PROCEDURE THEREON.

§ 538. In general; grounds.

Matters considered on the rehearing, see post § 548.

Effect of delay, time to apply, see post §§ 545, 546.

Various specific grounds, see also post §§ 539-544.

Reargument of cause, see ante § 239.

Rehearings in equity generally, see Equity, XI.

¶ 2324. A rehearing on the same facts and legal controversy will not be granted unless there has been some very peculiar assumption or defect on the first hearing by which court and parties have been misled. —Brown v. Brown, 64 Mich. 82; People for Use of Holmes v. Cotteral, 115 Mich. 43.

¶ 2325. The Supreme Court cannot ordinarily be depended upon to go outside of the printed record and briefs to ascertain what question may be involved in any case, and cannot give parties a rehearing when they have not seen that the case was properly presented.—Auditor General v. Hill, 98 Mich. 326.

¶ 2326. Rehearing will be denied unless the court's attention is directed either to a misapplication of the law, or to something in the record or briefs that has been overlooked and is material to a proper disposition of the case.—Smith v. Walker, 57 Mich. 456.

§ 539. New points.

Points covered by settled law, see post § 540.

¶ 2328. Rehearing is not granted to allow argument on a question that has been investigated by the court, but not argued before nor discussed in the opinion.—Hutchins v. Kimmell, 31 Mich. 126.

¶ 2329. A question neither raised nor argued on the original hearing of a case will not be considered on rehearing.—Lagden v. Concordia Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Bay, Saginaw, and Arenac Counties, 188 Mich. 689. (Stone, C. J., and Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 2330. A rehearing will be denied where the points upon which it is asked were substantially covered by the court on the hearing.—Wilcox v. Toledo & A. A. R. Co., 45 Mich. 280.

§ 540. Points not discussed or answered.

¶ 2331. Where a question raised by the record, but not argued before, has, nevertheless, been investigated by the court, though not discussed in the opinion delivered, a rehearing will not be granted for the purpose of giving an opportunity of arguing it, where the argument on the motion for rehearing does not present the subject in any different light than that in which it was considered. —Hutchins v. Kimmel, 31 Mich. 126.

¶ 2332. It is not a ground for rehearing that the court has omitted to pass on one of the contentions made by counsel in the brief if the point has already been squarely decided and becomes the settled law of the state; so that it cannot be material to the case or of instruction for the future.—Detroit National Bank v. Blodgett, 115 Mich. 160.

¶ 2333. Where a case was submitted upon the understanding that the former rule that the failure to except to the refusal of requests to charge precluded a review of such requests was still in force, Pub. Acts 1901, Act No. 52, providing that error may be assigned upon the refusal to give requests, without the taking of an exception, having been overlooked, the court on rehearing examined the refused requests.—Finkbinder v. Ernst, 135 Mich. 226.

§ 541. Mistake or misapprehension.

Points overlooked, see ante §§ 538-540.
Cause submitted under misapprehension as to rules applicable and not discussed, see ante ¶ 2333.
Ground for correction of appellate judgment, see ante § 534.

¶ 2334. Where, in the opinion as filed, a fact essential to sustain the conclusion reached by this court is by mistake stated to have been specially found by the jury, but upon the whole record it is clear that such fact was necessarily found in the general verdict, rehearing asked on ground of such mistake is denied.—Johnston v. Davis, 61 Mich. 278.

¶ 2335. Though the opinion of the Supreme Court erroneously states that a certain question of fact was submitted to the jury below, rehearing will be denied if a review of the record shows that the question was one of law and rightly decided.—Cobbs v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 68 Mich. 465.

¶ 2336. An inadvertent misstatement of fact in narrating in the opinion the facts of the case will not be ground for a rehearing, where it was immaterial because the decision was right notwithstanding.—Roff v. McCreery, 190 Mich. 391.

§ 542. New evidence or proofs.

¶ 2337. An application for a rehearing, based upon a showing of facts that were already upon the record, or that would not materially alter or add to the case made on the first hearing, will be denied.—Taylor v. Boardman, 24 Mich. 287; Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 490.

¶ 2339. Proceedings will not be stayed to permit an application for a rehearing on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, where the statement of the proposed new evidence is very vague, and indicates nothing more than cumulative testimony that cannot fairly be called newly-discovered evidence.—Case v. Case, 26 Mich. 484.

¶ 2340. The denial of a petition for rehearing of a case in the Supreme Court and to remand the case to the circuit court in order to allow the introduction of additional testimony or a bill of review on the ground of newly-discovered evidence is proper where such testimony is merely cumulative and, even if admitted, there would be no different results.—Frohlich v. Aikman, 201 Mich. 64.

§ 543. Causes affecting membership or qualifications of the court.

¶ 2341. Rehearing of a case decided on appeal will not be granted on the mere ground that a change in the court has taken place or is about to do so.—Peoples v. Evening News Ass'n, 51 Mich. 11.

¶ 2342. Rehearing will not be granted on the ground that a son of the judge who wrote the opinion belonged to a firm who were attorneys of record for one of the parties when the suit was brought, especially if the firm did not manage the case and did not appear in the appellate court.—Maclean v. Scripps, 52 Mich. 214.

§ 544. ——Decision by quorum only.

Dissenting opinion as ground, when, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 12010.

¶ 2343. Five justices of the Supreme Court of Michigan, consisting of eight members, concurred in an opinion. Before the decree was entered two of them were retired by death or otherwise. Held, that no rehearing could be demanded since there was no dissenting opinion to bring the case within the provisions of Act No. 250, Pub. Acts 1903, relating to rehearings, when a case is heard by a quorum of five justices with a dissenting opinion.—Scott v. Sullivan, 164 Mich. 467.

§ 545. Equities and diligence of applicant.

See also ante § 535.

¶ 2344. On petition for a rehearing for additional evidence, the physical and pecuniary condition of the petitioner is properly considered in determining whether reasonable diligence had been shown in trying to obtain it for the first hearing; so also is the knowledge of the party as to the essential facts of the case and the difficulty of establishing them by competent testimony.—Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430.

¶ 2345. A rehearing for evidence which the petitioner could not produce upon the first trial is not granted if it does not appear that testimony which is not merely cumulative, and could not with reasonable diligence be procured in season, has been discovered since the decision of the case, which, if introduced, might, in the court's opinion, change the result to petitioner's advantage.—Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430.

¶ 2346. Rehearing for new evidence will not be granted where the petitioner had an intimation that it might have been obtained and did not compel its production.—Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430.

¶ 2347. Rehearing on foreclosure will not be granted on the ground that notes secured by the mortgage were void for usury in the state where they were given. This is so at least where the notes are apparently good. —Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430.

¶ 2348. An application by an appellant, made after the affirmance of a decree, for leave to apply to the court below for a rehearing, will be denied where it appears that the evidence sought to be introduced on the rehearing was within the knowledge of the appellant at the time of the first hearing, and should have been suggested by the testimony of the appellee.—Sherwood v. Central Michigan Sav. Bank, 104 Mich. 65.

¶ 2349. Rehearing will not lie where nothing is involved but the gains and losses of a venture dependent on fraud.—Reeg v. Burnham, 55 Mich. 89.

¶ 2350. A rehearing will not be granted thirty years after the submission of a case, on the ground of newly-discovered evidence which merely tends to make clearer documentary evidence of public record, and which available at the time of the trial.—Attorney General v. Joy, 181 Mich. 266.

¶ 2351. A petition for rehearing of a case in the Supreme Court and to remand the case to the circuit court for the purpose of allowing the introduction of additional testimony or a bill of review on the ground of newly-discovered evidence will be denied where, although the witness, whose evidence is claimed as the basis of the petition to be newly discovered, was a witness for the adverse party at the time of trial, his unfinished answer to a question put by the adverse party suggested an inquiry as to what was claimed to be newly-discovered evidence, and such answer was not given, owing to an objection made by the other party.—Frohlich v. Aikman, 201 Mich. 64.

§ 546. Time and stage of the cause.

Laches and want of diligence, see ante § 545.
For application to amend appellate judgment, see ante § 533.

¶ 2352. A rehearing will not be granted in this court after the decree has been actually entered and remitted to the circuit.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 490.

§ 547. Motion or petition and matters considered thereon.

On the rehearing proper, see post § 548.
Application for rehearing and practice thereon, see Sup. Ct. Rule 51. [Amended 200 Mich.]

¶ 2353. Notice of a motion for a stay of proceedings to enable the party to apply for a rehearing on the ground of newly-discovered evidence should be given to the opposite party.—Case v. Case, 26 Mich. 484.

¶ 2354. Service of notice of an application for a rehearing is not essential to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction where it could grant a rehearing of its own motion, without any application whatever.—Culver v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 149 Mich. 630.

¶ 2355. Argument on the merits cannot be made on a motion for a rehearing, but only on the rehearing itself, if granted.— Kraft v. Raths, 45 Mich. 20.

§ 548. Scope and subjects of rehearing.

Of application for rehearing, see ante § 547.

¶ 2356. A case must be reheard, if at all, on the record, and not on affidavits explaining the facts.—Vanneter v. Crossman, 39 Mich. 610.

¶ 2357. An affidavit filed in the Supreme Court, upon rehearing cannot be considered as evidence in the cause.—Patnode v. Darveau, 112 Mich. 127.

§ 549. Effect of motion or of rehearing.

¶ 2358. A motion for rehearing in the Supreme Court does not, of itself, operate to stay proceedings on a final judgment.—Busch v. Wilcox, 106 Mich. 514.

§ 550. Order, judgment or relief.

Procedure for relief after affirmance on rehearing, see post ¶ 2396.
Costs on rehearing, see Costs, V.

¶ 2359. The opinion of the Supreme Court will be amended on rehearing to correct a misstatement as to the description of land in a deed.—Bird v. Stimson, 197 Mich. 582.

¶ 2360. A modification of its decree will be denied by the Supreme Court where questions urged were considered and decided on the original hearing.—Gaskill v. Weeks, 156 Mich. 668.

XV. REMISSION TO TRIAL COURT AND SUBSEQUENT PROCEDURE THEREIN.

§ 551. Remission of cause and mandate in general.

Grounds and propriety of remission or final judgment or modification above, see ante XIII, B, C.

Remand with directions for further action, see ante §§ 513-516.

Filing remittitur as restoring jurisdiction below, see ante § 137.

As cutting off right to amendment of appellate judgment or rehearing, see ante §§ 533, 546.

Remand to restore lower court's jurisdiction, see ante ¶ 596.

Remission of files and records on appeal, see Jud. Act, Chap. L, § 26; Comp. L. 1915, § 13761.

§ 552. Character and incidents of retrial in general.

¶ 2361. The effect of a reversal by the court, where a new trial is ordered, is to send the case back to the court below to be tried in the usual manner, with or without a jury, as may thereafter be determined; the case, where tried before a referee, does not go again before him.—Hopkins v. Sanford, 41 Mich. 243.

§ 553. Appellate decision as law of the case.

Law of the case on second review, see ante XII, G.

Extension of time to appeal after dismissal of former appeal for delay, see also ante ¶ 344.

Construction of directions, see post § 563.

Costs for disregarding law of the case on retrial, see Costs, V.

Contempt in disobeying judgment of the Supreme Court, see Contempt, I.

¶ 2362. An utter disregard on a second trial, of the rules laid down by the Supreme Court on the reversal of a former judgment calls for a second reversal, with costs of both courts.—Wheeler v. Meyer, 101 Mich. 465.

¶ 2362a. A decision of the Supreme Court upon error is conclusive upon the parties, so far as the law is concerned, whenever the same state of facts is presented; but upon different facts other principles apply.—Pelton v. Schmidt, 104 Mich. 345.

¶ 2363. In debt on an administrator's bond a ruling that the trial court erred in holding that a judgment on an earlier bond was a bar to action on the present one must be followed in the second trial as the law of the case.—Wayne Probate Judge v. Joslyn, 101 Mich. 551.

¶ 2364. Where the Supreme Court had examined a certain contract and warehouse receipts and construed them and their legal effects, such decision on a retrial of the case in the lower court is the law in the case.—Julius Kessler & Co. v. Velo, 148 Mich. 472.

§ 554. ——Dissent or special concurrence in result.

Decision by majority, see ante § 529.

¶ 2365. Where all of the justices sitting concurred in a reversal, and the granting of a new trial on one ground stated in the opinion, but one of the justices did not concur on another ground stated in the opinion, this latter fact does not permit an assumption that a dissenting opinion was filed, and does not change the result, nor can a new trial be in any manner affected thereby.—Moon v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 143 Mich. 125.

§ 555. ——Conclusiveness as to facts in issue.

¶ 2366. Where a case is reversed, and upon the second trial the case presented is substantially the same as the one reversed, the trial court is right in directing a verdict for defendant.—Hutchinson v. Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co., 152 Mich. 367.

§ 556. ——Form and propriety of instructions.

Adherence on second review, see ante § 467.

Following approved instructions, see ante § 467.

¶ 2367. Where upon a former appeal the Supreme Court has said that the "record title" to certain land was imperfect, the fact that the court upon retrial states that the "title" is imperfect, is not prejudicial.—Weaver v. Richards, 150 Mich. 20.

¶ 2368. Where upon a former appeal it has been decided that the question of whether a contract was made with certain persons as individuals, or with plaintiff corporation, was one of fact for the jury, a charge upon a retrial that if under the evidence any contract was proved, it was a contract with the company, is not error when supported by the record.—Anderson Carriage Co. v. Pungs, 153 Mich. 580.

§ 557. Matters open on retrial.

Effect of appellate judgment, see ante § 499.

Passing questions without decision because unnecessary and leaving them open to retrial, see ante §§ 261-266.

Remand leaving questions open, see ante § 512.

Objections not passed on open on second review, see ante § 470.

Matters relating to judgment or amendment thereof, see post §§ 562-564.

Direction to exclude issue, see also ante § 514.
Power below to grant new trial, see post § 565.

¶ 2369. In replevin for wheat the defense was that defendant's father conveyed to plaintiff a farm leased to defendant in consideration of an agreement that defendant should be allowed to raise thereon a crop of wheat. Held, that this was substantially the same as the defense made on an earlier trial that the deed was in consideration of an agreement that the grantor should be allowed to raise the wheat, which agreement inured to defendant's benefit; and that it was admissible.—Breitenwischer v. Clough, 116 Mich. 340.

¶ 2370. Where the Supreme Court reverses and remands a case for a new trial on the sole ground of defect of necessary parties, and states that it does not consider other questions involved, the question of the sufficiency of the complaint upon demurrer is not rendered res judicata by such decision.—Godfrey Lumber Co. v. Kline, 167 Mich. 629.

§ 558. ——Reversal inuring to respondent or defendant.

See also ante ¶ 2200.

¶ 2371. Plaintiff sued for damages for breach of a contract of sale. Defendant gave notice of a set-off. The court instructed that the jury should allow the set-off, whatever verdict they brought in. The jury found for the plaintiff, and defendant appealed, but plaintiff did not. Held, that on reversal of the judgment for plaintiff, the defendant should be allowed his set-off.—Jordan v. Walker, 154 Mich. 394.

§ 559. Change of theory on retrial.

Adherence to theory of trial on appeal, see ante §§ 267-269.
Making amendments or adduction of changed evidence, see post §§ 560, 561.

¶ 2372. At the former trial plaintiff's evidence indicated that a turntable might be moved in either direction and his counsel conceded such fact. The case was sent back by the Supreme Court for a new trial under an opinion that if said turntable turned freely in both directions plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Plaintiff's counsel at the second trial attempted to introduce evidence to show that said turntable could be turned only in one direction. Held, the trial court properly excluded such evidence as plaintiff was not entitled to take wholly inconsistent positions.—Connor v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 29. (Moore, J., dissenting.)

¶ 2373. Plaintiff on a retrial of the case after reversal in the Supreme Court cannot take a position wholly inconsistent with the claims made upon a former trial.—Macatawa Transp. Co. v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 179 Mich. 443.

¶ 2374. Where on retrial in an action on an insurance policy plaintiff claimed that representations contained in the application for insurance were made by one of his employees without authority from him, it was held there was no change in position, although on the former trial more emphasis was laid upon the claim that the representations were true, both trials being had upon the same declaration.—Macatawa Transp. Co. v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 179 Mich. 443.

§ 560. Amendments of pleadings or issues.

Remand with directions, see ante § 515.

¶ 2375. The court of chancery has power to allow the bill to be amended after a decree sustaining a demurrer has been sustained by the Supreme Court on the same reasons that governed the court below.—Bank of Michigan v. Niles, W. 398.

¶ 2376. Denial of an application to amend the plea after reversal and remand, is within the discretion of the trial court.—Central Sav. Bank v. O'Connor, 139 Mich. 82.

¶ 2377. A declaration failing to show who are the next of kin damaged by the negligent killing of their relative may be amended in that respect on a second trial.—Walker v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 104 Mich. 606; Garrity v. Detroit Citizens' St. Ry. Co., 112 Mich. 369.

¶ 2378. Under 3 Comp. L. 1897, § 10268, authorizing amendments of pleadings or proceedings at any time before judgment, the plaintiff is not entitled to an amendment of his declaration as of course after reversal of judgment and remand for new trial.—Merrill v. Leisenring, 157 Mich. 133.

§ 561. New evidence or change of testimony.

¶ 2381. Upon a new trial ordered by the Supreme Court a party is not compelled to stand or fall by the testimony he gave at the former trial, although if one changes his testimony the jury may consider the change as affecting credibility.—Pelton v. Schmidt, 104 Mich. 345.

¶ 2382. In an action against a railroad company for a personal injury, a slight discrepancy in plaintiff's testimony on two different trials as to the place where he alighted from a train is a question for the jury, and does not warrant a reversal of the judgment. —Mensing v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 117 Mich. 606.

§ 562. Judgment and relief after remand.

Remand with directions for judgment, see ante § 516.

Conclusiveness of allowance of appellate costs against change by trial court on retrial, see Costs, V.

Proceedings on reversal of judgment in arbitration proceedings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 13666.

¶ 2383. A judgment against one of two defendants was improper where on a former trial judgment was entered against both and one severed for the purpose of appeal, and where on the second trial no discontinuance was entered as to the nonappealing defendant, and where the proceedings were in fact against both, and the judgment should have been so entered.—McPherson v. Bristol, 122 Mich. 354.

¶ 2384. Where the defendant in a proceeding to enjoin the violation of an easement held by the complainant in a stairway, removes the stairway upon the dismissal of the bill and makes changes at great cost, pending the appeal which is promptly taken, complainant was entitled upon reversal to an injunction and a restoration of the easement as it existed before bringing suit, although the change may have been beneficial and the cost of putting the premises in their former condition be so large as to be entirely disproportionate to the injury done complainant. —Ives v. Edison, 124 Mich. 402.

§ 563. ——Reserved questions and directions.

Remand with directions, see ante §§ 513-516.

¶ 2385. An order for a payment of dividends to creditors of an assignor provided for payment of a twenty per cent. dividend, and that a claim then in litigation should not share in it. In reviewing the judgment on that claim the Supreme Court passed by the question with the remark that possibly there might not be enough money subsequently realized to place it on an equality with claims which had already been paid a dividend. When finally allowed, it was ordered to participate with the unpaid eighty per cent. of the other claims, thus in effect denying to it the twenty per cent. received by the others. Held, that, since How. St. § 8747, requires equality in dividends, neither court had power to cut off the claim from the right to share in the twenty per cent dividend, and the decisions should not be construed as determining otherwise.—Farwell v. Myers, 66 Mich. 678.

¶ 2386. The statement made in Church v. Anti-Kalsomine Co., 118 Mich. 219, that the circuit court in an action at law might appoint auditors if examination of accounts became necessary, was not intended to mean that it must appoint them; nor was such a meaning conveyed by refusing a mandamus thereafter to vacate the appointment of only one auditor, it having been regarded as a discretionary matter. Hence the court is not thereafter disabled to discharge such auditor on the incoming of his report.—Anti-Kalsomine Co. v. Kent Circuit Judge, 123 Mich. 658.

¶ 2389. Under a decree on appeal adjusting rights and for an accounting, which reserved to the circuit court on application power to make a special allowance for counsel fees and expenses in such accounting, the circuit court should determine the propriety of making such allowance before making it; but before disturbing it on a subsequent appeal it must appear that an allowance made without first determining its propriety was one improper to be made under the facts appearing of record.—Sprague v. Moore, 136 Mich. 426.

¶ 2390. In a partnership accounting, an affirmed decree which recites that the defendant partner cut and removed and manufactured timber from the partnership property, and sold it in his retail yard, and refers the cause to a commissioner with instructions to charge the defendant with the amounts received for the timber, or, if impossible of ascertainment, with the market price, refers to the market value at retail in the defendant's yard rather than the market value where cut.—Hughes v. Love, 138 Mich. 281.

¶ 2391. On appeal from proceedings to determine the amount of the respective liens of parties to an action for subrogation to rights claimed by reason of the payment of mortgages and legacies which were liens upon an estate, which payments had been made in the honest belief that certain heirs had been devised the land in fee, held that the trial court by considering a claim which was not properly a lien, and by bunching the combined payments for the mortgages and legacies which bore different rates of interest and by allowing each of the two parties a proportion of the combined amount which the amount which each had paid bore to such amount, one of the parties having paid the entire amount of the legacies, did not make "deductions and compute proportions accordingly" as directed in a former decree of the Supreme Court remanding the case for further proceedings and that the decree of the trial court should be modified accordingly.—Stroh v. Bauman, 188 Mich. 579.

§ 564. ——Amendment or relief from judgment.

Revision of cost award on retrial, see Costs, V.

¶ 2392. The circuit court cannot grant leave to file a bill to review a decree made by the Supreme Court.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 490.

¶ 2393. After reversal of a joint judgment against husband and wife on appeal by her only, a motion cannot be entertained in the trial court to vacate the judgment as to her and affirm it as to him.—Hall v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 123 Mich. 555.

¶ 2394. Amounts found due, by a decree of the Supreme Court upon an appeal in chancery, to respective creditors upon their demands, cannot be changed by the circuit court, nor can the case be reopened for a rehearing by the latter tribunal; the Supreme Court alone can grant relief, if any.—Fifth Nat. Bank v. Clinton Circuit Judge, 100 Mich. 67.

¶ 2395. Where the circuit court, to which a case brought to determine the amount upon which a dividend should be paid to the several creditors secured by a trust mortgage is remanded by the Supreme Court, to make the distribution of the trust fund in accordance with the decree of that court, is convinced that its order of distribution is incorrect as measured by said decree, it has the power to vacate the order, to the end that the direction of the Supreme Court may be carried out.—Fifth Nat. Bank v. Clinton Circuit Judge, 100 Mich. 67.

¶ 2396. On affirming on rehearing a decree as against an appellant assignor for creditors in so far as it adjudged that certain property passed by the assignment and not by a chattel mortgage in contemplation of the assignment, if it was not binding as to the assignor by reason of an irregularity, the proper proceedings against him may be taken on the foot of the decree; where the decree was valid as between the assignee (receiver) and the mortgagee, and the assignor merely had possession.—Burnham v. Dillon, 100 Mich. 359, on rehearing of 100 Mich. 352.

¶ 2397. In replevin a verdict and judgment that the defendant did not unlawfully detain the property, fixing the value of the property and, on defendant's motion, a judgment that the defendant recover costs and charges, when affirmed by the Supreme Court, may be amended on leave from the Supreme Court so as to allow recovery of the property or its value, where the sole question decided in the Supreme Court was as to the plaintiff's right to maintain replevin.—Salter v. Sutherland, 125 Mich. 662.

§ 565. Grant of new trial after remand.

Right to error on grant or denial, see ante ¶ 224.

¶ 2398. In a case remanded on affirmance without direction, the trial court has power in the absence of laches to grant a new trial if justice requires it.—Reynolds v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 403.

XVI. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES ON BONDS AND SECURITIES.

§ 566. Measure of liability in general.

Various liabilities covered, see post §§ 567-569.
Joint and several liability, see post § 570.
Requisites and sufficiency of bonds, see ante VI, C.
Necessity for bond, see ante § 81.
Bonds for supersedeas and liability on them, see Stay of Proceedings, II.
Allowance of damages for vexation, frivolity or delay, see Costs, V.
Bond on error to forcible entry proceedings, see Forcible Entry, II.

¶ 2399. The measure of damages for breach of a bond, reciting judgment, to prosecute a writ of error to effect, is the amount of such judgment with costs and interest.—Healey v. Newton, 96 Mich. 228.

§ 567. Liabilities covered by bond.

¶ 2400. The specific condition in a bond instead of the usual form that the obligation shall remain in full force and effect in case of appeal (sic) to the Supreme Court if the judgment in said court, with interest and costs, is not paid, must control the liability rather than a general recital.—Miner v. Rodgers, 65 Mich. 225.

¶ 2401. After rendition of judgment against him defendant obtained an order extending time to settle bill of exceptions and staying proceedings on condition of filing the statutory bond. He filed a bond which was approved and acquiesced in, conditioned to prosecute his writ of error to effect, and to pay such judgment as should be rendered, but nothing was done except to settle the bill of exceptions. Held, that the bond was a contract, enforceable as a common-law bond, and by its recital of judgment against the principal obligor concluded the parties and bound them to pay if the writ was not sued out.—Healey v. Newton, 96 Mich. 228.

§ 568. ——Trial and appeal costs.

On joint bond, see post § 570.

¶ 2402. Where the parties to a chancery cause make cross-appeals upon which one succeeds and recovers costs as against the others, the latter's appeal bond may be made to secure their recovery, even though his own appeal was merely from a denial of costs below, and though the appellate court passed upon his adversary's appeal below, without reference to his, and awarded costs of both courts against him.—Prosser v. Whitney, 46 Mich. 405.

¶ 2403. Costs are presumably secured by the bond.—Connorton v. Miller. 41 Mich. 1.

¶ 2405. Under Pub. Acts 1877, No. 13, the statutory liability on the appeal bond is limited to costs on the appeal itself.—Michie v. Ellair, 60 Mich. 73; Warner v. Cameron, 64 Mich. 185.

¶ 2406. Appeal bonds are not limited to securing such costs only as result from the appeal; they cover also costs made before the decree.—Prosser v. Whitney, 46 Mich. 405.

¶ 2407. A decision on appeal, affirming the decree as against one joint appellant and modifying it as to another, and specifying as to the latter that as she made a joint appeal and signed a joint bond "no costs should be granted her in this court or below, but no costs are to go against her in either court," intends that she shall not be liable for any costs incurred in the chancery court; and she is not liable for them on the joint bond.—Warner v. Cameron, 64 Mich. 185.

§ 569. ——Deficiency or liability on debt after satisfaction of decree.

Exclusion of possible deficiency from bond, see ante § 83, ¶ 376.

¶ 2408. The bond only obligates the appellant to the performance of the decree of the Supreme Court in those particulars in which he was individually bound in the decree appealed from. Accordingly, where, after the decree for the complainant in a foreclosure suit, one of the defendants, not personally liable on the decree, appealed therefrom, and the decree was affirmed by the Supreme Court, it was held that the appellant was not liable for the amount of deficiency after sale had been made on the decree.—Kephart v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan, 4 Mich. 602.

¶ 2409. The sureties on a chancery appeal bond must pay costs, including those of the Supreme Court in case of affirmance, but they are not liable upon the bond for any portion of a deficiency left on sale of the appellant's property to satisfy the decree. (Comp. L. 1871, § 5180, How. St., § 6738.)—Kennedy v. Nims, 52 Mich. 153.

¶ 2410. In a former suit to foreclose a land contract in which suit plaintiff was complainant, a decree was entered for plaintiff. Upon appeal taken by defendants in that suit an appeal bond was filed pursuant to Act No. 340, Pub. Acts 1907, conditioned upon the performance of the final decree entered by the upper court. The upper court affirmed the decree of the lower court with modifications, ordered defendant to pay costs, but said nothing as to liability in case of a deficiency after sale of the premises. In a suit on the bond, held, defendant bondsman was not liable for such deficiency.—Kelly v. Gaukler, 164 Mich. 519.

§ 570. Joint and several liability.

See also ante ¶ 2407.

¶ 2411. Where parties whose interests in the suits are distinct jointly appeal with a joint bond, and one prevails, and no costs are awarded against him, though expressly adjudged against co-appellants, he is no longer liable on the joint appeal bond.—Warner v. Cameron, 64 Mich. 185.

§ 571. Breach or fulfillment of condition.

Proper amount and conditions, see ante § 83.

¶ 2412. The affirmance of the judgment of the court below is a sufficient judgment of the Supreme Court to support the condition of a bond to pay any judgment in the latter court.—Miner v. Rodgers, 65 Mich. 225.

¶ 2413. Plaintiff secured a judgment in attachment in justice's court against one Antezak, who appealed to the circuit court. Defendant surety signed the appeal bond, the condition of which was that Antezak should prosecute his appeal with due diligence. Antezak went into bankruptcy and secured his discharge. Held, defendant surety was not discharged from his liability as surety on the appeal bond.—Brown & Brown Coal Co. v. Antezak, 164 Mich. 110.

§ 572. Remedies, pleading and procedure to enforce bond.

Reinstatement of dismissed cause at instance of surety, see ante § 171, ¶ 733.

Right to enforce appeal bond and leave sureties to be subrogated in bankruptcy to appellee's right to prove in bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy.

Accrual of right of action on supersedeas bond, see Limitation of Actions, IV.

¶ 2414. In an action upon an appeal bond jointly executed by husband and wife as principals, the wife must be joined as defendant.—Post v. Shafer, 63 Mich. 85.

¶ 2415. A declaration, setting out a joint appeal bond and alleging affirmance of the decree as to one of the appellants and a decree against him for costs, and the failure on his part to satisfy the decree and costs so adjudged, states a cause of action against both appellants joining in such bond and sued thereon, though there is no allegation stating whether or not the decree was affirmed or anything adjudged against the other appellant, and though in fact such other defendant prevailed on the appeal and was thereby discharged; since such fact is matter of defense not pleadable by demurrer. —Warner v. Cameron, 64 Mich. 185.

¶ 2416. A demurrer to a declaration upon a bond conditioned to prosecute an appeal to effect, on the ground that such declaration fails to set up the facts necessary to make such bond effectual under the statute, is properly overruled, where the averments are sufficient at least to show a good common-law bond.—Boyer v. Sowles, 109 Mich. 481.

§ 573. Rendition of judgment in appellate court.

Entry of judgment against security for costs as an incident of judgment on the cause, see Security for Costs, III.

Entry of judgment against sureties on bond, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXII, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 12795.

¶ 2417. The statute allowing summary judgment against persons becoming security for costs, does not apply to the sureties on a bond conditioned to abide the result of an appeal.—Willard v. Fralick, 31 Mich. 431; Bondie v. Bourassa, 46 Mich. 321; Reed v. Northrup, 50 Mich. 442; Booth v. Radford, 57 Mich. 357; Knack v. Wayne Circuit Judge. 147 Mich. 485.

§ 574. Burden of proof and evidence.

Issues concluded by judgment, see post §§ 575, 576.

Issues of fraud, duress or mistake, or of the execution of the bond, or other matters wherein the fact that it is an appeal bond or a bond for writ of error has no distinctive importance, see Bonds; Execution of Instruments; Contracts; Fraud; Duress; Mistake; and other specific topics.

¶ 2418. Where an appeal bond names certain persons as sureties it must be assumed that each one contemplates that the rest will join in its execution; and one who sues on the bond has the burden of explaining the omission of any one to do so. And if any surety denies its execution on oath, and testifies that his supposed signature is a forgery and the justification of the sureties a fraud, the plaintiff is under stronger obligation to show that defendant signed and delivered the bond with full knowledge of the facts.—Woodin v. Durfee, 46 Mich. 424.

§ 575. Matters concluded by appellate judgment.

¶ 2419. In an action against the sureties upon an appeal bond to recover taxed costs, it was held that the only question open in the case was the question of the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment.—Miller v. Maher, 178 Mich. 571.

§ 576. ——Costs and allowances.

¶ 2420. In an action on an appeal bond, a judgment for costs against the principal is conclusive as against his sureties.—Miller v. Maher, 178 Mich. 571.

¶ 2420a. In an action against the sureties on an appeal bond to recover taxed costs, defendants cannot be heard to object for the first time to the amount of such costs, the remedy being by objection at the time of taxation of costs or by requesting retaxation.—Miller v. Maher, 178 Mich. 571.

XVII. COSTS AND ALLOWANCES.

§ 577. In general; cross-references.

The right to costs on error or appeal is regulated by Jud. Act, Chap. XLVII, §§ 20-24; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13701-13705; see also Sup. Ct. Rules 2, 48-50. The decisions are collected in Costs, V, which see.

Liability on bond for costs, and conclusiveness as to same, see ante §§ 568, 576.

¶ 12. An appearance to set aside proceedings for irregularities, or to object to the jurisdiction, is not a general appearance in the cause.—Brown v. Thompson, 29 Mich. 72; Schwab v. Mabley, 47 Mich. 512.

¶ 13. Where attorneys appear and participate in the trial of a cause, such action must be construed as a general and not as a special appearance for their client, and hence as rendering proper as against him an amendment at the trial.—Sarmiento v. The Catherine C., 110 Mich. 120.

¶ 14. The notice of retainer filed and served is general in its nature where no limitation appears in it.—National Coal Co. v. Cincinnati Gas Coke, Coal & Mining Co., 168 Mich. 195.

¶ 15. A joint petition for the removal of a cause to the federal court, by defendants not served with process, is not a general appearance as to them.—Schwab v. Mabley, 47 Mich. 512.

¶ 16. An appearance by a solicitor made expressly for the exclusive purpose of demurring to the jurisdiction does not admit it if the bill contains no matter of equitable cognizance.—Woodruff v. Young, 43 Mich. 548.

§ 7. ——Pleading to cause or the merits.

Demurrer for want of equitable jurisdiction, see also ante ¶ 16.

¶ 17. A demurrer is an appearance.— Thompson v. Michigan Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 52 Mich. 522.

¶ 18. A general demurrer is a sufficient appearance to give jurisdiction.—Stevens v. Harris, 99 Mich. 280.

¶ 19. Although professing to appear specially, a defendant who enters a plea and demands a jury waives defects in service of process.—Audretsch v. Hurst, 126 Mich. 301.

¶ 20. Inasmuch as the distinction between pleas to the jurisdiction and pleas in abatement existing at common law are not recognized in this state, the filing of a plea to the jurisdiction by attorney, instead of in person, does not admit jurisdiction.—Fell v. Gorman, 144 Mich. 521.

¶ 21. The plea of the general issue in forcible entry proceedings waives irregularity in summons and venire.—Falkner v. Beers, 2 D. 117.

¶ 21a. Pleading to the merits in replevin waives mere clerical defects in the affidavit. —Baker v. Dubois, 32 Mich. 92.

¶ 22. One who answers a bill for an injunction, and replication is filed and proof taken in open court, voluntarily submits the question to the court and cannot thereafter deny its jurisdiction, since if he wished to raise the question of jurisdiction it was his duty to demur.—F. H. Wolf Brick Co. v. Lonyo, 132 Mich. 162.

¶ 23. A defendant who appears and files his answer to a petition thereby submits himself to the court's jurisdiction.—Dunlap v. Byers, 110 Mich. 109.

¶ 24. A defendant in an action of ejectment who appears and pleads to the merits thereby waives any objection that he was improperly made a party by amendment.—Farrand v. Kavanaugh, 132 Mich. 486.

¶ 25. Where, in a mandamus suit by a subordinate lodge against the grand lodge, the officers of the latter resident in another state appear voluntarily and answer, they submit to the jurisdiction of Michigan courts.—Golden Star Lodge No. 1 v. Watterson, 158 Mich. 696.

§ 8. ——Otherwise invoking or recognising jurisdiction.

Effect as making amendment binding on client, see also ante 13.

Review of judgment rendered for want of appearance, see generally Appeal and Error; Certiorari.

¶ 26. An appearance to obtain a continuance is a waiver of defects in procedure.—Lane v. Leech, 44 Mich. 168.

¶ 27. The consent to the hearing and the effect of appearance of counsel before circuit judge at chambers to oppose motion, upon its merits, making no objection to jurisdiction, will be a bar to a technical objection later to the jurisdiction.—Blair v. Compton, 33 Mich. 414.

¶ 28. A motion for a new trial supported by an affidavit of merits by the defendant operates as a general appearance, thereby waiving defects of service.—Priest v. American Ins. Union, 171 Mich. 321.

¶ 29. The giving of a release bond in an attachment suit is not an appearance so as to waive defects in process.—Reynolds v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 445.

¶ 30. The dissolution of an attachment by giving the statutory bond to pay any judgment recovered in the suit operates as an appearance and converts the suit from one in rem to one in personam, and waives any defects in the affidavit.—Butcher v. Cappon & Bertsch Leather Co., 148 Mich. 552.

¶ 31. Where a defendant garnishee appears and makes disclosure without objecting to the jurisdiction, and examination subsequently proceeded at which counsel appeared and took part and intervention of another defendant was permitted, he cannot thereafter raise the objection that the affidavit for garnishment is defective.—Sachs v. Norn, 139 Mich. 357.

¶ 32. Appearance to a bill or petition to revive a foreclosure suit on an instalment, after payment of the instalment and death of the mortgagor before proceedings for a further decree on a subsequent instalment, is not an appearance in the case; since there is no suit to appear or answer to until revivor is had.—Brown v. Thompson, 29 Mich. 72.

¶ 33. A motion to strike from the files a suggestion of a claim for mesne profits in an action of ejectment because not filed within one year from the docketing of the judgment, and for want of service, does not amount to an appearance so as to waive the question of want of service.—Thomson v. McMorran Milling Co., 132 Mich. 591.

§ 9. Special appearances and reservations.

What are general and what special, see ante §§ 6-8.

Effect of demanding jury after special appearance, see ante ¶ 19.

Form of pleading or motion on special appearance, see Pleading, III.

Appeal or error or certiorari from judgment after special appearance, and reviewable questions thereon, see generally Appeal and Error; Certiorari.

¶ 34. An appearance for the exclusive purpose of demurring to the jurisdiction does not admit it if the substantial matter of the bill is improper for the cognizance of the court. —Woodruff v. Young, 43 Mich. 548.

¶ 35. Appearing to object to the jurisdiction is not, upon an adverse judgment being rendered, a submission to jurisdiction on a general appearance.—Farrow v. Railway Conductors' Co-operative Ass'n, 178 Mich. 639.

¶ 36. Where a defendant appeared to enter default of the plaintiff for not declaring, and the default was set aside under a stipulation that his appearance should not waive any irregularity or defect in the process or proceedings, it was held that the appearance to enter default did not preclude him from making any objection to the proceeding which he could have made on a special appearance to complain of defects.—Stearns v. Taylor, 27 Mich. 88.

¶ 38. While the filing of an appearance might waive the failure to serve process in the manner pointed out by statute, yet seasonable objection to the jurisdiction under a special appearance requires the suit to be dismissed.—Greacen v. Buckley & Douglas Lumber Co., 167 Mich. 569.

¶ 39. Where a garnishee defendant appears specially and moves to open default taken against it and to set aside the writ and its service because by the return of service jurisdiction does not appear, he may raise the point after judgment entered on a further default.—Lyon v. Baldwin, 194 Mich. 118.

¶ 40. A general appearance by a defendant pending a rule granting leave to plaintiff to amend is not a waiver of the defect sought to be amended.—Wheeler v. Wilkins, 19 Mich. 78.

¶ 40a. The plea of the general issue waives only such jurisdictional defects as appear on the face of the declaration.—Segar v. Muskegon Shingle & Lumber Co., 81 Mich. 344.

¶ 41. Appearance and plea on the part of the defendant is not a waiver of the defense of the statute of limitations, although it doubtless is a waiver of jurisdictional questions.—Colling v. McGregor, 144 Mich. 651.

¶ 42. After plea of the general issue defendant cannot urge that there was an assignment for the sole purpose of suing in a county other than his residence.—Hicks v. Steel, 126 Mich. 408.

¶ 42a. By voluntarily appearing and pleading to the merits one waives all defects in irregularities in the service and return of process, and he cannot thereafter object to the manner in which he was brought into court. —Crane v. Hardy, 1 Mich. 56; Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415; Pardee v. Smith, 27 Mich. 33; Manhard v. Schott, 37 Mich. 234; Bryant v. Hendee, 40 Mich. 543; Austin v. Burroughs, 62 Mich. 181; Dailey v. Kennedy, 64 Mich. 208.

¶ 42b. Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a suit, it is a general rule that a plea to the merits waives irregularities in obtaining jurisdiction of the person. —Watkins v. Plummer, 93 Mich. 215.

¶ 42c. Where jurisdictional objections may be waived, a party cannot go to trial upon the merits and afterwards question the jurisdiction.—Home Ins. Co. of Columbus, Ohio, v. Curtis, 32 Mich. 402.

¶ 42d. A plea in bar is a waiver of an objection to the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction.—Webb v. Mann, 3 Mich. 139.

¶ 42e. One who pleads the general issue submits to the jurisdiction and cannot first raise the question thereof in the Supreme Court.—Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Gray, 38 Mich. 461; Gott v. Brigham, 41 Mich. 227.

¶ 42f. A general demurrer waives objections to jurisdiction of the person.—Thompson v. Michigan Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 52 Mich. 522.

¶ 42g. If one appears as administrator when he is not named as such, and pleads the general issue, he cannot deny the jurisdiction.—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 Mich. 330.

¶ 42h. After a defendant in a transitory action has pleaded in bar of the action, and thus submitted himself to the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction, he must be held to have waived the question of jurisdiction of the person.—Johnson v. Burke, 167 Mich. 349.

Appearance in habeas corpus as waiver of statutory notice, see Habeas Corpus.

¶ 43. A plea to the general issue and trial upon the merits is a waiver of any objection of want of jurisdiction of the defendant by reason of defective service.—Clute v. Everhart, 137 Mich. 5.

¶ 44. Ordinarily a respondent who appears and pleads issuably cannot complain afterwards that the court has not acquired jurisdiction of the case, provided the cause is of a character within the power of the court to try.—Attorney General ex rel. Wolverine Fish Co. v. A. Booth & Co., 143 Mich. 89.

¶ 45. General appearance waives all irregularities in previous process.—Gunn Hardware Co. v. Denison, 83 Mich. 40.

¶ 45a. When defendant pleads to the merits the character of the process used to commence the action becomes immaterial.—Miller v. Rosier, 31 Mich. 475.

¶ 45b. One who joins issue, and goes to hearing on the merits, is generally understood to waive objections to the process which he does not distinctly make known.—Maxwell v. Deems, 46 Mich. 35.

¶ 45c. Appearing in an action of replevin and pleading to the merits will waive the objection that the writ was returnable on Sunday.—Pierce v. Rehfuss, 35 Mich. 53.

¶ 45d. By appearing and joining issue in replevin defendant waives the right to have the writ set aside for defects in the affidavit and bond.—Clark v. Dunlap, 50 Mich. 492.

¶ 45e. Appearance in response to a summons to answer a complaint waives the informality where the proper process should have been an order to show cause.—Curran v. Norris, 58 Mich. 512.

¶ 46. A general appearance in circuit court on appeal gives jurisdiction, and is a waiver of the right to insist on a dismissal for mere formal defects.—Sherwood v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 107 Mich. 136.

¶ 47. The publication of an order in a suit for divorce for the appearance of a nonresident defendant is unnecessary where defendant appears by solicitor after the order is granted.—Long v. Long, 59 Mich. 296.

¶ 48. Consent to an order of court takes the place of process to bring the party consenting within the jurisdiction.—Durfee v. Abbott, 50 Mich. 278.

¶ 49. Defective service is waived by pleading the general issue after the denial of a motion to quash, excepting in cases in which the party is deprived of his liberty.—Improved Match Co. v. Michigan Mut. F. Ins. Co., 122 Mich. 256.

¶ 50. Suit was begun by attachment under the usual affidavit to recover on a past-due account, and also under an affidavit filed under How. St., § 8016a, for the amount of a note not yet due. Held, that after appearing and pleading without objection defendant could not object on the trial to the introduction of the note in evidence because not due when suit was begun and because the special affidavit was insufficient.—Gunn Hardware Co. v. Dennison, 83 Mich. 40.

¶ 51. A nonresident foreclosure defendant proceeded against by advertisement, who was permitted to come in and defend more than three years after the decree against him thereby appears and waives objection that the order for his appearance as a nonresident was not in compliance with the statute.—Stone v. Welling, 14 Mich. 514.

¶ 51a. If a defendant whose motion, on special appearance, to quash the proceedings for defective service, is overruled, pleads to the action and goes to trial on the merits, he waives his objection and submits himself to the jurisdiction.—Dailey v. Kennedy, 64 Mich. 208.

¶ 52. The attorneys for defendant in a suit for libel, after putting in and perfecting special bail and entering the appearance of defendant, moved to quash and dismiss the proceedings, upon the ground that the affidavit to hold to bail conferred no jurisdiction upon the court to issue the writ or make an order to hold to bail. Held, that the general appearance waived all defects as to the right to maintain the suit for damages, and that the motion was properly denied.—Graham v. Cass Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 425.

¶ 53. An application for a rehearing on the ground that the court sustained service in the lower court under an act which was not in force at the time of the service, is denied where the record shows defendant entered a general appearance.—Young v. Reeves & Co., 172 Mich. 363.

¶ 54. A defendant served with process while in a county temporarily in an action upon a claim assigned to the plaintiff for the purpose of jurisdiction, cannot raise the question of jurisdiction after a plea of the general issue.—Hicks v. Steel, 126 Mich. 408.

§ 12. ——Effect on collateral proceedings.

On foreclosure of appearance to petition for revivor, see ante ¶ 32.

¶ 55. A general appearance entered in an action at law by defendants before they learned of an unauthorized chancery order permitting the complainant in a suit in equity to begin such action, but restraining all proceedings in the law court, after service of process, does not estop defendants from contesting the validity of such order.—Foster v. Kent Circuit Judge, 116 Mich. 285.

¶ 56. Waiver of jurisdictional defects by appearance does not give validity to a pending collateral proceeding in garnishment, if the latter would otherwise be void on account of such defect.—Isabelle v. Iron Cliffs Co., 57 Mich. 120; Iron Cliffs Co. v. Lahais, 52 Mich. 394.

¶ 1. Experts selected to pass upon [illegible] designs submitted according to invitation are not arbitrators and the law of arbitration has no application to their mode of proceeding or to their action.—Donaldson v. Detroit Museum of Art, 72 Mich. 82.

¶ 2. The law favors the settlement of [illegible] by arbitration.—Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. v. Hughes, 25 Mich. 136. Overruling Switzer v. Fletcher, 47 Mich. 333.

¶ 3. While an agreement to abide by the statement of a third person as to a disputed fact, as a reference to a third person to make a mere clerical computation from an agreed state of facts—such as the computation of interest upon a note—may not be considered analogous to a submission to arbitration, yet where witnesses are examined and the person to whom the submission is made is called upon to exercise his best judgment upon the matter in controversy, and to decide conclusively between the parties according to the law and the facts upon a consideration of testimony and arguments to be submitted to him, this must be considered a case of arbitration.—Backus v. Coyne, 35 Mich. 5.

¶ 4. A claim that is illegal and forbidden by statute, e. g., a contract to pay more than $10 for services in securing a pension, cannot be made the subject of arbitration.—Hall v. Kimmer, 61 Mich. 269.

as to the title in fee of lands whose ownership is disputed, is beyond their jurisdiction, and an award involving such determination cannot be sustained or enforced, nor can a judgment based upon it be upheld.—Gallagher v. Kern, 31 Mich. 138.

¶ 6. A controversy as to the ownership of a strip of land one hundred and eight feet wide claimed by both parties in fee simple is, by How. St., § 8475, excluded from arbitration. Award and judgment set aside.—Lang v. Salliotte, 79 Mich. 505.

¶ 7. Damages for a right of flowage are a proper subject of statutory arbitration, since Comp. L. 1871, § 6890, only excludes freehold estate.—Fitch v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 44 Mich. 74.

¶ 8. A parol submission to arbitration is good at common law and is not forbidden by statute.—Cady v. Walker, 62 Mich. 157.

¶ 9. An arbitration which was intended to but does not conform to the statutory requirements may nevertheless be good at common law.—Galloway v. Gibson, 51 Mich. 185.

¶ 10. If an agreement to submit to arbitration contains no covenant not to sue, or that the award shall be made the foundation of a judgment, it is for a common-law arbitration and enforceable only by action.—McGunn v. Hanlin, 29 Mich. 476.

¶ 11. A mere agreement to arbitrate does not preclude a resort to a court of justice, and cannot be pleaded in bar. Such agreements will not be specifically enforced, nor will the arbitrators be compelled to act.—McGunn v. Hanlin, 29 Mich. 476.

¶ 12. A dispute as to the liability of a contractor for liquidated damages for delay in completing a building, held not within a provision of a contract requiring the submission of differences to arbitration.—Maurer v. School Dist. No. 1, 186 Mich. 223.

¶ 13. A contract for sale of 13,000 acres of land for the consideration of $3.50 per acre on a basis of 5,000 feet of standing timber per acre and agreeing to the making of an estimate by estimators to be appointed by the parties and increase or decrease of price in proportion to the amount of timber on the land, cannot be construed as a submission to arbitration but is a mere collateral part of the contract irrevocable by either party.—Noble v. Grandin, 125 Mich. 383.

¶ 14. An agreement for the settlement of a contest of a will, is not invalid because one of the children was not a party to the agreement though interested in the settlement of the estate, where she did not make herself a party to the controversy, and the award of the arbitrators under the agreement did not determine her rights.—Hoste v. Dalton, 137 Mich. 522.

§ 5. ——Statutory submission and requisites thereof.

Defective submission good as one at common law, see ante § 3.

Bond good as common-law bond, see post ¶ 101.
Necessity of acknowledgment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 13648.

¶ 15. Under express provisions of Comp. L. 1871, § 6891, there must be an acknowledgment, else the award cannot sustain judgment. —Gibson v. Burrows, 41 Mich. 713.

¶ 16. A submission under R. S., 1838, was not required to be under seal.—City of Detroit v. Jackson, 1 D. 106.

¶ 17. Where the execution by a municipality party to an arbitration agreement under the statute was by P., "mayor of said city," the certificate of the officer taking the acknowledgment of the agreement, that such party appeared before him by such agent, for that purpose duly appointed, and acknowledged the same, is sufficient evidence of the execution of the agreement, and of the authority of the agent, to authorize the arbitrators to act, and the circuit court to render judgment upon their award.—City of Detroit v. Jackson, 1 D. 106.

¶ 18. An acknowledgment of voluntary submission to an arbitration is irregular if not made until after the arbitrators have begun their work, but if made before they have finished it may be allowed for the purpose of sustaining a statutory judgment on the award.—Davis v. Berger, 54 Mich. 652.

¶ 19. An acknowledgment is not invalidated because it is unnecessarily made on oath.—Davis v. Berger, 54 Mich. 652.

¶ 20. Parties to an amicable settlement may be presumed to intend that which they execute; and if it is lawful and practicable a mere mistake as to statutory requisites should not prevent its execution in some suitable proceeding.—Galloway v. Gibson, 51 Mich. 135.

§ 6. ——Revocation and withdrawal.

Necessity of consent, see Comp. L. 1915, § 13668.

¶ 22. Either party to an arbitration may revoke the authority of the arbitrator, and this he may do notwithstanding the agreement to arbitrate is valid.—Chippewa Lumber Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 116.

¶ 23. A common-law agreement for arbitration is revocable by either party and is revoked by bringing suit.—Nurney v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 63 Mich. 633.

¶ 24. A contract for the erection of a building provided that the contractor, under the direction and to the satisfaction of the architect, "acting, for the purposes of the contract, as agent of the owner," should provide all materials, etc.; that, if alterations were made in the plans, the value of the work added or omitted should be computed by the architect, and the amount so ascertained added to or deducted from the contract price; that, in case of dissent from such award by either party, the valuation of such work should be referred to three disinterested arbitrators, whose decision should be final. Held, that the arbitration clause was not revocable as a general agreement to submit all differences, but was specific as to the disputed alterations and was valid, and binding upon the parties.—Weggner v. Greenstine, 114 Mich. 310.

§ 7. Waiver of contract right to have arbitration.

Revocation of submission, see ante § 6.
Waiver of unanimous decision, see also post ¶ 48.
Stipulations for arbitration before resort to action occur most frequently in contracts of insurance, and the effect of such a stipulation on the right to sue is treated in Insurance, XX, A.

¶ 25. Mere silence or forbearance to claim arbitration made a condition precedent to action on a policy does not amount to a waiver of it.—Chippewa Lumber Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 116.

¶ 26. Where the right to have arbitration is dependent on the making of a request for it, a failure to request it is a waiver.—Nurney v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 63 Mich. 633.

¶ 27. A waiver of the right to have arbitration, reserved by contract, necessarily implies a waiver of all the conditions dependent upon it, and leaves the parties in the same situation as they would be in if they had made no agreement to arbitrate.—Chippewa Lumber Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 116.

¶ 28. An arbitrator chosen by a lessee as one of three to fix the rent to be paid is not incompetent because of an opinion favorable to the lessee expressed by him upon the lease five years before, there being no showing that at the time of his acting as arbitrator he had any opinion such as would influence his judgment.—Brush v. Fisher, 70 Mich. 469.

¶ 29. Whatever objection there was to two arbitrators selecting the third by lot was waived where, with knowledge of the mode of choice, the parties submitted the controversy without objection to the three arbitrators.—Brush v. Fisher, 70 Mich. 469.

¶ 30. The oaths of arbitrators need not be in writing.—Davis v. Berger, 54 Mich. 652.

¶ 31. Arbitrators ought not to undertake any care or charge whatever of property and business that is under their arbitration.—Gallagher v. Kern, 31 Mich. 138.

Summoning and attendance of witnesses, see Comp. L. 1915, § 13651.
Rehearing on order of court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 13657.

¶ 32. It is improper for counsel of one party to make, opposing counsel being absent, further argument to arbitrators whose decision has been intimated to him, and it is further improper for him to intimate his own opinion as to the error of the proposed award, to the arbitrator selected by his client.—Lattin v. Gamble, 154 Mich. 177.

¶ 33. Courts are not inclined to interfere with the doings of arbitrators on any technical ground, or to bind them to the nice rules of pleading and evidence or the principles of decision which control the action of more formal tribunals, or to review the original controversy on the merits; nor will the real determination be disturbed for mere error of judgment of the arbitrators upon any matter within the scope of the submission, where no fraud has intervened nor such a mistake as would seem to have caused the case to be so far misapprehended that the declared result does not express the real judgment of the arbitrators upon it.—Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. v. Hughes, 28 Mich. 186.

¶ 34. Where an arbitrator is furnished with a memorandum of authorities by one of the parties after the closing of the testimony and after a stipulation that neither party should be represented by counsel, the award will be set aside without any examination by the court as to whether the arbitrator was in any way influenced by the ex parte communication. Communications of law as well as fact offend the rule.—Hewitt v. Village of Reed City, 124 Mich. 6.

¶ 35. The adjournment of an arbitration is within the power of the arbitrators, and where the continuance of a lease depends upon the result of the arbitration such an adjournment cannot deprive the tenants of their rights.—Abeel v. Hubbell, 52 Mich. 37.

¶ 36. Persons selected to ascertain the value of a pier which one of the parties was to pay for are merely appraisers and their action merely an appraisal, where they are to base it on an inspection of the pier by themselves; and accordingly it is not requisite that the parties be summoned or notified to be present when that is done.—James v. Schroeder, 61 Mich. 28.

¶ 37. Where a bill is filed to redeem from a mortgage on tender of an award as part payment, and the answer admits the submission, and that the parties mutually executed bonds to abide the award, the validity of which it attacks only on the ground that the arbitrators "did not award in accordance with the submission," which ground the defendant in his testimony abandons, and alleges invalidity because the arbitrators, after hearing part of the case, adjourned to a specified day, or to the first rainy day, and then, without sufficient notice to him, met at an earlier day and made their award—the evidence showing, however, that he not only had actual notice of the last meeting, but purposely disregarded it, and secretly tried to induce one of the arbitrators to withdraw from the arbitration—the award will not for such reasons be held invalid.—Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 Mich. 305.

¶ 38. A clause in the submission bond submitting all controversies between the parties, and "all matters relating thereto," would seem to import authority in the arbitrators to award concerning the costs of the arbitration.—Clement v. Comstock, 2 Mich. 359.

¶ 39. An award that in no manner conforms to the submission must be disregarded. —Sawtells v. Howard, 104 Mich. 54.

¶ 40. As a general rule, all three arbitrators must agree on an award; and decision by only two is not binding.—Lattin v. Gamble, 154 Mich. 177.

¶ 41. An award is invalid if not executed by each arbitrator in the presence of all the others.—Daniels v. Ripley, 10 Mich. 237; French v. Butler, 39 Mich. 79.

¶ 42. An award is valid if signed by two arbitrators in accordance with a submission requiring execution by a majority.—Cooper v. Andrews, 44 Mich. 94; Fitch v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 44 Mich. 74.

¶ 43. Where, in an action upon an award by arbitrators against a mutual benefit association had pursuant to the contract of insurance, the defence is that the award was signed by only two of the three arbitrators, it cannot be claimed that defendant's failure to produce its by-laws at the hearing before the arbitrators waived the signing by all the arbitrators as required by the by-laws; since by the contract itself the award is invalid.—Russell v. North American Ben. Ass'n, 116 Mich. 699.

¶ 44. An award made by a lawyer in pursuance of a parol submission by parties resorting to him as a common arbiter is valid. —Cady v. Walker, 62 Mich. 157.

Effect as bar of things necessarily implied, see post § 19.

¶ 45. An award to be binding must be certain. The certainty required is certainty to a common intent. Courts will not intend an award to be uncertain, but the uncertainty must appear on the face of the award or by averment.—Clement v. Comstock, 2 Mich. 359.

¶ 46. An award that is definite enough to be binding if it were a contract is sufficiently definite.—Bush v. Davis, 34 Mich. 190.

¶ 47. An award directing the return of property, but not expressly determining the title to it or directing releases to be executed, is sufficiently certain.—Clement v. Comstock, 2 Mich. 359.

¶ 48. Articles of arbitration based on settlement of a suit and an award pursuant to them will not prevent a judgment, though no court is mentioned.—Fitch v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 44 Mich. 74.

¶ 49. An agreement to arbitrate if an agreement was not reached on the amount of damages to be paid for flowage, the award to fix damages and provide for a conveyance, followed by articles of arbitration which do not provide for a conveyance, does not require the award to so provide.—Fitch v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 44 Mich. 74.

§ 12. ——Delivery, filing or publication.

Tardy delivery as discharging liability on bond, see post § 18.
Filing in court and confirmation, see Comp. L. 1915, § 13653.

¶ 50. An award is valid though not made and ready for delivery until a late hour in the evening of the last day for completion.—Clement v. Comstock, 2 Mich. 359.

¶ 51. The arbitrators may retain the award in their hands until paid costs awarded where authority was given to include costs. —Clement v. Comstock, 2 Mich. 359.

¶ 52. The failure to file an award within the time specified in an arbitration agreement, is no ground for setting aside such award where the agreement did not provide that the award should be void if it was not made within the time appointed.—Patrick v. Batten, 123 Mich. 203.

§ 13. ——Interpretation and effect.

Necessity of certainty, see ante § 11.
Relief against defective part of award, see post § 15.
Strength of evidence required to impeach award, see post § 17.
Award as equivalent to account stated, see Account Stated, § 1, ¶ 6, § 2, ¶ 13.

¶ 53. Awards are to be liberally construed, and all presumptions are to be made in favor of their validity.—Clement v. Comstock, 2 Mich. 359; Bush v. Davis, 34 Mich. 190.

¶ 54. An award will not be deemed void on the ground of failure to find the amount due at its date, where all the elements are found and set forth so that it is a matter of the simplest computation to determine the exact amount.—Bush v. Davis, 34 Mich. 190.

¶ 55. An award in the alternative (both alternatives being certain) is not void for uncertainty. Where one of the alternatives is certain, and the other uncertain or impossible to be performed, the award has been held good, for the party could perform its requirements by performing that which was certain.—Clement v. Comstock, 2 Mich. 359.

¶ 56. Where an award of arbitrators leaves the amount due from one party to the other to be determined from an examination of certain books of account, and such accounts are so incomplete that the amount awarded cannot be ascertained without something more than computation, the award is void for uncertainty.—Mather v. Day, 106 Mich. 371.

¶ 57. Where the award was that C. and H. should redeliver to B. all the personal property which they had taken by virtue of two chattel mortgages (describing said mortgages), and also by a certain writ of replevin (specifying it), held, that as the presumption was that the mortgages and replevin writ showed what the property was, the award in that respect was sufficiently certain.—Clement v. Comstock, 2 Mich. 359.

¶ 58. An award that is so uncertain and ambiguous in some of its parts that it cannot be enforced is void in toto, although sufficiently definite in other respects; and especially is this so in a case where it was the intent of the parties that all differences existing between them with reference to the subject-matter of the submission should be determined by the arbitrators.—Mather v. Day, 106 Mich. 371.

¶ 59. An unauthorized decision as to costs avoids award for the excess only.—Clement v. Comstock, 2 Mich. 359.

¶ 60. Notwithstanding that How. St., § 8474, excepts married women from its provisions authorizing arbitration a submission signed by both husband and wife, with an award may bind him if she has no interest, other than as wife, in the matters submitted and joined only because of such relationship.—Taylor v. Smith, 93 Mich. 160.

¶ 61. Where a provision of an award evidently leaves a particular obligation between the parties to rest upon the contract which created it, and which, for that purpose, was to be left in full force, and not merged or extinguished in the award, such provision does not prevent a specific money award made from constituting an equitable set-off to the mortgage debt which is the subject of the arbitration. The two clauses or provisions may be independent of each other.—Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 Mich. 305.

¶ 62. Where a submission is general as to all controversies between the parties, the court will intend, until the contrary appears, that the arbitrators decided all matters in difference.—Clement v. Comstock, 2 Mich. 359.

¶ 63. An award of arbitrators that there is due the plaintiffs as subcontractors for work on two buildings two specified sums and that the payment thereof is subject to discharging any and all liens, including costs, against the buildings or property on which they are situated, which liens have been served by any materialman or subcontractor serving the plaintiff, is final and definite and certain where the law fixes the place where claims of liens should be filed and the time in which they must be filed, and such time has expired, and the number and amount of the liens is easily ascertainable.—Pigott-Healy Const. Co. v. H. A. Jones Real Estate Co., 201 Mich. 102.

¶ 64. The award of arbitrators, under the statute, is an official act, and is itself the evidence and authority upon which the court may render judgment.—City of Detroit v. Jackson, 1 D. 106.

¶ 65. Judgment confirming an award cannot be refused by the court except for a reason specified in How. St., § 8482; the court cannot vacate an award merely because in its opinion the ends of justice require such action.—Phelps v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 117 Mich. 35.

¶ 66. A judgment confirming an award need not repeat a provision therein explicitly requiring one of the parties to release certain claims.—Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. v. Hughes, 28 Mich. 186.

¶ 67. Where the subject-matter of a pending suit was submitted to arbitrators, whose award by their stipulation was to have "the effect of a verdict, and that judgment should be rendered on said award as on a verdict," held, that as the court had power under the statute to render judgment on the award of the arbitrators, that part of the record anterior to the submission might be rejected by the court though not sufficient to support a verdict.—Vanderhoof v. Dean, 1 Mich. 463.

¶ 68. The judgment of a court upon an award made by arbitrators cannot be said to be inconsistent with the award because it provides for the payment of the costs of the court to be taxed, while the award provided that the expenses and charges of the arbitration should be mutually borne and paid by the parties; the costs in the court and the expenses of arbitration are different things. —Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. v. Hughes, 28 Mich. 186.

¶ 69. A judgment is in conformity with the award of arbitrators for construction work performed by subcontractors, where the award is for a specified sum subject to the subcontractor's paying all liens which have been served by any materialman or subcontractor serving the subcontractors and the judgment is for the amount of the award less liens in specified sums in favor of specified parties who have furnished materials to and performed labor upon the buildings for the subcontractors.—Pigott-Healy Const Co. v. H. A. Jones Real Estate Co., 201 Mich. 102.

Motion to vacate or modify in court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 13656.

¶ 70. The prosecution of a motion to confirm an award, may be carried on although such action at law is at peril of being set aside in equity on a bill pending before the same judge on the other side of the court.—Early v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 166 Mich. 517.

¶ 71. Where the defeated party has invoked the aid of the chancery court to set aside an award, he is not required to pursue the remedy of a motion to vacate said award afforded under 3 Comp. L. 1897, § 10932.—Early v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 166 Mich. 517.

¶ 72. Where it is possible, relief may be granted against the defects in an award separately without disturbing the award as a whole.—Beam v. Macomber, 33 Mich. 127.

¶ 73. The statutory remedy against an award is, under Comp. L. 1871, § 6896 et seq., by motion to vacate made at the next term, and the court may vacate it for cause, or order a rehearing, or modify and correct the award in certain cases.—Cooper v. Andrews, 44 Mich. 94.

¶ 74. Where the evidence on which an award is based is not reported, it cannot be determined under How. St., § 8483 (which authorizes the court in certain cases to modify or correct an award), whether such award is excessive.—Taylor v. Smith, 93 Mich. 160.

§ 16. ——Separate actions or suits.

Concurrent action and motion for confirmation or to vacate, see ante § 15.
Effect of chancery proceeding for relief as staying motion or proceeding on law side for enforcement, see Stay of Proceedings, I.

¶ 75. A common-law award is enforceable only by action.—McGunn v. Hanlin, 29 Mich. 476.

¶ 76. A common-law action will lie to enforce a common-law award if it fairly disposes of the matters in controversy and leaves nothing open.—Galloway v. Gibson, 51 Mich. 135.

¶ 77. Where an award does not conform to the statute, it is enforceable, if at all, by bill or action as a cause of action, and not as a substitute for a verdict.—Gibson v. Burrows, 41 Mich. 713.

¶ 78. Equity has original jurisdiction to set aside an award; and Comp. L. 1897, § 10932 et seq., providing for the vacation of an award by the law courts does not show want of jurisdiction in equity when construed with section 10945 providing that the power of the chancery court shall not be impaired or diminished.—Kearney v. Washtenaw Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 126 Mich. 246.

¶ 79. The circuit court in chancery has jurisdiction to set aside an award of arbitrators.—Early v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 166 Mich. 517.

¶ 80. Where arbitrators actually pass their judgment upon the subject-matter submitted to them, strictly in accordance with the intention of the parties, but the award as written fails to express that judgment, the mistake will be held of a clerical nature; and a court of equity has the power to correct the same and decree a specific performance.—Buys v. Eberhardt, 3 Mich. 524.

¶ 81. Where members of a church submitted a business difficulty to an arbitration according to the rule of their church, the submission not defining the controversy and not making provision as to finality of the award, and after the making of a second award the bishop thought that the same was appealable, though the first might have been insisted on, held, in an action to enforce such award, that the parties would be held to have intended not a common-law arbitration, but one subject to the rules of their church as interpreted by its officers, and that therefore the award could not be enforced by the courts.—Rawlinson v. Shaw, 124 Mich. 340.

¶ 82. No legal objection exists to the prosecution of proceedings on the one side to enforce, and on the other to set aside, an award, although manifestly action at law to enforce the award is at peril of having the award set aside in equity, where it appears that the complainant in equity will not suffer injury if the award is confirmed and where it may be assumed that the proceedings will be so controlled that neither party will be damaged.—Early v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 168 Mich. 451.

¶ 83. In an action on an award under an insurance policy it is proper to put in evidence the proofs of loss and the submission and award.—Haslinger v. Long Island Ins. Co., 62 Mich. 144.

¶ 84. In an action on a common-law award made by a lawyer as arbitrator, he may prove the award, it not being a privileged matter under the circumstances.—Cady v. Walker, 62 Mich. 157.

§ 17. ——Grounds for relief, and evidence of grounds.

Land titles involved, see also ante ¶ 6.
Nonparticipation of joint party, see also ante ¶ 14.
Conduct of hearing by arbitrators and misconduct thereat, see ante § 9.
Delay in delivery or filing, see ante § 12.
General law of duress, fraud or mistake, see Duress; Fraud; Mistake.

¶ 85. An award of arbitrators will not be opened for any small or light occasion; but fraud and mistake may furnish grounds for equitable interference.—Beam v. Macomber, 33 Mich. 127.

¶ 86. Equity has power to relieve against awards in some cases where there has been fraud or misconduct in the arbitrators, or they have acted under manifest mistake; but generally awards are not interfered with by the courts.—Port Huron & N. W. R. Co. v. Callanan, 61 Mich. 22.

¶ 87. The courts will not review the amount of an award deliberately made merely for excess, where it does not appear that it was outrageous and beyond reason.—Port Huron & N. W. R. Co. v. Callanan, 61 Mich. 22.

¶ 88. An award will not be disturbed for allowing interest at ten per cent, unless the record discloses that the allowance of such interest was beyond the scope of the submission.—Bush v. Davis, 34 Mich. 100.

¶ 89. Where partners keep separate account of their own matters, and submit their final accounting to arbitrators, the wilful omission of either to lay before the arbitrators his full knowledge of the facts amounts to legal fraud vitiating the award.—Beam v. Macomber, 33 Mich. 127.

¶ 90. Where the subject-matter of a pending suit in replevin was submitted to an arbitrator, whose award failed to determine in whom the general property in the article was at the time it was replevied, so that the court could not know from the award what judgment to give, it was held to be a case where the arbitrator had imperfectly executed his powers, and that the award should be vacated.—Davidson v. Gunsolly, 1 Mich. 388.

¶ 91. It was submitted to arbitrators to determine the value of certain real estate of one of the parties, at which valuation the other party was at his option to purchase the same. The arbitrators, by omitting to take into consideration the value of a water power connected with the property, appraised it at much less than its actual value. For this mistake the award was set aside.—Buys v. Eberhardt, 3 Mich. 524.

¶ 92. A lessee covenanted to make certain improvements and to pay the taxes, the rent to be fixed by agreement or arbitration at intervals of five years. An award at the end of one of the intervals took no account, in fixing the rent, of the increased value of the land, the taxes also having increased. Held, no showing of partiality or misconduct, such as would warrant a court in setting aside the award.—Brush v. Fisher, 70 Mich. 469.

¶ 93. Under an arbitration agreement between a landlord and tenant, not specifying any particular question in dispute but covering all questions in dispute and providing that the premises and all crops growing thereon should be surrendered, an award will not be set aside at the instance of the landlord granting the tenant a claim for improvements made by him and damages for surrendering the lease.—Patrick v. Batten, 123 Mich. 203.

¶ 94. Strong evidence is required to impeach a result on which the arbitrators heard the parties and exercised their judgment, and where there was no concealment of facts.—Beam v. Macomber, 33 Mich. 127.

¶ 95. An award signed by two of three arbitrators was set aside in equity, where the evidence overwhelmingly showed that it had been agreed that the provisions that an award by two should be binding was to be stricken out; although plaintiff's agent failed to strike out one of such provisions, and although complainant retained a copy of the agreement and might have discovered the mistake.—McCurdy v. Daniell, 135 Mich. 55.

¶ 96. An award of $740 is not stamped as so grossly inadequate as to show constructively that it must have been fraudulent or corrupt by the fact that appraisers some time later when conditions might have changed for the worse, and who had poorer facilities for knowing all the facts, reached an inventory showing that the amount was $7,000.—Michels v. Western Underwriters Ass'n, 129 Mich. 417.

¶ 97. In a suit to set aside an award between an insurer and insured as false, fraudulent and corrupt, the record discloses no evidence of fraud or corruption, where it appears that experienced and disinterested men under oath, one appointed by each party, spent several days examining the property, taking statements, and making the award.—Michels v. Western Underwriters Ass'n, 129 Mich. 417.

¶ 98. An award on a submitted issue of the value of land to be taken for public use will not be disturbed on a bill to vacate it on bare proof that the land owner caused false rumors as to the value of similar or adjacent lands to reach the jury of twelve acting as arbitrators, where it does not appear that a majority, whom the submission allowed to act, failed to act upon their own judgment, and where there is nothing to indicate tampering or fraud.—Port Huron & N. W. R. Co. v. Callanan, 61 Mich. 22.

¶ 99. Under an arbitration agreement between a landlord and tenant, not specifying any particular question in dispute but covering all questions in dispute and providing that the premises and all crops growing thereon should be surrendered, the tenant was not prevented from claiming and recovering for improvements made by him and damages for surrendering the lease, and the landlord could not in proceedings to set aside the award, by ex parte affidavits establish what it was agreed should or should not have been submitted.—Patrick v. Batten, 123 Mich. 203.

¶ 100. One of three arbitrators was appointed by counsel for one of the parties, and refused to accede to the decision of the other two. It appeared that in fact there were errors pointed out by the dissenting arbitrator, in the decision of the other two. Held, that the evidence did not establish that the disagreement was procured by counsel, so as to modify the general rule requiring all three arbitrators to assent to the award, and so as to make the decision of two binding.—Lattin v. Gamble, 154 Mich. 177.

§ 18. Liability and suits on bonds.

Bond as the instrument of submission, see ante §§ 3-6.

¶ 101. A submission bond with condition that judgment may be rendered on the award in a court of record is valid as a common-law bond, where it is evident from the conduct of the parties that they did not intend to make it a statutory arbitration, and they did not pursue the forms requisite for that purpose.—Clement v. Comstock, 2 Mich. 359.

¶¶ 102, 103. A bond for arbitration was conditioned on the performance of an award to be made on or before a certain date at an hour named, and the submission and hearing were begun after that hour, and the award was not made until afternoon of the day. Held, that there could be no recovery on the bond for the nonperformance of the award.—Elliot v. Hanson, 39 Mich. 157.

¶ 104. A bond to pay the amount to be fixed by appraisers as the value of a pier and conditioned to be void if the party should pay it "in ninety days from the date when said referees shall make their report" is not limited by the terms of an undated agreement not executed simultaneously, which provided for the submission and required the report to "be ready for the parties hereto * * * within thirty days from date hereof."—James v. Schroeder, 61 Mich. 28.

¶ 105. An award may conclude the parties on the question of the right of possession and ownership of chattels.—McArthur v. Oliver, 53 Mich. 299.

¶ 106. Where an arbitration fails and litigation is begun, the decree therein cannot properly be based upon an award of the arbitrators, made out of time and not relied upon by either party.—Alpena Lumber Co. v. Fletcher, 48 Mich. 555.

¶ 107. In an action to recover money alleged to have been paid under a mistake, the finding of an arbitrator to whom the matter was submitted under an agreement that his decision should not be binding, is not admissible.—Truax v. Bliss, 139 Mich. 153.

¶ 108. If an award by arbitrators requires the plaintiff to execute releases of certain claims found against him, it is wholly unnecessary to insert an order requiring it in the judgment of a court confirming the award; where the claims and the final decision rejecting them, together with the arbitrators' explicit decision that they shall be released, clearly and fully appear on the record, and the determination of the arbitrators is confirmed by the circuit court and the confirmation is acquiesced in by the defendant in error, the claims are released and the judgment is a complete bar of record.—Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. v. Hughes, 28 Mich. 186.

¶ 109. Though a married woman could not under the statute submit to arbitration, yet where she has had the benefit of performance by the opposite party she is estopped to claim that it was void because she joined therein with her husband.—Taylor v. Smith, 93 Mich. 160.

¶ 110. Where, after an award has been rendered upon a matter submitted to arbitration, the parties agree to another arbitration of the disputed matter, the previous award is waived, and no action lies upon it, nor can it be set up as a defence in an action brought upon the original claim.—Rawlinson v. Shaw, 117 Mich. 5.

¶ 111. A mere agreement to arbitrate cannot be pleaded in bar.—McGunn v. Hanlin, 29 Mich. 476.

¶ 112. A mere agreement to arbitrate does not prevent one from suing.—Chadwick v. Phoenix Accident & Sick Benefit Ass'n, 143 Mich. 481.

¶ 113. A mere agreement to submit to arbitration the subject-matter of a pending suit does not operate as a discontinuance where there has been no award.—Callanan v. Port Huron & N. W. R. Co., 61 Mich. 15.

¶ 1. In an action for personal injuries where there is some evidence of the plaintiff's neglect of injuries and disregard of her physician's instructions after the accident, it is error to preclude the defendant's counsel's arguing the question to the jury.—Zibbell v. City of Grand Rapids, 129 Mich. 659.

§ 3. Opening statement or address.

Construction and effect of opening statement in reviewing verdict directed thereon, see Appeal and Error, §§ 386, 387.

¶ 2. The object of counsel's opening statement is to assist the jury to understand the testimony as it is introduced, and the bearing it has upon the issues involved.—Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413.

¶ 3. In an action of assumpsit for work and labor, it is not error for plaintiff's attorney in opening the case to the jury, to refresh his recollection from an account book. —Hunkins v. Kent, 151 Mich. 482.

¶ 4. An opening to the jury may be so unfair in its statement of irrelevant facts, and so well calculated to prejudice the jury improperly, as to justify setting aside a verdict obtained by the party making it. But the Supreme Court will not reverse a judgment for an unfair opening except in a very plain case.—Porter v. Throop, 47 Mich. 313.

¶ 5. Allowing an improper opening of a case may be such an abuse of discretion as to warrant reversal.—Scripps v. Reilly, 35 Mich. 371.

§ 4. ——Scope and latitude.

¶ 6. The opening statement cannot cover a case not made by the declaration.—Douglas v. Marsh, 141 Mich. 209.

¶ 7. Counsel have the right in opening the case to the jury to state in good faith their claims as to what the law may be in so far as may be necessary to give to the jury an understanding of the theory propounded. They are not limited to stating facts to be proved. —Prentis v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234, modifying on rehearing 88 Mich. 567.

¶ 8. An opening statement of a case to the jury includes neither an argument of the facts nor a discussion of the law of the case. —Wells v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 184 Mich. 1.

¶ 9. In an action for a negligent injury counsel may, in his opening to the jury, explain the evidence he intends to introduce by showing a diagram of the premises.—Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 494.

¶ 10. An opening to the jury should state the facts which it is expected to prove, but should not set forth evidence in detail.— Scripps v. Reilly, 35 Mich. 371.

¶ 11. Counsel in his opening to the jury has a right to state at length his claims as to the law, and the facts as he expects to prove them.—Prentis v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234, modifying on rehearing 88 Mich. 567.

¶ 12. Counsel in his opening statement may state that he cannot produce a material witness and give the reason therefor.—Phillips v. U. S. Benevolent Society, 120 Mich. 142.

¶ 13. In opening his case to the jury it is not proper for counsel to enter into a detailed statement of the testimony by which he expects to substantiate the facts of his case; he should call the attention of the jury to the salient points, and what he expects to establish without repeating the evidence. —Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413.

¶ 14. Plaintiff's attorney, in his opening statement to the jury, stated that plaintiff's husband lived in another city a little more than a year, and on his return to his former home, where the suit was brought, defendant again threw around him injurious influences, and violated the law by selling liquor to him. Held, that this was a general statement of what the plaintiff proposed to show, and was not open to exception.—Ford v. Cheever, 105 Mich. 679.

¶ 15. Where a will is contested on the ground of undue influence and mental incapacity, it is not error for the court to permit counsel for the contestants in his opening to the jury to refer to the fact that the will was made in favor of the relations of the testatrix's husband, excluding her own kindred, and to claim that it was an unnatural will, and to state that in such cases the law would infer that the will was procured by a fraud.—Prentis v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234, modifying on rehearing 88 Mich. 567.

¶ 16. Reference by counsel for plaintiff in his opening statement in an action for personal injuries to the fact that plaintiff has been a widow for a number of years, with several children dependent upon her for support, whom she has succeeded in keeping in school, is improper.—McKormick v. City of West Bay, 110 Mich. 265.

¶ 17. In an action for an injury from a defective sidewalk it was not an abuse of discretion to permit plaintiff's counsel in his opening argument to the jury, to state, against objection, that he would prove that the walk in front of the premises where the accident occurred had been out of repair for four or five years, and also that the walk around on another side of the same premises was in the same condition; and this though the court afterwards refused to admit such proof, since it would be a very narrow rule which restricted counsel to a statement of such facts as should turn out to be admissible under the strict rules governing the admission of testimony.—Campbell v. City of Kalamazoo, 80 Mich, 655.

¶ 18. Permitting counsel for the plaintiff in his opening statement to the jury in an action for fraud and misrepresentation in the sale of a hotel to refer to the fact that the plaintiff went to another state to get his children, intending to make a home for them, held not prejudicial error.—Bales v. Evans, 182 Mich. 383.

§ 5. ——Sufficiency to present and define issues.

Limitation of issues or defenses by opening addresses on theory of admissions thereby made, see Pleading, IX; Trial, V, A.
Direction of verdict on opening statement, see Directing Verdict.

¶ 19. Defendant may avail himself of a defence presented by the testimony, although it was not referred to in his counsel's opening statement.—Petherick v. General Assembly of Order of Amaranth, 114 Mich. 420.

¶ 20. In trover against the assignee of a chattel mortgage for property seized thereunder, plaintiff's counsel claimed, in his opening to the jury, that plaintiff owned the property and had never sold it; that defendant had never paid anything for the mortgage, and that before defendant took the mortgage it had been much more than paid in full. Held, that the opening was sufficient to notify the defense that plaintiff meant to go into a full investigation of the dealings which he had had with the mortgagee before giving the mortgage, and that under such an opening, although he had not used the word "usury," he could show that the mortgage did not represent any actual indebtedness.—Canning v. Harlan, 50 Mich. 320.

¶ 21. Testimony in an action for attorney's fees showing a contract for ten dollars per day is not a variance from the opening statement that the contract was one for a reasonable fee.—Meade v. Bowles, 123 Mich. 696.

§ 6. Right to open or close and to reply.

Right to open and close where special defense only is in issue or where case stands on set-off or recoupment, see 1916 C. C. Rule 42, § 3.

¶ 22. The right to open and close the argument belongs to the party entitled to open and close the proofs.—Taff v. Hosmer, 14 Mich. 309.

¶ 23. The right to open and close the argument belongs to the party who seeks to alter the existing state of things.—Attorney General v. May, 99 Mich. 538.

¶ 24. There is no absolute right on the part of counsel for defendants to cut off further argument to the jury by plaintiffs' counsel by declining to reply to the opening argument on plaintiffs' behalf, at least where other counsel for plaintiffs desire to be heard; but this matter comes within those discretionary rules which must, unless in extreme cases, leave the trial judge to determine the course of the procedure. It is the duty of the judge, however, to so regulate this matter as to give a fair opportunity for counsel to thoroughly present the whole case to the jury.—Barden v. Briscoe, 36 Mich. 254.

¶ 25. A trial judge must restrain counsel from commenting on testimony that has been excluded, if objection is made to such comments.—Hollywood v. Reed, 57 Mich. 234.

¶ 26. It is the duty of trial courts, so far as possible, to prevent improper remarks by counsel engaged in the argument of causes, especially if mutually provoked; and persistent transgressions justify, if they do not demand, more stringent measures than mere instructions to juries to disregard such statements.—Tunnicliffe v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co., 107 Mich. 261.

¶ 27. The only practicable method of controlling and keeping counsel within due bounds, when disposed to transcend their privileges, is with the trial court, which has a large discretion in such matters. Where this power is not exercised, and there is reason to believe that injustice has resulted from the improper course taken by counsel, the Supreme Court will grant relief, as it has in some instances done.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 101 Mich. 561.

¶ 28. Where counsel in argument present to the jury as facts matter wholly outside the record the court must strike it out and reprimand counsel, and it is prejudicial error not to do so.—Martin v. Fisher, 143 Mich. 462.

§ 8. ——Time allowable.

¶ 29. 1897 C. C. Rule 63 provides that "not less than one hour on each side shall be allowed to counsel, if desired, in summing up a cause;" and a trial judge is therefore in error in limiting arguments to ten minutes on a side.—Harrison v. Howe, 109 Mich. 476.

¶ 30. The use by counsel for plaintiff of a balance in his argument in a civil suit to demonstrate the preponderance of evidence is not error.—Billett v. Michigan Bonding & Surety Co., 195 Mich. 202.

¶ 31. It is not error for the trial court to permit counsel for the plaintiff to argue his case in the form of questions to and answers from a certain witness where it is obvious that if the witness was untruthful the argument must be unsound.—McArthur v. Sault News Printing Co., 148 Mich. 556.

¶ 32. Extravagant or irrelevant remarks of counsel in the heat of argument to the jury, which are not apt to mislead or prejudice the jury are not ground of reversal.—Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 514.

¶ 33. An argument by counsel which is intemperate and unfair constitutes error, as a defendant has a right to have a dispassionate consideration of the questions in his case.—Philip v. Heraty, 135 Mich. 446.

¶ 34. Misstatement of the testimony by counsel in arguing the case before the jury will require the setting aside of the verdict only in a very clear case of misstatement which is not open to correction.—Varty v. Messmore, 132 Mich. 314.

¶ 35. Arguments of counsel, in an action on the case for malicious prosecution, which were not in good taste, were not ground for a reversal, where such remarks were supported by the evidence.—Harris v, Thomas, 140 Mich. 462.

¶ 36. The use of intemperate and improper language by counsel in his argument, and failure on the part of the trial judge to appreciate and perform his responsibilities and duties in the conduct of the trial, are reversible error.—Potter v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 122 Mich. 179.

¶ 37. The rule that broad latitude will be allowed where fraud is alleged will not permit the making of an incompetent and prejudicial argument to the jury.—Bales v. Evans, 182 Mich. 383.

§ 10. Stating and misstating matters of law.

Stating law in opening address, see ante § 4.
Reading law books, see post § 27.

¶ 38. In an employee's action to recover for injuries sustained by being caught in his employer's machinery it is not error for the court to allow counsel, in addressing the jury, to state his understanding of the law and what he regards as defects therein.—Kean v. Detroit Copper & Brass Rolling Mills, 66 Mich. 277.

¶ 39. Where plaintiff, the vendor, seeks to recover the purchase price of a cultivator, it is proper for the court to refuse to let plaintiff's counsel argue to the jury that his client is entitled to the purchase price less the damages suffered by the defendant by reason of plaintiff's defective performance of the sale contract, since it is the province of the court to instruct the jury on the law.—Ruthruff v. Faust, 154 Mich. 409.

¶ 40. Argument of counsel that the fact that defendant in an action for damages caused by fire escaping from a smokestack on defendant's saw-mill, subsequently made changes in the spark arrester, was evidence that it was unsafe, when followed by the giving of a charge apparently in accord with such argument, was error.—Wager v. Lamont, 135 Mich. 521.

¶ 41. Where the trial court has ruled that the question of contributory negligence of deceased is not an issue for the jury in an action for death in a railroad crossing accident and that the only question is that of gross negligence of defendant, it is error to allow plaintiff's counsel over objection to comment in his argument on the law of contributory negligence in railroad crossing accident cases.—Halloran v. Michigan Ry. Co., 107 Mich. 308.

¶ 42. The statement of an undisputed fact by counsel for defendant in his argument, over exception, was not error.—Paul v. De Carrie, 106 Mich. 434.

¶ 43. Counsel, in his argument to the jury, may state such inferences of fact as he in good faith draws from all the circumstances of the case, and what would be likely to follow if such inferences should turn out to be correct.—Hart Mfg. Co. v. Mann's Boudoir Car Co., 65 Mich. 564.

¶ 44. An attorney, in arguing the facts to a jury, has the right to affirm that the natural presumptions, under the circumstances of any given case, are against the testimony of any one or several witnesses. He is not bound to admit any fact because it is sworn to, and cannot be prevented by the court from arguing, in a decent and orderly way, the probabilities of the truth or falsity of any statement of any witness in a cause.—Bronson v. Leach, 74 Mich. 713.

¶ 45. An attorney is entitled to some license in his argument, and the case will not necessarily be reversed because he claims more from the testimony for his client than the Supreme Court can discern, or because he argues that facts are established which said court thinks were not established.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 83 Mich. 218.

¶ 46. A verdict will not be disturbed for extravagances of counsel in summing up and urging inferences from facts in evidence, unless the trial court has plainly allowed them to mislead the jury.—Staal v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 57 Mich. 239.

¶ 47. Counsel have the right to present their own views of the testimony in argument to the jury; and where a contention is made in apparent good faith, and there is evidence tending to support it, a case will not be reversed because such contention, in the judgment of the court, is unsound.—Warren v. Halley, 107 Mich. 120.

¶ 48. It is improper for counsel to assert in his opening to the jury a fact evidence of which was held inadmissible by the Supreme Court on a previous review of the case.—Baumler v. Antlau, 79 Mich. 509.

¶ 49. The fact that counsel commented upon the testimony of a witness and upon her manner of giving it, and drew incorrect conclusions therefrom is not sufficient ground for reversal.—Wheeler v. Jenison, 120 Mich. 422.

¶ 50. It is error to argue that plaintiff burned the defendant's barn, in an action for slander in charging that he burnt it, where there was no plea of truth of the charge but only proof of threats to burn it, which were admitted solely to show that defendant was honest in the belief that plaintiff burnt it when the charge was made.—Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112.

¶ 51. A statement by defendants' counsel to the jury that a horse had been returned to the seller according to contract for a breach of warranty, is not error, in an action upon promissory notes given in part payment for such animal; where the evidence shows that upon the failure of the horse to comply with the guaranty, the defendants returned him to the plaintiff and made demand for another horse under the terms of the contract, and that the plaintiff refused to comply with the demand.—Carey v. Nissle, 145 Mich. 383.

¶ 52. In an action for the purchase price of a stock of goods in which the defendant by a notice under a plea denied all indebtedness to the plaintiff, but which notice the defendant did not himself draw up and testifies on the trial that he never saw, it is prejudicial error for the plaintiff's counsel to base a derogatory and scathing argument upon the conflict of the pleadings with the defendant's testimony that he owed the defendant but had settled it by another transaction.—Grabowsky v. Baumgart, 128 Mich. 267.

¶ 53. Waiver of privilege by plaintiff, in an action for injuries received by falling upon a defective sidewalk, after the physician was produced in court, in the presence of the jury, as a witness for the defendant, does not bar comment in argument of counsel for the plaintiff of improper disclosures made by the physician in his testimony.—Hodge v. City of St. Louis, 146 Mich. 173.

¶ 54. In an action for the price of beer sold, defendant pleaded the general issue with notice of a special defense that the beer was defective, and that in April plaintiff agreed that if defendant would continue to buy beer from him, he would deduct so much per barrel from the price of future purchases, so as to make allowance for the defective quality of the beer previously purchased. Defendant's evidence showed that such compromise was made in the following December, when there was more due for defective beer than was due in April. Held, that since, by Circuit Court Rule 7, subd. e, the date of the compromise as alleged in the notice was an admission not requiring proof, the variance between the testimony and allegation in the plea as to the date was a proper subject of comment by counsel as bearing upon the credibility of defendant's testimony.—Buckeye Brewing Co. v. Eymer, 157 Mich. 518.

¶ 55. Counsel may state in his argument to the jury that the testimony of certain expert witnesses is in conflict, and cannot be reconciled.—Fillingham v. Michigan United Rys., 154 Mich. 233.

¶ 56. Counsel for plaintiff in his argument to the jury stated extravagantly that there were five or six eye-witnesses to the accident. Defendant's counsel excepted, and plaintiff's counsel then stated that the jury would remember the facts established by the evidence. Held, the statement of plaintiff's counsel was not so prejudicial as to warrant a reversal.—Pierce v. C. H. Bidwell Thresher Co., 158 Mich. 356.

¶ 57. Reference to facts outside the case as made is improper, e. g., in a libel action a reference to the fact that defendant's editor was once arrested and bound over for a libel on the trial judge.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 97 Mich. 136.

¶ 58. Counsel in summing up a case must not go outside of the proper issue for the jury.—Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 60 Mich. 267.

¶ 59. The only facts which counsel are properly permitted to comment upon before a jury are such as have been legally elicited upon the trial of the cause.—Carne v. Litchfield, 2 Mich. 340.

¶ 60. A witness for defendant having testified that plaintiff requested him to get defendant drunk at his expense, defendant failed to connect such testimony with the case and allowed it to be stricken out. Held, that it was error to permit him to comment afterwards upon it, against objection, in his argument to the jury.—Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112.

¶ 61. Counsel, in his argument to the jury, should not be allowed to use a map of the premises where the assault occurred, there being no proof of its correctness other than its adoption by the city council.—Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 52.

¶ 62. Counsel have no right to comment upon papers that have not been put in evidence, or on the conduct of the parties in connection with them.—Donovan v. Richmond, 61 Mich. 467.

¶ 63. Where defendant is not responsible for a third person's acts, remarks of plaintiff's counsel in his address to the jury confounding such third person with the defence and alluding to "these defendants" are prejudicial.—Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498.

¶ 64. It is not error for the court to order counsel to desist from commenting in their argument to the jury upon alleged entries in books of account which, though inquired about on cross-examination, are not made evidence by the introduction of the books.—Hirschfield v. Waldron, 83 Mich. 116.

¶ 65. It is improper for counsel for the defendant in an action by a passenger against a street railroad company for personal injuries to tell the jury that no report was made of any such accident to defendant by the crew, as evidence to such effect would be inadmissible.—Sibert v. Detroit United Ry., 198 Mich. 117.

¶ 66. It is error for an attorney to argue in an action for injuries sustained by a collision with a train at a highway crossing, as proof that the plaintiff stopped before attempting to cross the railroad, that his counsel would not by reason of extensive experience have commenced the action if he had not stopped.—Britton v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 118 Mich. 491.

¶ 67. In an action against a husband and wife for tortious acts of the wife remarks of plaintiff's counsel assuming facts which were not supported by the evidence held to be prejudicial to appellant husband where the court did not caution counsel and instruct the jury to disregard the statements.—Sweezy v. Fisher, 142 Mich. 258.

¶ 67a. In an action for breach of promise, an insinuation in argument, without support in the evidence, that defendant had bribed witnesses in his behalf, and had caused improper methods to be used by a detective, cannot be said to be not prejudicial.—Reed v. Louden, 153 Mich. 521.

§ 13. ——Stating personal knowledge or belief.

Proper cautionary instruction, see Instructions, VI.

¶ 68. It is inadmissible for counsel in his argument to the jury to state his belief—as based upon his own knowledge—of a fact, such as the age of plaintiff suing for breach of promise to marry.—Rutter v. Collins, 103 Mich. 143.

¶ 69. Jurors must get the evidence from the lips of sworn witnesses, and not from the unsworn statements of the lawyers in the argument of the case.—Rutter v. Collins, 96 Mich. 510.

¶ 70. Counsel has no right to put before the jury, by way of argument, that he has personal knowledge of facts of the case, outside of the testimony, even though it is to be accompanied by an explanation that counsel would not state what he knew and would not take the stand as a witness.—Amperse v. Fleckenstein, 67 Mich. 247.

¶ 71. It is improper for counsel in his address to the jury to refer to letters of his to the opposite party who had at one time consulted him, which letters had been introduced in evidence, and to endeavor to explain them where he is not a witness.—Atherton v. Defreeze, 129 Mich. 364.

§ 14. ——Stating what might have been proved.

Comments on tendency of missing evidence, see post § 15.

¶ 72. To permit counsel, against the objection of opposing counsel, to tell the jury what he could have proved by certain witnesses, whom he might have called had he seen fit to do so, is error.—Pringle v. Miller, 111 Mich. 663.

§ 15. Comments on absence of witnesses or evidence.

On claim of privilege, see post § 16.
On absence of evidence that would be inadmissible, see also ante § 12.
Stating what might have been proved, see ante § 14.
Mention of absence of witness in opening, see ante ¶ 12.

¶ 73. Defendant's counsel has a right to comment to the jury upon the plaintiff's omission to produce important witnesses who are within reach.—Gavigan v. Scott, 51 Mich. 373.

¶ 74. Before counsel can properly comment upon the absence of witnesses, there must be some facts or circumstances shown from which the jury would have the right to infer that their testimony would be important and material, and it is the duty of the court to prevent such comment, in the absence of such a showing.—Cook v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 86 Mich. 554.

¶ 75. In trover by a vendee of goods against an officer who attached them for the vendor's creditors, the burden of proof of fraud is upon defendant, and plaintiff need not anticipate such defense or call all of his witnesses in the first instance; and accordingly it is improper for defendant's counsel, in opening his case to the jury, to say that certain persons, naming them, have been and are in the court room, and have not been called as witnesses by plaintiff.—Bendetson v. Moody, 100 Mich. 553.

¶ 76. Under the rule of Vergin v. City of Saginaw, 125 Mich. 499, remarks of counsel to the effect that the defendant did not dare to put on two physicians who had examined the plaintiff are held justified by the circumstances in the case.—Wilkins v. City of Flint, 128 Mich. 262.

¶ 77. Argument by plaintiff's counsel assuming that the defendant railroad's fireman who failed to testify, was still in the employ of the company, was improper in the absence of testimony that such fireman was still in defendant's employ.—Hinchman v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 136 Mich. 341.

¶ 78. In an action against a township for injury from a defective highway, where the burden of proving that there was notice of the defect alleged had not been supported by any proof by plaintiff, it was error for the counsel for plaintiff in argument to comment on the failure of the highway overseer, sitting in court, to take the stand and testify on that subject; there was nothing in the case imposing any duty to explain or testify.—Cavanagh v. Township of Riverside, 136 Mich. 660.

¶ 79. In an action for injuring live stock, it is not reversible error for the plaintiff's counsel in his argument to the jury to ask where are the conductor and the fifty passengers who were on the car, where the record shows there were fifty passengers, that no attempt was made to produce them or account for them, and the defendant's counsel criti-

¶ 80. In an action to recover the value of goods lost in transit, argument by counsel for the plaintiff of the absence of testimony to meet the plaintiff's case is proper; and while it is error for counsel to refer to defendant's ability to procure witnesses "because this railway company has behind it all the money it needs to do business" it was not calculated to prejudice the jury.—Dahrooge v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 144 Mich. 544.

¶ 81. In a personal injury case caused by a horse becoming frightened by the emission of steam at a railroad crossing, in which the jury were not permitted to see the horse, it was improper for plaintiff's counsel to suggest in his argument that an inspection of the horse would have shown that it was not vicious.—Hinchman v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 136 Mich. 341.

¶ 82. In a suit for personal injuries against defendant street railway for starting up its car while plaintiff was alighting, thereby causing injury to plaintiff, the plaintiff's counsel stated in his argument to the jury that defendant had omitted to call its timekeeper or other witnesses to contradict the plaintiff's statement that the car was late. Held, such remark did not constitute error because it is proper in a civil case to comment on the omission of an adverse party to call witnesses in its employ upon a subject peculiarly within their knowledge, and because the question whether the train was late was of no importance in the case.—Dykstra v. Grand Rapids, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 165 Mich. 13.

¶ 83. In an action against a railroad company for damages for loss of property by fire, alleged to be due to the defective equipment and management of defendant's engine, where it was shown that the engine was overhauled and new netting put in the spark arrester or screen three months before the fire, and that immediately after the fire the engine was examined and the spark arrester found to be in good condition, and also that it could easily have been removed and produced in court, held that it was not reversible error for plaintiff's counsel to comment on the failure of defendant to produce it at the trial. Stoddard v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 191 Mich. 321.

§ 16. Commenting on claim of privilege.

Comment on evidence given under waiver, see ante ¶ 53.

¶ 84. Comments by counsel in their argument to the jury as to a witness availing himself of his constitutional privilege to refuse to answer questions on the ground that the answers might tend to incriminate him, is reversible error.—Bales v. Evans, 182 Mich. 383.

§ 17. Reference to other trials or proceedings.

¶ 85. A. devised part of his farm to B., an adopted daughter, and died leaving a widow who became administratrix, the will not being produced. The widow married again, and died without being discharged as administratrix. She left all her property to her husband. B. married, had a son, lost her husband, and married again. Held that, in proceedings by her to establish the missing will, contestant's counsel had no right, in opening to the jury, to relate dealings between the second husband of A.'s widow and the proponent's son on one side, and the contestant on the other, in regard to the possession of the testator's farm, nor to narrate legal proceedings for its possession brought by proponent and the second husband against contestant. These matters were foreign to the issue. And it was improper to suggest that B.'s son was born too soon after her marriage, and hearsay for a witness to state what he had heard Mrs. A. say on the subject. It was also improper to show by a physician how soon birth happened, as this had no legal connection with the issue.—Rickabus v. Gott, 51 Mich. 227.

¶ 86. In an action by the wife's administrator for conversion of her property, received by her from her husband, by levying on it as property of the husband fraudulently transferred to her, it is not error for the defendant sheriff's counsel to state in argument that one of the defendant's witnesses, who was also a creditor of the husband, "did not proceed with any such proceedings as we find in this case."—Major v. Brewster, 148 Mich. 623.

§ 18. Appeals to passion, sympathy or prejudice.

Allusion in opening to poverty or circumstances, see ante § 4.
Reference to poverty or wealth, see post § 20.
Aspersions and vituperations, see post §§ 21, 22.
Asking jury to award what members would take for similar wrong, see post § 24.

¶ 87. It is improper for counsel in his argument to the jury to appeal to their sympathies upon matters not at issue in the case. —Antosik v. Michigan Alkali Co., 166 Mich. 415.

¶ 88. Impassioned arguments of counsel do not amount to reversible error unless it clearly appears that they were not warranted by the evidence and contributed to an unjust result.—Houser v. Carwody, 173 Mich. 121.

¶ 89. Where counsel, in summing up, appeal to a jury's prejudice against nonresidents and make injurious remarks not justified by evidence, and exception is taken to this conduct, it is error if the trial judge omits to stop it and counteract its effect. So held where counsel said that attaching creditors adversely interested were hogs, and wanted to gobble up all the property.—Bedford v. Penny, 58 Mich. 424.

¶ 90. An argument on the amount of damages to a boy who had lost both feet, appealing to the jury not to quibble over the amount, that "he cannot have too much" but "we do not want so much as to shock common sense"; further appealing to the jury to "disabuse yourselves from sympathy" but not to give a pittance that would be no compensation—was held not to be error though it might have been an appeal to sympathy under cover of frankness and fairness.—Retan v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 94 Mich. 146.

¶ 91. Arguments to the jury that the case was between the stockholders of a bank which had been paid $125 for $100 of stock and the depositors of an insolvent bank, were prejudicial and calculated to arouse the sympathies and prejudices of the jurors, in an action against the receiver of an insolvent bank upon a fraudulently certified check, where the crucial question at issue was whether such check was purchased upon an honest belief of the validity of the certification.—Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 145 Mich. 656.

¶ 92. A statement by plaintiff's counsel in his closing argument to the jury in an action against a municipality for personal injuries, that the corporate authorities had conspired to defeat plaintiff's recovery, and that counsel had been threatened by witnesses for defendant, and was a "spotted" man, because of his acting for plaintiff, is ground for a reversal, where the only basis for the statement consists in the fact that a witness not connected with the municipal government in any way had told such counsel that he was being injured by his connection with the case, and the further fact that some of the authorities, prior to the trial, had sent for certain children, who were afterwards sworn for the defence, and put to them leading questions, to ascertain what they knew about the accident.—Strudgeon v. Village of Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496.

¶ 93. Remarks of counsel in concluding his address to the jury that his client, "may be like an old horse turned out into the street, your verdict may save him, now let me ask you, boys, mercy" are improper.—Atherton v. Defreeze, 129 Mich. 364.

¶ 94. It is reversible error for counsel for plaintiff, in an action to recover damages for several alleged assaults to commit rape, to appeal to the passions and prejudices of the jury by insisting in his argument that neither the jury nor any parent would feel that their daughter was less entitled to damages because previously to the acts of defendant she had yielded to a young man to whom she was engaged, and that the position taken by counsel for defendant was unjust and contrary to the natural feelings of parent nd child.—Mortensen v. Bradshaw, 188 Mich. 436.

¶ 95. Argument of counsel in an action upon a benefit policy alluding to the distress of insured's widow, held within the bounds of proper argument.—Grimme v. General Council of Fraternal Aid Ass'n, 167 Mich. 240.

¶ 96. In an action against a street car company for damages for personal injuries to a boy passenger a statement by counsel for plaintiff in his argument to the jury that the jury could do something to help the plaintiff bear his infirmities held not to be erroneous.—Murphy v. Manistee Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 595.

§ 19. ——Against corporations.

Denying credibility of corporate employees, see also post § 21.
Drawn out by adversary's statements, see post § 28.

¶ 97. Where, in an action for negligent injury, plaintiff's counsel, in his argument to the jury, refers, without provocation, to defendant as "the unfortunate city railway, whether driven through the streets by the mob, or driven along in its usual course," such remarks, in view of the great anger and excitement of the populace, which has culminated in mob violence a few weeks before the trial, is prejudicial error.—Geist v. Detroit City R., 91 Mich. 446.

¶ 98. A judgment for a railroad company in an action to recover for personal injuries will not be reversed because counsel for defendant said to the jury in his argument that they had evidently learned from their service as jurors during that term of court that damage suits for personal injuries had developed into quite a business, the remark being intended only to invite careful scrutiny of such claims.—Baxter v. Detroit Ry., 116 Mich. 188.

¶ 99. It is improper for counsel in the trial of a case and in his briefs to refer in a sneering way to the adverse party as a corporation, to the witnesses as corporation witnesses, and to the attorneys as corporation attorneys.—People ex rel. Esper v. Detroit & Saline Plank Road Co., 125 Mich. 366.

¶ 100. In an action against a railroad for killing cattle, it is error to interweave with a just argument, an improper appeal that the jury should take into consideration that plaintiff was an individual and the defendant a corporation.—Johnson v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 135 Mich. 353.

¶ 101. An argument by counsel for plaintiff in a suit for personal injuries against a corporation, the manifest and studied purpose of which is to induce the jury to deal with a defendant corporation differently than it would with an individual and when the court interrupts and directs his attention to the impropriety of his conduct, instead of withdrawing his statements undertakes to point out the distinction between a corporation operating a business for gain and a human person, is improper and constitutes prejudicial error for which the case must be reversed.—Whipple v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 143 Mich. 41.

¶ 102. In an action against a telegraph corporation it is improper for counsel for plaintiff to state in his argument that it is too often the practice of public service corporations in this country to assume the attitude of the public be "damned' or "darned."—Burroughs v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 199 Mich. 672.

§ 20. Reference to wealth, race, occupation or station.

Provoked remarks, see post ¶ 156.

¶ 103. In replevin for a span of horses it is improper for defendant's counsel to go outside of the record in commenting to the jury upon plaintiff's wealth and other facts not appearing in evidence.—Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 102 Mich. 635.

¶ 104. An argument of an attorney, referring to poverty in the plaintiff's home, of which there is no proof, has no bearing on the question of whether one of two contractors agreed to pay for services performed, and a reference to the duty of jurors to stand by their neighbors in a suit against nonresidents, is improper. A verdict secured by such appeals to prejudice will not be allowed to stand.—Smith v. Jennings, 121 Mich. 393.

¶ 105. It is reversible error, in action for damages for alleged assaults to commit rape, for counsel for plaintiff to remark in his argument that defendant is rich.—Mortensen v. Bradshaw, 188 Mich. 436.

¶ 106. In a former appeal in an action for services rendered, the Supreme Court ruled that evidence concerning a former employment of the plaintiff by a mining company, and the sale by him of his stock held therein, were inadmissible. In the second trial plaintiff's counsel in his opening statement, in cross-examination, and in his argument to the jury referred to said evidence in a way calculated to prejudice the jury against defendant as being a man of wealth. Held, this constituted reversible error.—Ruttle v. What Cheer Coal Mining Co., 161 Mich. 150.

¶ 107. Where in an action for the breach of a warranty of sale that a mare was not vicious the evidence shows the vocation of the parties, defendant's attorney in his argument to the jury may state that he wants the jury to consider that the case is between a young banker and an old farmer.—Eaton v. Hope, 177 Mich. 411.

¶ 108. Reversal must be ordered where the language used in an argument to the jury evinces a studied purpose to arouse prejudices based upon facts not in the case; as where the opposing parties, Hebrews, are repeatedly called "Men from Jerusalem," and where the speech and gestures of Jews are caricatured and their conduct satirized.—Cleutt v. Rosenthal, 100 Mich. 193.

¶ 109. Language of counsel in referring to plaintiff as a "Jew horse peddler," is improper.—Hyman v. Kirt, 153 Mich. 113.

¶ 110. It is reversible error for counsel in his argument after being warned by the court to desist, to attempt to arouse the prejudice of the jury by reference to the racial characteristics of the opposite party.—Solomon v. Stewart, 184 Mich. 506.

¶ 111. A remark by plaintiff's counsel in an action based upon the unlawful sale of liquors, that "he had been in the practice of law for a good many years and this is the first case he ever knew where counsel for liquor dealers ask the jury to go by the evidence," is improper and prejudicial.—Hilliker v. Farr, 149 Mich. 444.

§ 21. Aspersions on party or witnesses.

See also ante ¶ 52.

Sneering at or deriding corporation employees, see ante § 19.

Drawn out by other remarks, see post ¶ 157.

¶ 112. That one is the managing director of a newspaper will not justify counsel in referring to him, in garnishment proceedings for the amount of a judgment against the paper for libel, as the man "who sits in his sanctum, where nobody can see the hand that writes, nobody can see the brain that works, and writes sensational articles against citizens of his own town, as he wrote the article on which this judgment was rendered," where the fact that such person had nothing to do with the publication of the libelous article is established by the court's having directed verdict in his favor in the original suit.—Long v. Evening News Ass'n, 113 Mich. 261.

¶ 113. Severe criticism by defendant's counsel in his argument to the jury, is justified in an action by a confessed seducer against a sheriff for being detained in jail two days without being brought before a magistrate.—Friesenhan v. Maines, 137 Mich. 10.

¶ 114. Allusion to the party's being conveniently proved to be a member of a firm was held justifiable argument of counsel to the jury, where such argument is based on the evidence.—Pelton v. Mayhew, 166 Mich. 546.

¶¶ 115, 116. In an action for personal injuries against a street railway company under the defense that the claim is fraudulent, it is not prejudicial error for the defendant's counsel to refer to the plaintiff and her family as in the business of bringing damage suits and to state that they cannot make their living that way, where testimony was admitted without objection to show that the daughter of the plaintiff had a claim against a street railway company and that the husband had two negligent injury claims pending.—Wheeler v. Detroit Electric Ry., 128 Mich. 656.

¶ 117. Remarks of counsel reflecting on the character of a witness, which are not justified by the evidence, are improper.—Atherton v. Defreeze, 129 Mich. 364.

¶ 118. Vilification of a witness and a statement that a juror, accepted by counsel, had testified on his examination that he was afraid to render a just verdict through fear of reprisal by defendant, all outside of the record, are error, where the vilification was unrebuked and the other argument was merely characterized as "unprofessional," whereupon counsel stated that the "facts remain but I shall not discuss them further."—Andrews v. Tamarack Min. Co., 114 Mich. 375, per Grant and Hooker, JJ.

¶ 119. A judgment for defendant will not be reversed because of the remark of his counsel in reference to plaintiff's chief witness, "This man is a star witness in all these cases; he would swear a hole through a two-inch plank"—where plaintiff's counsel did not bring the remark to the attention of the trial judge, who apparently permitted it to pass as unworthy of notice.—Marvin v. Ruhmohr, 115 Mich. 687.

¶ 120. To elicit from defendant's medical witness, who made an examination of plaintiff's womb, that he took a sample of pus therefrom and examined it under a microscope, and that various specific infections might be found in the womb, among them gonorrhea and syphilis, and that he took the sample in order to ascertain if there were any specific infections, and then to argue, commenting on the bias of such witness, that the sample had been unfairly and needlessly taken in order to discover if plaintiff had a venereal disease, and that the witness had unwillingly admitted such purpose, is error harmful to the defendant; where there is nothing to show that microscopical examination was needless, and no question as to those diseases had been raised and there was no reason to think that they in particular should have been looked for.—Remey v. Detroit United Ry., 141 Mich. 116.

¶ 121. In an action for damages alleged to have been caused by adulterated kerosene which exploded, where a deputy state inspector has testified and a loose system of inspection has been shown, it is not improper for counsel to comment upon the conduct of the inspector and the agent of defendant.—Stowell v. Standard Oil Co., 139 Mich. 18.

¶ 122. It is improper for counsel to denounce physicians of good standing who have testified for a railroad company in a personal injury suit, as "hirelings," and "hired servants of masters" who "are paid from their treasury and go about with a pass in their pockets."—Mott v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 120 Mich. 127.

¶ 123. A judgment will be reversed, where counsel for plaintiff, in his argument to the jury, commented upon the wealth, character, and influence of the defendant, charged witnesses as being under the influence of defendant and not daring to testify against him, holding appointments secured by defendant; and that therefore their testimony was unreliable, and charging defendant with coercing a witness with promise of political favor, and many other statements of like character.—Holmes v. Loud, 149 Mich. 410.

¶ 124. In an action against a railroad company for negligently burning plaintiff's buildings the argument of the plaintiff's counsel asking the jury to discredit the defendant's witnesses because the defendant is a railroad company is clearly an appeal to the prejudice of the jury and will warrant the setting aside of a verdict rendered against the company.—Dolph v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 149 Mich. 278.

¶ 125. In an action against a railroad, a statement by plaintiff's counsel in argument that the jury will believe a certain witness, although "all the railroad men in Christendom should swear the other way," while not commendable, is not ground for reversal.—Beck v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 156 Mich. 252. (Grant, J., dissenting.)

§ 22. ——Appeals for moral reprobation.

¶ 126. Language of plaintiff's counsel in closing the case to the jury, wherein the statute of frauds had been interposed, to the effect that because the defendant asks the protection of the statute he is "crawling out of his promises," held not to have been such a departure from appropriate argument as to call for a reversal of the judgment.—Mitchell v. Beck, 88 Mich. 342.

¶ 127. The fact that counsel for plaintiff charged that defendant's contention was not made in good faith is no reason for reversal, if, under the circumstances, the good faith of defendant was a proper subject of inquiry and comment.—Muncie Wheel & Jobbing Co. v. Finch, 150 Mich. 274.

§ 23. Suggesting improper elements or measure of recovery.

Appealing to sympathy, see ante §§ 18, 19.
Asking jury to award what "they would take" in like case, see post § 24.
Reference to insurance or indemnity, see post § 25.

¶ 128. A jury should not be asked by an attorney, in an action for injuries sustained by colliding with a train, to give the plaintiff compensation for the expense of litigation or for trouble in prosecuting the claim.—Britton v. Michigan Central R. Co., 118 Mich. 491.

¶ 129. Argument of counsel in an action for personal injuries urging the jury not to reduce the amount of the verdict in order to keep defendant from appealing, is improper.—Quirk v. Rapid Ry., 137 Mich. 496.

¶ 130. It was improper for plaintiff's counsel in a personal injury case to state in his argument, that he did not want the verdict to be cut down on the assumption that there would be a settlement, as the defendant always took its cases to the Supreme Court.—Selby v. Detroit Ry., 122 Mich. 311.

§ 24. ——Invoking jurors' personal knowledge or estimate.

¶ 131. Argument by counsel in a personal injury action that the jurors would not sustain similar injuries for a certain amount of money, held prejudicial error.—Morrison v. Carpenter, 179 Mich. 207.

¶ 132. It is improper in the closing argument in an action for damages, for the plaintiff's counsel to ask the jury which one of them would accept the plaintiff's injuries for a stated sum of money.—Wells v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 184 Mich. 1.

¶ 133. It is improper for the plaintiff's attorney in an action by a servant against her mistress for damages for assault and battery to ask the jury in his argument to give the plaintiff "what you would want your mother or sister to have under like circumstances."—Gungrich v. Anderson, 189 Mich. 144.

¶ 134. In an action for damages it is improper for counsel for the plaintiff, in his closing argument, to ask a juror what he would think the plaintiff's injury worth if she were his wife.—Wells v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 184 Mich. 1.

¶ 135. In an action for personal injuries against a railroad company argument of counsel commenting on the extent of plaintiff's injuries, what the jurors would take to undergo like injuries, and the liability of the company, was improper.—Daly v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 197 Mich. 340.

¶ 136. Statements made by counsel to the jury, in an action by a father for the death of his son, as to the suffering and agony and pain occasioned to the father and mother by such death of their son, and as to how much his death was worth, and as to what the members of the jury would take for the death of a son, killed under similar circumstances, were prejudicial error, though not objected to, where the verdict for damages was grossly excessive.—McDonald v. Champion Iron & Steel Co., 140 Mich. 401.

¶ 137. An argument to the jury to the effect that no person would go through life with the plaintiff's injuries for any sum of money, held prejudicial to the defendant, where the trial court failed to instruct the jury to disregard such argument.—Jolman v. Alberts, 186 Mich. 643.

¶ 138. In a suit for personal injuries it is reversible error for plaintiff's counsel to argue to the jury that they would not for any amount of money have members of their families injured as was the plaintiff.—Hughes v. City of Detroit, 161 Mich. 283.

¶ 139. In an action for personal injuries a statement of counsel for plaintiff in his argument to the jury that he was not at liberty under the decision of the Supreme Court to say to the jury "what would you take to be changed from your present condition" to one like the plaintiff, is disapproved.—Seabury v. Detroit United Ry., 194 Mich. 423.

§ 25. Reference to insurance or indemnification.

¶ 140. Since the fact that lumber, destroyed by fire, claimed to have been started by a locomotive engine, was insured does not affect the plaintiff's right to recover, comment by an attorney as to the amount of capital stock of an insurance company, when the fact of insurance appears on the trial, is improper.—Peter v. Chicago & W. M. Ry. Co., 121 Mich. 824.

¶ 141. Remarks of counsel to the jury "you don't have to worry much about the verdict against," the defendant, held not on their face improper as referring to an attempted question implying that the defendant had insurance against accident.—Burgess v. Stowe, 134 Mich. 204.

¶ 142. In a suit to recover for property destroyed by fire from a locomotive, it is reversible error for defendant's counsel persistently to refer over objection sustained, to the fact that the property destroyed was insured.—J. H. Worden Lumber & Shingle Co. v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 74.

¶ 143. In an action against a sewer contractor for personal injuries sustained in falling into an unguarded excavation, a remark by counsel in his argument, referring to a clause in the contract with the city, from which the jury would infer that the defendant would be indemnified for the injury, held prejudicial error.—Morrison v. Carpenter, 170 Mich. 207.

§ 26. Reading papers or pleadings in case.

Use of books to refresh memory in opening statement, see ante ¶ 3.

¶ 144. A judgment for defendant will not be reversed because the trial court allowed counsel for defendant in his argument to the jury to comment on the fact that counsel for plaintiff had objected to the admission of a writing signed by one of plaintiff's witnesses, and purporting to state the particulars of the accident out of which the action grew and made soon thereafter.—Baxter v. Detroit Ry., 116 Mich. 188.

§ 27. Reading law reports, books, newspapers, etc.

¶ 145. Counsel have no right to read law to the jury, but they may state so much of the law, as they claim it to be, as may enable them to lay before the jury an intelligent idea of the force, effect and bearing of the testimony upon their case, either before or after said testimony is in the case.—Fosdick v. Van Arsdale, 74 Mich. 302; Edwards v. Common Council of Village of Three Rivers, 96 Mich. 625.

¶ 146. Counsel should not be permitted to read to the jury and comment upon cases found in the books of reports, upon the question, submitted to them as one of fact, whether a draft was presented for payment in a reasonable time.—Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Allen, 11 Mich. 501.

¶ 147. It is improper, in a second trial of an action for a negligent injury, for plaintiff's counsel to read to the jury the opinion of the Supreme Court upon a review of the first trial, and to state that said court passed favorably to plaintiff upon the question of contributory negligence.—Laughlin v. Grand Rapids Street R. Co., 80 Mich. 154.

¶ 148. Contestants in a will case offered in their opening to read to the jury a passage from a work on mental diseases, enumerating certain causes of insanity. Held, that the court properly refused to allow it. —Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206.

§ 28. Statements called forth by adversary.

Harmlessness of erroneous arguments because of action of opposing counsel, see Harmless Error.

Proper kind of instruction to cure, see Instructions, VI.

¶ 149. The use of objectionable language in an argument to a jury cannot be complained of by the opposite party who provokes it by similar remarks.—City of Kalamazoo v. Standard Paper Co., 182 Mich. 476.

¶ 150. A judgment will not be reversed because of the improper remarks of counsel for the prevailing party, where such remarks were apparently made in reply to similar remarks by opposing counsel.—Little v. Williams, 107 Mich. 652.

¶ 151. Where, during the argument of a case to the jury, exception is taken by the opposing counsel to a statement that there is evidence of a certain fact, it is proper for the attorney, in defence of his position, to challenge the attention of the court to the particular evidence which he claims he referred to in his argument.—Pinet v. Montague, 103 Mich. 516.

¶ 152. Counsel of a railroad sued for negligence called the jury's attention, in his argument, to the fact that it was a railroad case, and said it was talked on the street that, if such a case could get by the court, the jury would "whoop it up" to defendant. Plaintiff's attorney answered that, if juries go against railroads, it is because in every case the railroads are inimical to plaintiff, and because a man whose negligence caused a husband's death would go to the widow and at least pay the funeral expenses, instead of saying to her: "Go to hell." This retort, being called out in the heat of a trial by the aggression of defendant's counsel, was held not ground for reversal, it not appearing that the verdict was influenced thereby. —Sweet v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 87 Mich. 559.

¶ 153. A statement by plaintiff's counsel characterizing the defence interposed as "audacious" does not justify defendant's attorney in arraigning plaintiff as a moneyed corporation, intent upon crushing defendant. —Pabst Brewing Co. v. Lueders, 107 Mich. 41.

¶ 154. Remarks of counsel in his closing argument before the jury, though referring to facts not in evidence, and commenting upon defendant's plea of the statute of limitations, and his failure to introduce certain evidence, do not justify a reversal, where appearing by the record to have been made in answer to remarks of opposing counsel.—Miner v. Lorman, 66 Mich. 530.

¶ 155. An argument to the jury that damages should not be allowed larger than plaintiff had demanded in her claim to the common council, in which claim it was stated that the amount asked for was "on the basis of a private adjustment, but without prejudice to her rights in the event of a suit," does not warrant a retort by plaintiff's counsel in his closing argument that "the city counselor himself has recommended to the council that a larger sum than this be paid," in the absence of any evidence upon which to base such statement.—Ross v. City of Detroit, 96 Mich. 447.

¶ 156. Remarks of counsel that the plaintiff must go to the poorhouse, asking the jury to send the plaintiff to the poorhouse at once rather than to disagree, are erroneous but in the light of remarks of the defendant's counsel inviting such remarks should not reverse the case.—Wilkins v. City of Flint, 128 Mich. 262.

¶ 157. Remarks of counsel derogatory to a witness and not based on the evidence, held improper, but not reversible error on account of previous improper remarks by the opposing counsel on the same subject.—Sterling v. City of Detroit, 134 Mich. 22.

[Note. In assailing the legality of the arrest in an action for false imprisonment or a civil action for assault and battery, where the act is justified as an arrest, the question often arises whether an arrest could lawfully be made without a warrant. While in most of the cases of this kind the precedent might be as binding as if raised in a criminal case, yet as this topic relates to criminal procedure it has been deemed wiser to treat them in the topics Assault and Battery, II; False Imprisonment, I. Nevertheless they should be consulted even if not criminal precedents.]

Grades and degrees of crimes, misdemeanors and felonies, see Crimes, I, A.

¶ 1. No arrest can be lawfully made without warrant except in the cases existing at common law before a constitution was adopted.—People ex rel. Robison v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529.

¶ 2. Upon the commission of a felony or breach of the peace, a peace officer or private person may arrest without warrant.—People v. Moore, 2 D, 1.

¶ 3. Arrests may be made without a warrant for a breach of the peace committed in the presence of the officer.—People v. Rounds, 67 Mich. 482.

¶ 4. An arrest for breach of the peace cannot be made without a warrant if not committed in the presence of the officer making it.—People v. Haley, 48 Mich. 495.

¶ 5. Arrests cannot be made without warrant, except in cases of felony, or of breaches of the peace committed in the officer's presence.—In re Way, 41 Mich. 299; Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549.

¶ 6. An arrest without warrant for misdemeanor is legal except in case of actual breach of peace or other misdemeanor committed in officer's presence while person was taken in the act or immediately after its commission.—People v. McLean, 68 Mich. 480; Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549; People v. Johnson, 86 Mich. 175.

¶ 7. A person charged simply with a misdemeanor cannot be arrested for the crime after the commission of the act without a proper warrant.—People v. McLean, 68 Mich. 480.

¶ 8. A police officer has no authority to make an arrest without a warrant unless he has reasonable cause to believe that the person arrested is a felon, or is about to commit a felony, or a breach of the peace is committed in the presence of such officer.—Cook v. Hastings, 150 Mich. 289.

¶ 9. The right to arrest without a warrant remains, in Michigan, in a case of larceny which would be felonious at common law.—People v. Wilson, 55 Mich. 506.

¶ 10. Shouting in a village street, though a breach of the peace, is not in the presence of an officer so as to justify arrest without warrant, when the officer, being 150 feet away in another street, cannot see the offender, and has to act upon information derived from a third person.—People v. Johnson, 86 Mich. 175.

¶ 11. Before a summary arrest can be made for a breach of the peace, not only must overt acts be committed in the presence of the officer, but they must be violent or dangerous acts of some sort. The playing of baseball on Sunday is not per se such a breach. (Per Hooker, J., Montgomery and Ostrander, JJ., concurring.)—Yerkes v. Smith, 157 Mich. 557.

¶ 12. Arrests without warrant can rarely be justified in cases of vagrancy, and disorderly conduct can generally be more legally dealt with by regular process.—In re Way, 41 Mich. 299.

¶ 13. A breach of the peace is committed "in the presence of an officer," so as to justify arrest, though done at some distance from him and in the dark, if he can detect the act, and could see the person doing it if it were light.—People v. Bartz, 53 Mich. 493.

¶ 14. Where respondent followed an officer into a religious meeting for the purpose of inviting a personal controversy with him, and did enter into such controversy, and rudely took hold of the officer's coat and pulled him several feet from the place where he stood, such acts constituted an assault and battery and breach of the peace, justifying an arrest without process.—People v. Rounds, 67 Mich. 482.

§ 3. ——Belief that felony was committed.

Where warrant is outstanding in another's hands, see also post ¶ 67.

¶ 15. One cannot be arrested for felony without sufficient reasons of belief if not taken in the act.—People v. Gordon, 40 Mich. 716.

¶ 16. An arrest cannot be made without a warrant on causeless suspicion, and in the absence of actual belief of guilt, based on actual facts that created probable cause.—People v. Burt, 51 Mich. 190; Malcolmson v. Gibbons, 56 Mich. 459.

¶ 17. The facts that a store keeper missed a barrel of oil, which had stood in his store, that the barrel being painted a light blue color, was traced on the stones where it had been rolled to the shed of respondent, and was seen there by the officer looking through the cracks in the shed, the door being locked, that upon opening the door the barrel was found partly covered with rubbish, and was identified by the storekeeper as his own, that respondent's wife deceived the officer into arresting another man as the respondent, were sufficient to justify an officer in belief that a larceny had been committed.—People v. Wilson, 55 Mich. 506.

§ 4. Arrest under warrant.

Issuance of the warrant, see post §§ 12-14.
What the warrant must show and recite, see post §§ 15-17.
Exhibition or reading of warrant, see post § 20.
Arrest by officers acting together, see post § 21.

¶ 18. To justify an arrest upon a warrant two things are necessary: First, a warrant good upon its face; second, an authority in the person who undertakes to act upon it. —People v. McLean, 68 Mich. 480.

¶ 19. A warrant for arrest for a misdemeanor cannot lawfully be held by two officers at once when they are not together; and where the sheriff takes such a warrant and starts in search of the defendant, directing his deputy to search in another place, the latter has no authority to make the arrest.—People v. McLean, 68 Mich. 480.

¶ 20. An arrest at one city at the direction of an officer when the warrant was in possession of such officer at another city, is illegal.—McCullough v. Greenfield, 133 Mich. 463 (action for false imprisonment).

II. IMMUNITY AND PRIVILEGE FROM ARREST.

Rearrest after invalid arrest, see post § 23.
Immunity from civil arrest while in attendance obedient to process, see Civil Arrest and Bail.
Rearrest of prisoner after discharge on habeas corpus, see Habeas Corpus.
Privilege from service of civil process, see Process, II, A; Witnesses, I.

¶ 21. One who has been extradited, and is on bail for the offense, is not subject meanwhile to arrest by the same prosecuting authority for some other offense, as if he had been at liberty to withdraw from the jurisdiction.—In re Cannon, 47 Mich. 481.

¶ 22. A person arrested in another jurisdiction under a United States warrant and transferred to Michigan where the crime was committed, is not entitled to time to return to the first jurisdiction before being arrested on a state warrant for another offense.—In re Little, 129 Mich. 454.

III. COMPLAINT OF CRIME, AND ISSUANCE OF WARRANT FOR ARREST.

§ 6. Necessity for complaint.

¶ 23. A complainant is a necessary prerequisite to a valid examination by a justice of the peace upon a charge of an offense not cognizable for trial by him.—People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 274.

§ 7. Who may make complaint.

Necessity of complaint by injured spouse to institute prosecution for certain crimes, see Indictment and Prosecution, I, A.
Who may issue warrant, see post § 14.

¶ 24. In an action for false imprisonment, it was held that, since a prosecution for adultery can be instituted only on complaint of the offender's spouse, an officer has no authority of his own motion to make an arrest for such crime.—Filer v. Smith, 96 Mich. 347.

¶ 25. One not a competent witness against the person charged is not competent to make a complaint against him; therefore the first or lawful wife cannot make complaint against husband for bigamy.—People v. Quanstrom, 93 Mich. 254.

¶ 26. A wife cannot make a complaint against her husband for an indecent assault upon his daughter's person.—People v. Westbrook, 94 Mich. 620.

¶ 27. A wife may make criminal complaint against her husband for an assault upon her person with intent to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder.—People v. Sebring, 66 Mich. 705.

§ 8. Form of complaint; writing.

Of complaint for crime triable by justice to serve as accusation on trial, see Indictment and Prosecution, XVIII.

¶ 28. A complaint for the arrest of one charged with an offense not cognizable by a justice of the peace need not be in writing. —People v. Clark, 33 Mich. 112; Turner v. People, 33 Mich. 363; People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505; People v. Bechtel, 80 Mich. 623.

¶ 29. A complaint for an offense not triable by a justice need not be reduced to writing or signed by the party, or filed with the justice, though the better practice is to reduce it to writing.—People v. Clement, 72 Mich. 116.

§ 9. Requisites and sufficiency of complaint.

Necessity for complaint, see ante § 6.
Necessity of writing, see ante § 8.
Competency of complainant, see ante § 7.
Positiveness and knowledge, see post § 10.
As accusation on prosecution for violating municipal ordinance, see Municipal Corporations, XVI, B.
For search warrant and seizure, see Search and Seizure.
Sufficiency to sustain indictment or information assailed as variant from complaint or as unsupported by complaint and commitment, see Indictment and Prosecution. I, D.
Objections available to quash indictment or on trial, see Indictment and Prosecution, I, D.
Sufficiency of the complaint as a judicial proceeding to sustain perjury in falsely swearing thereto, see Crimes, II.
Evidence on trial to identify person complained against, admissibility of returned testimony, see Indictment and Prosecution, VIII.

¶ 30. A complaint before a justice of the peace for a criminal offense, regularly sworn to, and ample upon its face, gives jurisdiction to issue the warrant for the arrest of the accused, and to examine him.—People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 274.

¶¶ 31, 32. A complaint for larceny which omits the Christian name of the owner of the stolen property, will support a conviction inasmuch as such an irregularity could either be waived or cured by amendment.—People v. Pline, 61 Mich. 247.

§ 10. ——Knowledge or belief of complainant.

See also post ¶¶ 41, 47.

¶ 33. A criminal complaint must set up the facts constituting the offense on the knowledge of the person making it, or on that of some other person; it cannot rest on mere belief.—People v. Heffron, 53 Mich. 527.

§ 11. ——Describing or alleging crime.

¶ 34. A complaint for arrest need not set out in formal and distinct terms the precise criminal act to be inquired into and prosecuted.—Turner v. People, 33 Mich. 363.

¶ 35. Unlike a complaint for trial before a justice, the complaint need not set forth the essentials of the offense with the particularity necessary to an accusation for trial.—People v. Kahler, 93 Mich. 625.

¶ 36. A complaint for selling liquor to a minor, made before a justice of the peace of the city wherein the offense is alleged to have been committed, is not void because omitting the name of the county.—People v. Kahler, 93 Mich. 625.

§ 12. Reception of complaint and issuance of warrant.

Sufficiency of complaint to give jurisdiction for issuance, see ante ¶ 30.
Amendment of warrant, see post § 19.
Issuance of new warrant where higher offense is disclosed on examination, see post ¶ 90.
Necessity and sufficiency of cost bond, see post § 44.

¶ 37. A police justice of Detroit should receive and act upon complaints regularly offered for violations of the liquor law, whether the offense is or is not charged to have been committed by a party against whom a complaint is already pending, and it cannot be postponed because the complaint is a "second" one and there is a press of business.—Sadler v. Sheahan, 92 Mich. 630.

¶ 38. Where a justice of the peace refuses to issue a warrant, it is proper practice for the circuit court to issue an order to the justice to show cause why he should not receive the complaint, and issue the warrant.—Allport v. Murphy, 153 Mich. 486.

¶ 39. Where one examining magistrate invites another to sit with him in an examination upon a complaint, an information based on such examination will not be quashed for the omission of the latter to act with the former in issuing process, so long as it does not appear that the former associated the latter with him for that purpose, and that the latter, therefore, had jurisdiction to act (How. St., § 9477).—People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505.

§ 13. Examination and proof before issuing warrant.

Matters relating to the examination of the prisoner for commitment, see post VII.
See Comp. L. 1915, § 15666.

¶ 40. The object of the examination of the complainant and his witnesses by a police justice, in a case not triable by a justice of the peace, is to enable that officer to determine from it whether there is sufficient ground for issuing a warrant.—People v. Bechtel, 80 Mich. 623; People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 274.

¶ 41. Quere, whether an information verified on information and belief alone is sufficient as an oath to justify arrest of accused under Const. art. 6, § 26. [Note. The opinion does not state that it was on information and belief, but it is so stated in the official syllabus, par. 4.]—People v. Stockwell, 135 Mich. 341.

¶ 42. The complaint and examination by a police justice, before issuing the warrant of arrest in cases not cognizable by justices of the peace need not be reduced to writing; and it is no objection that the warrant issued on an affidavit made the day before.—People v. Bechtel, 80 Mich. 623.

¶ 43. No stronger evidence is required for issuing the warrant for arrest than for holding the accused for trial after the arrest.—People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 274.

¶ 44. Where there is admissible evidence tending to show the probable guilt of the accused, the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace to issue a warrant of arrest will not be reviewed upon the weight of the evidence; that is a question for the justice alone, and if it satisfies him, and he issues his warrant, his decision is conclusive.—People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 274.

¶ 45. Where a complaint for arrest is in due form and sufficient on its face to give jurisdiction, whether it is proper after indictment to go behind it to show that no oral examination was had upon oath of the complainant before issuing the warrant, quere.—People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 274.

¶ 46. Though evidence of the girl's statement to her father immediately after the alleged injury might not ordinarily authorize a justice to issue his warrant, still, if he thought there was reasonable cause to believe the defendant guilty, it might be his duty to issue it without waiting for the girl's testimony, if she was unable to give it from sickness or other cause, or where the delay might enable the prisoner to escape.—People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 274.

¶ 47. Where a complaint for assault with intent to ravish is regular on its face, a showing merely that the warrant was issued upon such complaint and an oral examination of the complainant alone, and that he testified only from knowledge and information derived from his daughter, the victim of the alleged offense, is not sufficient to show that the justice acted without jurisdiction in issuing his warrant.—People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 274.

¶ 48. A justice is justified in holding a prisoner for trial for an assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder, where there was testimony of a very serious bodily harm actually inflicted, and of express malice of an aggravated kind.—People v. Harrington, 75 Mich. 112.

IV. THE WARRANT FOR ARREST.

§ 14. Power to issue warrant.

Power to admit to bail, see post §§ 42, 43.
See Comp. L. 1915, § 15665.

¶ 49. The power to issue warrants of arrest involves the determination of the sufficiency of the complaint, which, being a judicial act, cannot be performed by the clerk of a court, nor can he be vested with such power by statute.—People ex rel. Robison v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529; People v. Colleton, 59 Mich. 573.

§ 15. Necessity, requisites and sufficiency.

Authority in person to whom directed or executing it, see ante § 4.
Amendment as to name, see post § 19.
Necessity for warrant to authorize arrest, see ante I.
Statutory requisites, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15667.

¶ 50. It is not necessary that the warrant should recite the evidence adduced before the magistrate, or name the witnesses examined; and the fact that it does recite the making of complaint in writing, and the examination of complaint on oath, will not exclude the presumption that other evidence was taken, if necessary to support the jurisdiction of the justice.—People v. Bennett, 107 Mich. 430.

¶ 51. A warrant for a violation of the local-option law, containing a recital of evidence before the magistrate, is not open to the objection that it not only fails to show, but negatives the fact, that the justice had legal evidence before him (1) that the law was in force within the county, and (2) that respondent was not within the exception relating to druggists and registered pharmacists.—People v. Bennett, 107 Mich. 430.

¶ 52. A warrant for commitment charging merely the driving animals away from another's possession states no criminal offense.—In re Leddy, 11 Mich. 197.

§ 16. ——Name or description of the party.

Of owner of property in complaint, see ante ¶ 31.

¶ 53. A warrant is not void because spelling respondents' proper names "Amel" and "Brailey" instead of "Amiel" and "Brearley."—People v. Gosch, 82 Mich. 22.

¶ 54. Where warrant issued upon complaint for larceny of goods of "Allen Bricker" gave name as "Allen Brinker," it was properly amended after examination to correspond with complaint and testimony.—People v. Hildebrand, 71 Mich. 313.

§ 17. ——Description and specification of charge.

Amendment to state elements, see post § 19.

¶ 55. A warrant for arrest for forgery, reciting that the accused "did utter and publish as true a certain false, forged and counterfeited promissory note" (describing it), "well knowing the same to be false, forged and counterfeited," is not bad for not averring the uttering and publishing to have been with intent to defraud.—Haskins v. Ralston, 69 Mich. 63.

¶ 56. A warrant of arrest is sufficient if it informs the accused of the nature of the accusation, and if it recites the substance of the offense, describing the crime with such accuracy as to show that it is within the jurisdiction of the officer to take bail.—People v. Kahler, 93 Mich. 625; Haskins v. Ralston, 69 Mich. 63.

¶ 57. A warrant of arrest for an offense not cognizable by a justice of the peace is sufficient if it sets out in language within the ordinary comprehension the substantial elements constituting the offense charged, leaving to the information the office describing it with technical accuracy.—People v. Pichette, 111 Mich. 461.

¶ 58. In larceny triable by a justice the value of property stolen is of the essence of the offense, and the averment thereof in the warrant a substantial allegation, for the jurisdiction depends on it and the warrant must show jurisdiction.—People v. Belcher, 58 Mich. 325.

¶ 59. In making a complaint before a justice, and in the examining witnesses before issuing of a warrant, the proceedings are not only ex parte, but general, and not confined to any particular offense; but the warrant must specify some particular offense, and the proceedings thereafter become specific and limited by the offense charged in the warrant.—Yaner v. People, 34 Mich. 286.

¶ 60. A warrant for the burning of a sawmill, which avers that the act was committed with force and arms, contrary to the form of the statute, and against the peace of the state, and which refers to such act as a felony, sufficiently charges an offense under How. St., § 9125, although it does not in terms allege that the burning was wilful and malicious.—People v. Pichette, 111 Mich. 461.

§ 18. For arrest and production of convict accused of crime within prison.

¶ 61. Pub. Acts 1893, No. 118, providing for the prosecution and punishment of convicts who commit crimes in prison by proceeding "in all ways conforming to" like offense elsewhere committed, except that examination by a justice may be had in the prison, etc., contemplates the ordinary complaint, the ordinary warrant, and the ordinary information, and in addition thereto the warrant must be directed to the warden who has the person in charge.—People v. Cook, 147 Mich. 127.

¶ 62. A warrant to produce a prisoner accused of crime in prison, is not fatally defective for failing to follow the exact language of the statute (Pub. Acts 1905, No. 184, § 65); so the use of the word "inmate" instead of "convict" to describe the person apprehended was not prejudicial.—People v. Cook, 147 Mich. 127.

¶ 63. Where a warrant on charge of crime in prison was directed to the warden of a prison, if he sees fit to produce the prisoner before the examining magistrate, and before the circuit court for trial, upon a warrant technically defective that is no concern of the prisoner. His rights are not prejudiced by the waiver on the warden's part of the technical defects in the warrant. (Pub. Acts 1905, No. 184, § 65.)—People v. Cook, 147 Mich. 127.

§ 19. Amendment of warrant.

Amendment of commitment, see post § 39.

¶ 64. A justice may, before trial for larceny, permit the warrant to be amended to show the value of the property taken; but if he does not the circuit court on appeal cannot allow such amendment.—People v. Belcher, 58 Mich. 325.

¶ 65. Respondent was arrested upon a warrant describing the property stolen as the property of one "Allen Brinker," issued on a complaint for larceny of the goods of "Allen Bricker." After the preliminary examination the justice amended the warrant so as to make it correspond with the complaint and the testimony given upon the examination. Held, that the amendment was authorized (How. St., § 9537), and was not ground for quashing an information subsequently filed.—People v. Hildebrand, 71 Mich. 313.

V. MAKING ARREST AND KEEPING OF PRISONER; RECOGNIZING TO APPEAR.

§ 20. In general; reading or producing warrant.

Possession of warrant at place of arrest, see also ante ¶ 20.

¶ 66. It is a general rule in regard to criminal arrests that bailiffs and constables, if they be sworn and commonly known as officers, while they need not show the parties to be apprehended their warrant, though demanded, are yet required to acquaint them with the substance of it; and private persons to whom a warrant is directed, and even officers, if not sworn and commonly known as such, or acting out of their precinct, must show their warrant if demanded.—People v. Moore, 2 D. 1.

¶ 67. A constable who has knowledge that a warrant has been issued for the arrest of a person for felony may himself lawfully make the arrest without having the warrant in his possession. But he should inform the person arrested of the facts, or at least of the offense for which he is arrested.—Drennan v. People, 10 Mich. 169.

§ 21. Arrest by several officers.

See also ante ¶¶ 19, 67.

¶ 68. The arrest is lawful, where two officers acting together are attempting to apprehend a prisoner who kills one of them, though the warrant is in possession of the other. —People v. Durfee, 62 Mich. 487; but see McCullough v. Greenfield, 133 Mich. 463, where an arrest while the warrant was at another place was held to be a false imprisonment.

¶ 69. A warrant for arrest for a misdemeanor cannot lawfully be held by two officers at once when they are not together; and where the sheriff takes such a warrant and starts in search of the defendant, directing his deputy to search in another place, the latter has no authority to make the arrest. —People v. McLean, 68 Mich. 480.

§ 22. Manner of making arrest.

¶ 70. An officer making an arrest for felony has some discretion as to the means of apprehending the supposed offender, and of keeping him safe—e. g., by means of handcuffing—after such apprehension.—Firestone v. Rice, 71 Mich. 377.

§ 23. Rearrest.

Privilege of prisoner arrested and brought in on another charge, see ante § 5.
As discharge of bail, see post § 50.

¶ 71. The validity of an arrest under proper proceedings does not depend on the fact that respondent is already in custody for the same offense by a void arrest without warrant.—People v. Payment, 109 Mich. 553.

§ 24. Jurisdictional and territorial limits.

See Comp. L. 1915, § 15668.

¶ 72. In the absence of a treaty with Great Britain authorizing it, the process of the United States courts in admiralty cannot be executed in Canadian waters.—People v. Tyler, 7 Mich. 161; Tyler v. People, 8 Mich. 320.

§ 25. Detention or liberation on recognisance.

Use of handcuffs, see also ante ¶ 70.
Duty to examine promptly, see post § 30.
Discharge on examination, see post § 40.
Executing the recognizance and requisites of it, see post § 44.
Validity of recognizance as prerequisite for discharge on subsequent order, see post ¶ 116.
Sureties as custodians of bailed prisoner, see also post ¶ 141.
Sufficiency of surrender by bail, see post ¶ 142.
Subsequent illegal detention as affecting leg lity of arrest, see also False Imprisonment.
On holding prisoner to answer, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15682.
Pending adjournment of examination, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15674.
See Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15670, 15672.

VI. SEIZURE AND KEEPING OR DISPOSAL OF PROPERTY OR EVIDENCE.

§ 26. In general.

Seizure under fish and game laws, see Fish and Game.
Search warrants and seizure of property thereunder, see Search and Seizure.
Admissibility of articles as evidence or of evidence that incriminating articles were found in possession of accused, see Indictment and Prosecution, VIII.

¶ 73. Police officers have no right to take and retain money found upon a person arrested, except for the purpose of using it as evidence on the trial of the proceedings instituted by the arrest.—Hubbard v. Garner, 115 Mich. 406.

VII. EXAMINATION AND COMMITMENT FOR TRIAL OR DISCHARGE.

§ 27. In general; nature of proceedings.

Purpose and necessity, see post § 28.
Complaint as prerequisite, see ante § 6.
Examination before issuing warrant, see ante § 13.
Judicial notice of character of the proceeding and time required, see Evidence, I.
Presumption that examination was regularly conducted, see Evidence, II.
See Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15677-15679.

¶ 74. The examination is not a trial, but an investigation to decide whether a crime has been committed, and whether there is probable cause to believe the accused is guilty.—McCurdy v. New York Life Ins. Co., 115 Mich. 20.

¶ 75. A preliminary examination is not a trial, and the rules that govern criminal pleadings and the scope and import of trial issues, and the relevancy of evidence, are not applicable.—Turner v. People, 33 Mich. 363.

¶ 76. The proceedings on preliminary examination are not judicial in the technical sense of the term, and when once begun, on proper complaint and arrest, do not abate before their final disposition by discharge or commitment.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

§ 28. Purpose and necessity of examination.

Of examination before issuing warrant, see ante § 13.

¶ 77. The examination is designed to accomplish, to some extent, the purpose of a presentment by a grand jury; but not that the complaint or warrant shall stand in the place of a formal presentment, nor that in the circuit court the prosecuting officer should be limited by it in the mode of charging the offense.—Annis v. People, 13 Mich. 511.

¶ 78. The preliminary examination is not designed to deprive the accused of any substantial rights that existed before.—Yaner v. People, 34 Mich. 286.

¶ 79. One who was undergoing imprisonment for one crime, having previously committed another for which he had not been tried, escaped and fled to Canada. He was extradited on the untried offense. Held, that under How. St., § 9555, he was a "fugitive from justice," and could be informed against for such untried offense without having had a preliminary examination.—People v. Kuhn, 67 Mich. 463.

§ 29. Waiver of examination.

Ordering further return to show waiver, see post ¶ 113.

Waiver on arraignment or at trial, see Indictment, I, D.

¶ 80. The defendant may waive his right to have a preliminary examination before an information is filed against him, as well when called upon to plead to the information as when brought before the examining magistrate. And if, at the time of pleading, he make no objection on the ground that such examination has not been had or waived, he must be understood to admit that it has been had, or that he has waived or then intends to waive it.—Washburn v. People, 10 Mich. 372; Hicks v. People, 10 Mich. 395.

¶ 81. An omission of the justice in receiving the complaint on information and belief to examine any witness before issuing the warrant, and to hold a preliminary examination, is waived where the accused on coming before the justice waived it and when arraigned pleaded not guilty.—People v. Harris, 103 Mich. 473.

¶ 82. If a person is arrested on a warrant charging an offense including lower grades, he should not waive examination if he wishes the examining magistrate to specifically designate the offense committed.—Stuart v. People, 42 Mich. 255.

¶ 83. One who is arrested on a criminal warrant can either insist upon or waive examination, and, if he waives it, may be held for trial on the showing upon which the warrant for arrest was issued, and the information may cover any crime charged thereby. —Stuart v. People, 42 Mich. 255.

§ 30. Time for examination; adjournments.

Postponement of reception of complaint, see ante ¶ 37.

Sufficiency of the recognizance to hold for adjournments, see post § 48, ¶ 139.

Detention and custody pending adjournment, and commitment for such period, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15674, 15675.

¶ 84. The preliminary examination of a person charged with a crime, especially, if a nonbailable offense, must be made promptly, and should not be put off to await the mere convenience of the magistrate or prosecuting officer.—In re Peoples, 47 Mich. 626.

¶ 85. Technical nicety as to adjournments is not required, and irregularities therein cannot be considered on the subsequent trial on the merits. Where the examination continued from day to day over several days, one of which was a legal holiday, the commitment for trial, was not void.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

§ 31. Before whom held.

Who may admit to bail, see post §§ 42, 43.

Power of justice to whom docket and papers are transferred to make return, see post ¶ 107.

Issuance of process by one magistrate when another is associated on hearing, see ante ¶ 39.

See Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15667, 15669, 15672, 15673.

Association of other magistrate, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15688.

¶ 86. Where, upon an affidavit by the accused that the examining justice who issued the warrant is a material witness for him, the justice directs him to be taken before another justice, such action is illegal, and the justice who issued the warrant does not lose, nor does the other justice acquire, jurisdiction; the prisoner should be taken before and examined by the justice who issued the warrant.—People v. Duncan, 97 Mich. 632.

§ 32. Counsel in the examination.

Counsel for accused, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15678.

¶ 87. Any person may take part in behalf of the people in a criminal examination before a magistrate, if such magistrate and the prosecuting attorney do not object, and there is no good reason forbidding it.—Sayles v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 84.

§ 33. Functions and power of magistrate.

Power to admit to bail, see post §§ 42, 43.
Powers of judges and assistant or substitute judges in conducting examinations, see Judges, IV.
Power to exclude spectators at certain examinations, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15700.
Summoning and binding over witnesses, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15680, 15683-15686.

¶ 88. The examining magistrate cannot procure the witnesses' signatures after he has made his return to the circuit court.—People v. Chapman, 62 Mich. 280.

¶ 89. Under Comp. L. 1857, chap. 194, the examining magistrate had no power to commit a witness for refusing to testify on the examination. He has no powers except as are expressly conferred on him.—In re Farnham, 8 Mich. 89.

§ 34. Scope of inquiry on examination.

Before issuing warrant, see ante § 13.
Office of the complaint for warrant and the warrant to ascertain and specify crime complained of, see ante ¶ 59.
Relaxation of technical rules of evidence and trial, see ante § 27.
Showing of the proceedings in return, see post § 38.
See Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15677, 15679.

¶ 90. An examining magistrate need not weigh evidence as a petit jury would, nor discharge the prisoner where the evidence conflicts or in case of a mere reasonable doubt of his guilt; his inquiry may extend to all the facts connected with the charge, though they show an offense different from or greater than that charged; but if it appear that a higher or different offense has been committed a new warrant should thereupon be issued charging the proper offense, upon which an examination may be had.—Yaner v. People, 34 Mich. 286.

¶ 91. The magistrate must determine whether an offense has been committed, and at the same time specify it so that it may be seen whether it is an offense which he can bail or not.—Yaner v. People, 34 Mich. 286.

¶ 91a. How. St., § 9466, requiring examination of complainant, is directory as to the quantity of testimony to be taken upon a preliminary examination, and means that the magistrate shall receive such testimony from the complainant and his witnesses as may be offered, and shall act upon it; and the objection cannot be raised on the trial that the complainant was not sworn on such examination.—People v. Curtis, 95 Mich. 212.

§ 35. ——On complaint for two or more crimes.

Effect of waiver of examination, see ante ¶ 82.

¶ 92. Where the offense charged in a justice's warrant includes one or more others of less degree, the magistrate should determine which offense, if any, has been committed, to the end that the accused may not be put upon trial for an offense greater than that for which he had been examined and held for trial.—Yaner v. People, 34 Mich. 286.

¶ 93. The rule that one should not be subject to trial for two separate and distinct offenses at the same time, has no application to a justice court proceeding in which the warrant charged the crime of a specific illegal sale of liquor, and that of keeping a place for illegal sale, and where respondent was examined and bound over on both charges and the justice declined to compel an election by the prosecution; as under Comp. L. 1897, § 5429, the specific sale was presumptive evidence of the keeping of a place where liquors were sold, and the examination therefore took no wider range than it would have taken had the charge been only for keeping the place open; and besides respondent's rights were fully protected by requiring the prosecution to elect in the circuit court on which count to proceed.—People v. Shuler, 130 Mich. 161.

§ 36. Reduction of testimony to writing.

Of testimony, affidavit or complaint and examination thereon for issuance of warrant, see ante § 13.
Use as evidence on trial, see Indictment, VIII.
See Comp. L. 1915, § 15680.

¶ 94. Where, at the preliminary examination of an accused person, the testimony given by the witnesses and reduced to writing is not signed by them, the examination is fatally defective, and does not warrant the filing of an information.—People v. Smith, 25 Mich. 497; People v. Chapman, 62 Mich. 280; People v. Brock, 64 Mich. 691.

¶ 95. While, under How. St., § 9469, the accused may insist that the testimony of a witness be read over to such witness before he signs, yet if the accused makes no objection at the time to the omission to read it, he cannot do so afterwards.—People v. Gleason, 63 Mich. 626.

¶¶ 96-98. Where the deposition taken on a preliminary examination did not show whether the testimony was or was not read over to the witness before she signed it, and neither the justice nor any one else could swear whether it was or was not so read, it could not be said that the witness did not know what she was signing.—People v. Dowdigan, 67 Mich. 95.

§ 37. Findings and commitment.

Determination which of several crimes shall be answered, see also ante § 35.
Specification of offense, see also ante ¶ 91.
Showing in the return, see post § 38.
Sufficiency of showing and description and conditions in bail bond, see post §§ 44-46.
Certification on mittimus of amount of bail, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15697.

¶ 99. No specific record of the finding by the justice of probable cause or otherwise is required.—Turner v. People, 33 Mich. 363.

¶ 100. Where the examining magistrate requires an accused person to recognize to answer the charge, he need not make or certify to the circuit court a finding that the offense has been committed.—People v. Ten Elshof, 92 Mich. 167.

¶ 101. A commitment is not bad if in terms that would be good in an indictment.—Brownell v. People, 38 Mich. 732.

¶ 102. The phrase "cause to suspect" instead of "cause to believe" is admissible in a commitment; and it has not been held necessary in practice that the commitment state that the party is to be held "for trial," as that is taken for granted.—Brownell v. People, 38 Mich. 732.

¶ 103. A commitment for trial is invalid if the magistrate fails to fix the amount of bail. —In re Leddy, 11 Mich. 197.

¶ 104. An examining magistrate, after hearing the testimony of witnesses on a murder charge, gave an oral order holding over the accused for trial. Held, this did not preclude him from later taking additional steps and binding over the accused by formal order after the testimony was written up.—Oblaser v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 665.

§ 38. Certification and return.

Matters to be found or stated in commitment, see ante § 37.
Return as divesting jurisdiction and powers, see ante ¶ 88.
Return as prerequisite to filing of information, see Indictment and Prosecution, I, A.
Certification and return of examinations and recognizances, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15689.

¶ 105. A sufficient preliminary examination is shown where a sufficient complaint and warrant appear on examination of witnesses before the magistrate who issued the warrant, and a commitment by him reciting that he finds the crime charged has been committed and probable cause to believe respondent guilty.—People v. Coffman, 59 Mich. 1.

¶ 106. A certificate of an examining magistrate that "it appears to me that said offense has been committed, and there is just cause to suspect the said defendant to be guilty thereof," is sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the circuit court to try the case, and complies with How. St., § 9471.—People v. Sutherland, 104 Mich. 468.

¶ 107. Where a justice of the peace, before whom a preliminary examination was held, has made and entered on his docket all the findings necessary to confer jurisdiction upon the circuit court if filed with the papers in the case as his return under the statute, a justice to whom such papers and docket are transferred has the right, and it is his legal duty, to certify the same to the circuit court, and an information may be filed thereon.—People v. Schick, 75 Mich. 592.

¶ 108. Where complaint was made and a warrant issued for larceny and for receiving stolen goods, and the examining magistrate certified that it appeared to him that the said offense so charged was committed, and that there was probable cause to believe the respondent to have been guilty of the commission thereof, it was held sufficient to authorize the prosecuting attorney to file an information charging respondent with a larceny of the property.—Brown v. People, 39 Mich. 37.

¶ 109. Where the justice certified that the preliminary examination of a witness on a criminal complaint was taken by him on oath and was sworn to and subscribed by the witness before him, and the deposition so certified was returned by him, with the warrant and other papers, to the clerk of a circuit court, held a sufficient compliance with How. St., § 9478, which requires it to be certified and returned.—People v. Dowdigan, 67 Mich. 95.

¶ 110. A justice need not certify to the circuit court the degree of murder of which he returns that there is probable cause to believe the defendant guilty.—Cargen v. People, 39 Mich. 549.

¶ 111. Where the examining magistrate requires an accused person to recognize to answer the charge, he need not certify to the circuit court a finding that the offense has been committed; so held, where he certified that he found there was probable cause to believe an offense had been committed, and that there was probable cause to believe respondent guilty thereof.—People v. Whittemore, 102 Mich. 519.

§ 39. ——Amendment or further return.

Amending return or making further return, see post § 39.

Making formal commitment after oral one, see ante ¶ 104.

¶ 112. Where an examining magistrate makes a return prematurely, before the evidence is written up and signed by the witness, or his return is for other reasons invalid, he may amend the same before filing it, or write out a new one.—Oblaser v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 665.

¶ 113. Where an examining magistrate fails to certify in his return that the respondent waived a preliminary examin tion, which was the fact, the circuit court has power to order a further return showing such waiver, and trial may be had upon the information filed on the basis of the original return.—People v. Wright, 89 Mich. 70.

¶ 114. An examining magistrate on a charge against relator of murder, heard the witnesses, remanded the relator for trial to the circuit court, and made his return. No formal continuance was made of the case, and ten days later the magistrate called in the witnesses in defendant's presence, and without his objection, for the purpose of signing statements of their testimony which had been reduced to writing. Relator contended that the magistrate's return did not truly present the case, and brought mandamus to compel the circuit judge to vacate an order denying a motion for an amended return. Held, the writ should be denied.—Oblaser v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 665.

§ 40. Discharge of prisoner.

Privilege of arrested prisoner from arrest on another charge while within jurisdiction, see ante § 5.

See Comp. L. 1915, § 15681.

¶ 115. A person arrested on a defective warrant issued by a justice is entitled to his discharge: and the chance that it may be supplemented by facts not yet known to the justice will not justify a mandamus compelling the sheriff to serve it, where it will be necessary to take the respondent several hundred miles for his examination.—Beecher v. Anderson, 45 Mich. 543.

¶ 116. A police justice's order for release of a prisoner arrested for violation of a city ordinance is void, when founded on an invalid recognizance to appear for trial, it having been taken contrary to law in the prisoner's absence.—Couzens v. Sellers, 199 Mich. 457.

VIII. ADMISSION TO BAIL.

§ 41. Bailable offenses and right to bail.

Sufficiency of recitals in bond, see post §§ 45, 46.

Habeas corpus to admit to bail, see Habeas Corpus.

Pending review on exceptions or pending error after conviction, see Indictment and Prosecution, XVI, A.

Constitutional right, see Const., art. 2, § 14.

Amount, excessiveness, see Const., art. 2, § 15.

§ 42. Who may admit to bail.

After commitment, see post § 43.

Generally, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15690, 15691.

Certification on warrant where arrested and bailed in another county, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15671.

¶ 117. Under Const., art. 6, § 29, which provides that "all persons shall, before conviction, be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for murder and treason when the proof is evident or the presumption great," and How. St., § 9479, which authorizes justices of the peace to let to bail in all cases where the punishment for the offense charged shall be less than imprisonment for life in the state prison, a justice may admit to bail a person charged with a crime the punishment for which is imprisonment for life or for any number of years, as in case of rape.—People v. Burwell, 106 Mich. 27.

¶ 118. Circuit judges have power, independently of statutory provisions, to take bail in criminal cases at chambers; and the same power may be conferred by the legislature upon circuit court commissioners.—Daniels v. People, 6 Mich. 381.

§ 43. ——After commitment or indictment.

Continuance of recognizance pending exceptions, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15842.

After commitment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15687.

By clerk when amount is certified on mittimus, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15697, 15698.

¶ 119. A circuit court commissioner has power, under How. St., § 9476, to admit a prisoner to bail in a less sum than that fixed by the examining magistrate.—People v. Robb, 98 Mich. 397.

¶ 120. After a person charged with crime has been bound over to the recorder's court for trial, a police justice of Detroit cannot admit him to bail (How. St., § 6591g1).—Mills v. Chambers, 91 Mich. 521.

¶ 121. R. S. 1846, Chap. 163, § 26, How. St., § 9479, does not confer authority upon the officers therein named to take recognizance of persons in custody, charged with offenses, after indictment found.—People v. Rutan, 3 Mich. 42.

¶ 122. A circuit court commissioner has power to admit to bail a respondent committed for trial upon a charge of murder in the first degree, except where the proof is evident or the presumption great.—Elder v. Garner, 97 Mich. 617.

IX. REQUISITES OF BAIL AND QUALIFICATION OF SURETIES.

§ 44. In general; execution and filing of the instrument.

Necessity of fixing amount in commitment, see ante § 38.
Describing the crime, conditions and reason, see post §§ 45, 46.
Necessity of renewing recognizance when trial is continued, see also post ¶ 140.
Reduction of amount fixed by committing magistrate, see post § 43, ¶ 119.
Invalidity of order for discharge when recognizance is void, see ante ¶ 116.
Recognizance to keep the peace, see Indictment and Prosecution, XVIII.
Authority to administer oath to bail, see Jud. Act, Chap. XX, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 12738.
Requiring new sureties, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15699.

¶ 123. A recognizance is an obligation of record with condition to be void on performance of some act specified. It is entered into either before some court of record, or before a magistrate out of court and afterwards enrolled in a court of record; but in the latter case it is the acknowledgment that gives the recognizance its force as a record, and the enrolment is for safe custody and notifying it to others.—See Lang v. People, 14 Mich. 439, per Cooley and Martin, JJ., affirming lower court by equal division.

¶ 124. A recognizance is a common-law obligation, and the sureties may be bound separately from their principals.—People v. Dennis, 4 Mich. 609.

¶ 125. A recognizance (to keep the peace) must be executed by the accused in person before the magistrate.—In re Fowler, 49 Mich. 234.

¶ 126. Under Detroit Charter of 1914-1916, p. 472, § 10, giving to the police justices, the clerk of the police court, or the clerk of the recorder's court power to take recognizances for appearance to answer any charge that may be made under certain ordinances, and providing that it shall be the duty of the officer having a person in custody to produce him before "any of said officers for the purpose of giving bail when required to do so," and that the recognizance shall be filed in the office of the clerk of "the court before whom such person is brought for trial," a recognizance cannot be taken by a police judge in the absence of the prisoner.—Couzens v. Sellers, 199 Mich. 457.

¶ 127. A recognizance signed by the sureties before the arrest of the principal, and on the next day certified by the justice in due form as and for a recognizance taken before him, is not valid and creates no liability.—Clute v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 131 Mich. 203.

¶ 128. Bonds for costs in criminal cases, signed in blank by a surety and left with a justice of the peace to fill in and use as he sees fit after an alleged offender is arrested, are not valid under Comp. L. 1897, § 1061, which provides that no warrant shall issue "unless security for costs shall have been filed with said justice."—Hutchinson v. Board of Supervisors of Ionia Co., 130 Mich. 62.

¶ 129. The failure of the clerk to file a recognizance which is estreated and produced on trial of action thereon, is no objection under How. St., § 9485, which provides that no such action shall be barred or defeated "by reason of any defect in the form of the recognizance, if it sufficiently appear from the tenor thereof at what court the party or witness was bound to appear."—People v. Robb, 98 Mich. 397.

§ 45. Statement of charge and obligations.

¶ 130. A recognizance need not set out the offense with the same particularity as an indictment. If described with such certainty as to show that the case is one in which the officer is empowered to take bail, it is sufficient.—People v. Rutan, 3 Mich. 42; Daniels v. People, 6 Mich. 381.

¶ 131. In the recognizance of a person charged with an offense that has a definite and well-understood general name, naming the offense by such is a definite description of it.—People v. Dennis, 4 Mich. 609.

¶ 132. The recital of a charge that the principal "did set fire to and wilfully burn a building situate," etc., "known as the Canal Mills," and stating the ownership, was held sufficient to state that it was a mill building.—People v. Rutan, 3 Mich. 42.

¶ 133. The description of the offense as "the crime of incest" is sufficient; and the facts constituting the offense need not be set out in the recognizance. So, also, where the description is "the crime of attempt to procure an abortion."—Daniels v. People, 6 Mich. 381.

¶ 134. An information charged the felonious breaking and entering in the nighttime of a shop not adjoining to or occupied with a dwelling house, with intent to commit larceny. The next count charged larceny. The respondent entered into a recognizance before the court in which the information was pending, conditioned for his appearance to "answer to an information on file against him for burglary." Held, that the recognizance sufficiently identified the offense charged, and that an action thereon was maintainable under How. St., § 9485, providing that no action brought upon any recognizance shall be barred or defeated by reason of any defect in the form of the recognizance, if it sufficiently appear therefrom at what court the party was bound to appear, and that the court before whom it was taken was authorized by law to take it.—People v. Hanaw, 106 Mich. 421.

¶ 135. Where defendant has been committed for want of bail by the examining magistrate, and subsequently, on his own application, is let to bail by a commissioner, it is not necessary that the recognizance should show upon its face that the offense was committed within the jurisdiction of the magistrate. The entering into such recognizance being a voluntary act of defendant, of which he can only avail himself on his own showing of a legal commitment, the presumptions are in favor of its validity.—Daniels v. People, 6 Mich. 381.

§ 46. Statement of reason or cause for bail.
See also post ¶ 150.

¶ 136. The special circumstances under which the recognizance is taken need not be recited, if it is conditioned for some act warranted by the law, and is taken before a court or officer authorized thereto.—People v. Dennis, 4 Mich. 609.

¶ 137. It is not necessary that the condition of a recognizance taken by a justice of the peace for appearance at a future day for further examination of a person charged with an offense should state that probable cause appears for holding to bail.—People v. Freeman, 20 Mich. 418.

X. FORFEITURE OF BAIL AND ENTRY OF DEFAULT.

Recording forfeiture, see also post ¶ 155.
Effect of failure to file bond, see ante ¶ 129.
Necessity of judgment on forfeiture, see post § 56.
Mode of enforcement and procedure to enforce, see post XII.
Minutes as evidence of forfeiture, see post ¶ 155.
Remission of forfeiture, see post § 52.
Attachment of property by bail to reimburse himself, see Attachment.
Right of third person to intervene on attachment, see Attachment, XI.
For default to appear to adjourned examination, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15676.

¶ 138. The forfeiture may be declared by the court before which the act constituting the condition is to be done, when there is a default of which it can take judicial notice such as nonappearance; but a trial and proof of the facts is requisite where the breach cannot be judicially known, such as on a recognizance to keep the peace.—Lang v. People, 14 Mich. 439, per Cooley and Martin, JJ., affirming lower court by equal division.

XI. LIABILITY OF SURETIES, SURRENDER AND DISCHARGE, OR REMISSION.

§ 48. Obligation and breach of conditions.
Requisites and validity of the recognizance or bail bond to hold sureties, see ante IX.
Sufficiency to require appearance over a continuance, see also post ¶ 143.
Amount of liability, see post § 56.
Several liability, see also ante ¶ 124.
Satisfaction by surrender, appearance, arrest, or trial, see post §§ 49-51.
Pleading defenses, see post § 54.
On bastardy recognizance, see Bastards.

¶ 139. A recognizance requiring the accused to appear from day to day for examination and not depart the court without leave is enough to bind him to remain in attendance during the whole examination, whether continued from day to day or adjourned over to any time and place within the jurisdiction of the magistrate to specify.—People v. Gordon, 39 Mich. 259.

¶ 140. Where the case of a party who is under recognizance to appear and answer is called for trial and continued without any requirement that the recognizance be renewed, he cannot on a subsequent day be called and defaulted, and have judgment against him on the recognizance.—Townsend v. People, 14 Mich. 388.

§ 49. Surrender of prisoner by bail.

¶ 141. The bail of an accused person are entitled to his custody, and may deliver him to the authorities at any time; the legal duress does not cease until the prisoner is discharged.—In re Cannon, 47 Mich. 481.

¶ 142. A request to a deputy sheriff, by a surety in a recognizance in a criminal case, to take the principal into custody if he should interpose a plea of not guilty to the charge preferred against him, is not a sufficient surrender of the principal.—People v. Robb, 98 Mich. 397.

§ 50. Discharge by appearance or arrest of prisoner.

Appearance at day defeated by lack of session, see also post ¶ 146.
Discharge on civil satisfaction of wrong, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15692.

¶ 143. A recognizance requiring the principal "to appear at the next term of the court, and not depart therefrom without leave until discharged," requires his attendance from day to day and term to term until discharged; and sureties are not discharged by a continuance of the case to the following term, granted upon the application of the principal at the term at which he was bound to appear.—People v. Hanaw, 106 Mich. 421.

¶ 144. A sheriff having no power to constitute a deputy for a particular act except by warrant in writing, the arrest on a bench warrant of a person indicted and under recognizance to appear, by one having only oral authority from the sheriff, is illegal and does not discharge the recognizance.—People v. Moore, 2 D. 1.

¶ 145. The arrest of the principal in a recognizance entered into in a criminal case, on another charge, to which he pleads guilty, and his subsequent detention for a few moments, at the place where he is required to appear by the terms of the recognizance, while he is paying the fine imposed, will not discharge the sureties in the recognizance.—People v. Robb, 98 Mich. 397.

§ 51. Discharge by trial or failure to try.

¶ 146. Where a convict's bail has been extended from time to time by successive orders suspending sentence and directing him to appear at a stated time to receive it, his sureties are released if court should not be in session at such time, and the convict himself is under no further obligation to present himself.—People v. Kennedy, 58 Mich. 372.

¶ 147. The destruction of an indictment before the term at which the accused is recognized to appear is no defense to an action upon the recognizance.—People v. Dennis, 4 Mich. 609.

§ 52. Remission of forfeiture.

¶ 148. The sum recovered in an action of debt upon a recognizance of appearance bail is a penal forfeiture, and may be remitted like a fine.—Courtright v. Attorney General, 43 Mich. 411.

XII. ENFORCEMENT OF BAIL BOND OR RECOGNIZANCE.

§ 53. Form of procedure and pleading.

Forfeiture and entry of same, when sufficient or proper, see ante § 47.

¶ 149. In addition to the common-law remedies of scire facias or debt on the record, and the statutory remedies of assumpsit or debt (R. S., chap. 128 § 30), judgment might be entered after two days after due entry of forfeiture on the record, unless good cause to the contrary be shown, and execution might be ordered on such judgment (Laws 1861, p. 136); and no process or notice was required.—Lang v. People, 14 Mich. 439, per Cooley and Martin, JJ., Campbell and Christiancy, JJ., dissenting on the ground that the latter statute was unconstitutional and the judgment being affirmed by equal division.

¶ 150. Where a recognizance has a condition to do some act, for the doing of which it may properly be taken, and the court or officer before whom it is taken has authority therefor, the recognizance is valid although it does not recite the special circumstances under which it is taken; and in declaring upon such recognizance it is not necessary to aver facts showing that the court or officer had authority to take it.—People v. Dennis, 4 Mich. 609.

¶ 151. In declaring on a recognizance, an omission to state that the principal was a party to it, cannot be available on a motion in arrest of judgment.—People v. Dennis, 4 Mich. 609.

¶ 152. There is no substantial variance between a declaration charging respondent with having "feloniously and burglariously broken and entered," and a recognizance reciting that he "did break and enter."—People v. Gordon, 39 Mich. 259.

§ 54. Pleas and objections.

Effect of failure to file bond, see ante ¶ 129.
Sufficiency of description of crime and conditions of bond, see ante § 45.
Ground to arrest judgment, see ante ¶ 151.
Effect of failure to note default, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15696.

¶ 153. The rule that in actions ex contractu the nonjoinder of a co-contractor, unless appearing on the face of the declaration, can only be taken advantage of by plea in abatement, applies to actions on recognizances.—People v. Dennis, 4 Mich. 609.

¶ 154. In any case where there is a general jurisdiction to let to bail, and a recognizance is accepted, the objection that the recognizance was extorted from the prisoner in violation of his right, must be made by way of defense, if at all.—People v. Robb, 98 Mich. 397.

§ 55. Evidence.

¶ 155. A minute made by the police justice upon the files of a case, stating the non-appearance of the accused and the forfeiture of his recognizance, and ordering his re-arrest, is sufficient evidence of his default in an action on the recognizance, even though the clerk had neglected to transfer it to the record of the court.—People v. Gordon, 39 Mich. 259.

§ 56. Judgment and measure of recovery.

Ground for arrest of judgment, see ante ¶ 151.
Remission of forfeiture, see ante § 52.
First questioning on error the sufficiency of the recognizance, see Saving Questions for Review.

¶ 156. The mere entry of forfeiture on default is not of itself a judgment.—People v. Stimer, 82 Mich. 17.

¶ 157. The measure of recovery on a recognizance of bail is the whole amount of the obligation without reference to the merits.—Courtright v. Attorney General, 43 Mich. 411.

¶ 158. Under How. St., § 8457, providing that the judgment upon a forfeited recognizance shall be for the amount of the penalty thereof, interest from the date of forfeiture cannot be included in the judgment.—People v. Hanaw, 106 Mich. 421.

§ 57. Costs.

¶ 159. An action upon a recognizance of bail for the appearance of a person charged with a crime is not such a civil action as authorizes costs to be taxed against the state under How. St., § 8984.—Courtright v. Attorney General, 43 Mich. 411.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

TREATS of unlawful menace or attempt with force or violence to do corporal hurt to another and of battery consummating such menace or attempt, whether as a tort or as a crime. Assaults aggravated by the existence of an intent to commit some felony or to do great bodily harm are treated in connection with the crime intended to be accomplished, since they generally are cognate to such crimes in legal sense more nearly than to simple assaults (see Crimes; Homicide; Rape). Torts to the person by carriers (see Carriers, IV, E), railroads (see Railroads, VIII) and street railways (see Street Railways, IV), and the liability of a master to his servant for personal injuries (see Master and Servant, III) are treated in the topics parenthetically named. The doctrine of respondeat superior is treated in Agency, II, B; Master and Servant, IV.

Because of the similarity of the elements in the crime and those in the tort, an exception has been made from the policy of treating in Crimes and in Indictment and Prosecution all matters of criminal law and procedure. Such matters as are peculiar to Assault and Battery are treated in this topic, but all criminal law points which depend on rules equally applicable to other crimes will be found in Crimes or in Indictment.]
Punishments for simple assault prescribed, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15220.
Right to discharge from commitment on making civil satisfaction, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15692, 15693.

¶ 1. An assault is an inchoate violence to the person of another with the present means of carrying the intent into effect; threats are not enough; there must be violence actually offered, and within such distance that harm may follow it if the assailant is not hindered. —People v. Lilley, 43 Mich. 521.

¶ 2. An assault involves "every attempt or offer, with force and violence, to do a corporal hurt to another."—People v. Sheffield, 105 Mich. 117.

¶ 3. Where an attempt is made with an intent to do bodily hurt to another under circumstances making the accomplishment of the attempt possible, an assault may result without any actual contact.—People v. Carlson, 160 Mich. 426.

¶ 4. A common assault is indictable.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

¶ 5. It is an assault upon a person to intentionally shoot him with a pistol loaded with ball.—People v. Mortimer, 48 Mich. 37.

¶ 6. Assaults are by the statute substantially divided into degrees, and an indictment for any of the aggravated assaults, or assaults and batteries, includes the simple assault or assault and battery.—Hanna v. People, 19 Mich. 316.

¶ 7. A., being engaged in a dispute with B., struck him with a short birch stick, the blow falling on his hat, which was a stiff Derby one, and which was not broken or cut, though B.'s scalp was broken so as to bleed somewhat. Held, that it was at worst no more than a simple assault. When the intent is shown merely by the deed, it cannot well be stretched beyond it.—People v. Ross, 66 Mich. 94.

¶ 8. Respondent having been, with his family, grossly insulted, expostulated with the offender the next morning, and in a fight which ensued struck him on the head, inflicting a slight wound, after shooting to scare, without intending to hit him. Held, that, whoever began the assault, respondent was guilty of nothing more than assault and battery.—People v. Lennon, 71 Mich. 298.

§ 2. Intention without action; menacing words.

Menace without contact, see also ante ¶ 3.
Civil liability where person is struck, though not intended object, see post § 13.

¶ 9. A mere intent to commit violence, accompanied by acts preparatory thereto will not sustain conviction for an assault if it goes no further. There must be present ability to carry out the intent, and the act done must be criminal and sufficiently proximate to the deed intended; and it is for the jury, under proper instructions, to determine whether it has proceeded far enough.—People v. Lilley, 43 Mich. 521.

¶ 10. Where an act is done with intent to commit an assault, but the intent is voluntarily abandoned, or is prevented while the distance between the parties is too great to commit an actual assault, there can be no conviction as for an assault.—People v. Lilley, 43 Mich. 521.

§ 3. Unwarranted or excessive force in asserting right.

Civil liability, see post § 1, ¶ 85, § 16.
Civil liability where additional force is attributable to injured person's own acts, see post ¶ 69a.

¶ 11. Ejection of a passenger from a station on his refusal to leave on demand of defendant, a station attendant, is an assault unless there was a violation of some rule known to the passenger or some offense against proper conduct.—People v. McKay, 46 Mich. 439.

¶ 12. In a criminal prosecution for assault and battery alleged to have been committed upon a child by an adoptive parent, it is not necessary to sustain a conviction to show that the punishment inflicted by the parent was such as to cause permanent injury or disfigurement to the child; but it is sufficient to show that the punishment was cruel and unreasonably severe, and such as in its very nature would negative the idea of good faith on the part of the parent.—People v. Green, 155 Mich. 524.

§ 4. Aggravated and specific statutory assaults.

[Note. Various statutory crimes exist in which a technical assault is contained, but which are specially characterized by the intent, manner or circumstances, so as not to be simple assaults. See generally Crimes, II.]

See Statutory Definitions, Comp. L. 1915, §§ 15203, 15205-15209, 15212, 15219, 15228, 15503, 15505, and see generally chaps. 256, 259.

§ 5. Assaults with intent to commit specific felony.

The principal felonious assaults are those with intent to kill or do great bodily harm (see Homicide, IV), to rape (see Rape), to rob (see Robbery in Crimes, II). All these are treated in connection with the crime which is the principal object.

¶ 13. One cannot be held guilty of assault and battery if, when violently attacked, he chastises the offender within the natural limits of the provocation received, even though he uses force beyond the necessity of self defense.—People v. Pearl, 76 Mich. 207.

¶ 14. A railway station-keeper was held criminally liable for assaulting a passenger who did not leave the waiting-room when ordered to do so on account of his spitting on the floor.—People v. McKay, 46 Mich. 439.

¶ 15. Where a person unnecessarily and carelessly or maliciously drives upon grass growing on the unused part of a public highway, the fee of which belongs to respondent's father, respondent, being engaged at the time in harvesting such grass for his father, is not guilty of assault if he uses sufficient force to compel the trespasser to desist.—People v. Foss, 80 Mich. 539.

¶ 16. An assault upon one who had been invited to attend a spiritualistic seance for the purpose of investigating the same cannot be justified upon the ground that he was disturbing a religious meeting, if he was doing nothing not reasonably calculated to carry out the purpose for which he was invited.—People v. Hughes, 116 Mich. 80.

¶ 17. The fact that the law prohibited certain kind of work to be done on Sundays does not justify an assault upon a person who is about to do such work.—People v. Tubbs, 147 Mich. 1.

¶ 18. A respondent in an assault and battery prosecution cannot be held to be a trespasser in going upon the premises of the complaining witness when invited so to do by the wife of said witness.—People v. Upton, 169 Mich. 81.

§ 7. ——Self defense.

Instructions, see post § 11.

In civil cases, see post § 16.

¶ 19. One who commits an act of unlawful force, and thereby brings on a conflict in which he assaults another, cannot excuse the assault by showing that the person assailed was reputed to be violent, and that he acted in self defense.—People v. Miller, 49 Mich. 23.

§ 8. Indictment and trial.

The rules of criminal procedure are not ordinarily peculiar to any one crime. Hence, for the general requisites of indictments or informations, the manner of trial, the presumptions and the competency of evidence, the topic Indictment and Prosecution should be consulted. Such precedents on evidence and instructions and jury questions as seem to be peculiarly applicable in this place follow. See post §§ 9-11.

See generally Indictment and Prosecution, VIII.

Right of aggressor to show other's violence, see also ante ¶ 19.

In civil actions, see post §§ 23-28.

¶ 20. In a trial for assaulting a person who, as it is shown, had on the same day assaulted the defendant's father, and where such person offered as an excuse for his assault that the defendant's father used threatening language about him several years before, the prosecution cannot be allowed to prove such threats.—People v. Pearl, 76 Mich. 207.

¶ 21. In a prosecution for assault and battery the quarrelsome disposition of the complaining witness is as much in issue as that of respondent, and it is error to permit a full cross-examination of the latter on the subject and refuse it as to the former.—People v. Kenyon, 93 Mich. 19.

¶ 22. In a prosecution for an assault and battery which grew out of a visit by the assaulted person to respondent's home to present to him a petition to lay out a drain, such person testified on cross-examination that he presented the same petition to the drain commissioner and that he afterwards filed another. Held, that he cannot be asked further by respondent's counsel whether the commissioner did not refuse to act upon the first petition.—People v. Kenyon, 93 Mich. 19.

¶ 23. On the trial of a person charged with assault and battery in a case where the trouble grew out of the presenting to the defendant for signature a petition by the complaining witness who subsequently filed another petition, it is error to permit the prosecution to show, after proof of this, why the first petition was abandoned and another drawn up and circulated.—People v. Kenyon, 93 Mich. 19.

¶ 24. In a prosecution for assault by shooting, it is not error to refuse to instruct the jury to consider on the question of provocation the alleged fact that the prosecuting witness had boasted of his intention to betray the fiancee of accused, where such matter was known to him a month before the assault, and he and complainant had parted good friends the night before, and the defense was that he thought complainant was about to shoot him.—People v. Townsend, 120 Mich. 661.

¶ 25. In an action for assault and battery, the defendant setting up self-defense, evidence of a previous altercation over the same matter is admissible as bearing upon defendant's belief that an assault was about to be made upon him.—People v. Tillman, 132 Mich. 23.

¶ 26. In a criminal prosecution for assault and battery, a letter written by defendant to the assaulted person two years before is admissible to show the extent of ill-will entertained previously by defendant, where the existence of such ill-will is not disputed on the trial.—People v. Reycraft, 156 Mich. 451.

¶ 27. In a prosecution for assault and battery the evidence indicated that the complaining witness ordered respondent's wife off of certain premises where she had been at the invitation of said witness' wife; and that respondent resented said action, went upon said premises, and used physical violence toward said witness. Respondent was refused permission to introduce evidence showing that said complaining witness had abandoned his home, the premises in question, for the purpose of showing that respondent was not bound to leave said premises at the demand of said witness and was not therefore the aggressor. Held, it was error to exclude such evidence.—People v. Upton, 169 Mich. 31.

§ 10. Sufficiency of evidence.

Different rule in civil action, see post § 29.

¶ 28. Conviction for assault and battery was set aside where the evidence tended to show that the act complained of was the forcible ejection of a tortious intruder by employees of the respondent, who was an agent in charge of the premises.—People v. Adams, 52 Mich. 105.

¶ 29. In a prosecution for assault and battery committed upon an adopted daughter, evidence showing that the defendant removed the girl's clothing and whipped her severely with a small riding whip so that her body was bruised and lacerated, and then left her tied up with nothing but a night robe on for two days, was sufficient to justify a conviction, the only justification claimed being a desire to procure a confession to a petty theft of which she was suspected.—People v. Green, 155 Mich. 524.

See generally Indictment and Prosecution, IX, D. E.

Instruction on self-defense, see also ante ¶ 24.

In civil cases, see post §§ 30-32.

¶ 30. In a prosecution for an assault alleged to have been made upon one of several men who were at the time taking up a drain, it appeared that the work was being done under the direction of the highway commissioner; that respondent, upon his arrival asked by whose authority the work was being done; that the commissioner replied that it was being done by his authority; and thereupon respondent made the demonstration claimed to have amounted to an assault towards said employee, as the supposed instigator of the work. Held, that the court did not err in instructing the jury that the evidence failed to show that said demonstration was made to prevent the taking up of the drain.—People v. Sayers, 105 Mich. 708.

¶ 31. Defendant arrived first at the hospital with a patient injured by a street car. The street car company's surgeon, Dr. Oven, came to take charge of the case, an altercation ensued, and defendant pushed or threw Oven down. On a criminal prosecution for assault and battery, the court on the matter of the defendant's justification, instructed that defendant had no right to begin the assault; that if defendant reasonably and honestly believed himself in danger of personal violence from Oven, he was not liable if he resisted only with reasonable and necessary force; or, if he acted for the protection of the injured man, he was not liable if, after requiring Oven to leave, he applied only reasonable and necessary force in removing him. Held, the charge was not erroneous on the ground that it assumed defendant began the assault.—People v. Reycraft, 156 Mich. 451.

¶ 32. An assault involves every attempt or offer with force and violence to do a corporal hurt to another.—Drew v. Comstock, 57 Mich. 176; Gillespie v. Beecher, 85 Mich. 347.

¶ 33. An assault and battery is committed where a man, without sufficient cause, excuse or justification, intentionally assaults and beats the person of another, inflicting upon him bodily injury.—Newman v. Bowman, How. N. P. 46.

¶ 34. An assault was not proven where the defendant in an action for personal injuries dressed himself in woman's clothes and went to the house of plaintiff, a woman neighbor, between daylight and dark, in a spirit of fun, and where, although plaintiff claimed that she was frightened, it appeared that defendant made no demonstration other than to tap the end of his parasol on the ground or floor.—Nelson v. Crawford, 122 Mich. 466.

¶ 35. One cannot be held guilty of assault and battery if, when violently attacked, he chastises the offender within the natural limits of the provocation received, even though he uses force beyond the necessity of self-defense.—People v. Pearl, 76 Mich. 207.

¶ 36. One who throws a stick at a trespasser intending to inflict an unwarrantable injury upon him, and hits another, is liable to the latter.—Talmage v. Smith, 101 Mich. 370.

¶ 37. Shooting in the dark towards a fleeing person whom the defendant, an officer, had no authority to arrest, is wanton and wilful conduct, though he has no intention of hitting such person.—Johnson v. Mack, 141 Mich. 99.

¶ 38. One participating in a game, called "rush," which is inherently dangerous because it consists in forming a line with each rushing the one in front until the impulse is carried forward to a participant without previous intimation, may be liable as for an assault to a bystander pushed by the play; although defendant did not anticipate the consequence which happened and was himself pushed and made to go forward by others.—Markley v. Whitman, 95 Mich. 236.

¶ 39. One rightfully in possession of property (a railroad track) may lawfully arm himself to intimidate trespassers, and hence the mere possession of a weapon will not, of itself, render him liable to a trespasser (on the property, a person endeavoring to destroy it under color of an ordinance) injured by the accidental discharge thereof.—Shriver v. Bean, 112 Mich. 508.

¶ 40. A charge of ravishment in a civil action for assault and battery does not change the nature of the action, but is only a matter of aggravation bearing on the measure of damages.—Totten v. Totten, 172 Mich. 565.

§ 14. Voluntary fighting.

¶ 41. One who voluntarily engages in a fight for the sake of fighting, and not in self-defense, cannot recover in an action of assault and battery against his adversary unless beaten excessively or unreasonably.—Galbraith v. Fleming, 60 Mich. 403.

¶ 42. Plaintiff cannot recover for assault where it appears that she first attacked defendant, unless it also appears that defendant used more force than was necessary in repelling the attack.—Drinkhorn v. Bubel, 85 Mich. 532.

¶ 43. Where one person starts an affray by assaulting another but there is a cessation of active hostilities upon the intercession of a third person and the aggressor offers to shake hands with his opponent, and, upon the aggressor finally turning around and going away after refusal of the opponent to be friendly, he is hit on the back of the head with a stone by the opponent, the latter is guilty of assault and battery.—Cornell v. Fidler, 194 Mich. 509.

¶ 44. Where one who had leased a shop to another went into the shop to prevent the carrying off, by other parties, of some iron he had sold to his lessee, but the title to which he was to retain until it was paid for, which had not then been done, and such lessee assaulted him at once upon his entering, and he in resistance to this assault struck his assailant a blow, his liability in trespass would depend on whether the force employed by him in resisting the assault upon him was greater than was necessary to his own protection. If the iron in the shop belonged to the defendant he clearly had a right to take possession of it to prevent its being taken away unlawfully; and the arrangement between the parties in reference to the title to the iron had a material bearing upon the damages for which the defendant should be held liable for his assault. as tending in some degree to excuse, if not to justify, him in his endeavor to prevent the iron being taken away. The fact that an officer was present with a writ of replevin for this very iron could not make defendant a trespasser in entering the shop to look after it, nor render him liable to be put out by force unless he should refuse to leave on request.—Ayres v. Birtch, 35 Mich. 501.

¶ 45. Even though the plaintiff in an action for damages for assault and battery committed the first assault, the one first assaulted was not entitled to use more force than was necessary to repel the assault.—Newman v. Bowman, How. N. P. 46.

¶ 46. An assault may be entirely lawful as either excusable or justifiable.—Drew v. Comstock, 57 Mich. 176; Gillespie v. Beecher, 85 Mich. 347.

¶ 47. It is not competent as an excuse for a battery to prove that several days before it was committed plaintiff had used insulting language to defendant's wife, or had threatened the defendant.—Heiser v. Loomis, 47 Mich. 16.

¶ 48. One cannot claim exemption from responsibility by reason of excitement, when his anger is unreasonable and results from a neglect to use ordinary self-control.—Welch v. Ware, 32 Mich. 77.

¶ 49. Advice of counsel as to his client's right to occupy premises cannot give the client any greater right than he has already, and thereby justify an assault committed in assertion of a right of possession.—Taylor v. Adams, 58 Mich. 187.

¶ 50. Force in removing one from his own premises where he is opposing the unauthorized making of a sewer trench is assault and battery, though defendants are policemen; since there is no offense justifying an arrest.—Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 52.

¶ 51. The doctrine of contributory negligence is not involved in a wilful injury.—Labarge v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 134 Mich. 139.

¶ 52. The right to resist an assault includes all necessary and lawful means to make such resistance effectual, even to committing a battery upon the assaulting party.—Gillespie v. Beecher, 85 Mich. 347.

¶ 53. One who is threatened with an immediate attack by another armed with a deadly weapon is authorized to use necessary force to repel his assailant.—Newman v. Bowman, How. N. P. 46.

¶ 54. One assaulted may justly exercise such reasonable force as may be, or as appears to him at the time to be, necessary to protect himself from bodily harm in repelling the assault.—Anders v. Clover, 198 Mich. 763.

¶ 55. The fact that a landowner, repelling an intruding section foreman who tried to lay a track on such owner's land, pushed the foreman, did not necessarily make him an aggressor, and as such deprived of the right of self-defense.—Drew v. Comstock, 57 Mich. 176.

§ 17. ——Defense of other person.

¶ 56. One who, while rightfully on the premises of plaintiff's husband, is interfered with in his work by plaintiff's mother, has a right to rid himself from her annoyance; and if in doing so he exercises reasonable care, plaintiff has no right to assault him in defense of her mother.—Drinkhorn v. Bubel, 85 Mich. 532.

¶ 57. Plaintiff being in arrears for rent the landlord's agent declared the lease forfeited and took possession of the house wherein plaintiff had ceased to dwell. Plaintiff thereafter opened a door and got inside, but was carried out, in spite of his resistance, by the agent with the aid of his son and wife. Held, in an action for assault and battery, that the agent's entry was rightful, and that he could forcibly hold possession.—Marsh v. Bristol, 65 Mich. 378.

¶ 58. Where, after a lease has been surrendered, the lessee denies the lessor's right to peaceable entry and possession, and attempts to expel him by force, he commits an unlawful assault which the lessor is justified in resisting with sufficient force to repel it. —Gillespie v. Beecher, 85 Mich. 347.

¶ 59. Getting into the back kitchen of an occupied house through an open door when no one is in the room, and boarding up the rest of the house on failing to secure an entrance thereto, does not establish such a constructive possession of the entire premises as will justify committing assault and battery upon the occupants if they attempt to remove obstructions.—Soule v. Hough, 45 Mich. 418.

¶ 60. An agent's right to defend his principal's possession of premises pleaded as justifying his alleged assault on one seeking to enter is not affected by what he has said in the latter's absence about the latter's title, so long as he did not speak as agent, and has given no license to occupy the premises.—Taylor v. Adams, 58 Mich. 187.

¶ 61. An attorney has a right to enter the business office of his client's creditor and to make a tender of the amount he conceives to be due, but after refusal of such tender he has no further business there, and if he remains after being told to go the creditor may eject him, using no unnecessary force.—Breitenbach v. Trowbridge, 64 Mich. 393.

¶ 62. A station-master is not guilty of assault and battery in enforcing with no more violence than is necessary, reasonable regulation of company in regard to hack-drivers.—Cole v. Rowen, 88 Mich. 219.

¶ 63. A push given by a landowner to a section foreman undertaking without apparent authority to relay a disused track in part on the land did not give the section foreman the right to resort to force in asserting his right to make the repairs.—Drew v. Comstock, 57 Mich. 176.

¶ 64. One has a right to go upon another's premises and to take away chattels there which belong to himself if he can do so without breaking the peace; and if assaulted while doing so he can recover damages.—Stuyvesant v. Wilcox, 92 Mich. 233.

¶ 65. A city had built a sewer in an alley on plaintiff's land. The statutes and ordinances allowed sewer connections to be made only with consent of the council under supervision of the board of public works. One of the defendants, for the purpose of connecting it with his premises, across the alley, opened a trench in the alley and on the premises of plaintiff, who had forbidden the excavation, and who placed herself in the trench. While quietly there she was removed by two other defendants, who were police officers. The consent of the common council to make the connection had not been obtained. Held, that all the defendants trespassed in removing plaintiff from the trench, and were liable for injuries sustained by her in such removal.—Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 62.

¶ 66. In a suit for assault and battery, defendant is not justified in his attack by the fact that the plaintiff, in passing the defendant, drove out of the highway and trespassed upon defendant's cultivated land.—Ulmer v. Seelman, 159 Mich. 253.

¶ 67. The lack of information as to the authenticity of a proxy cannot be pleaded in a defense of an action of trespass for unlawful eviction of the holder from a stockholder's meeting where no such reason was given at the time of the eviction.—Noller v. Wright, 138 Mich. 416.

¶ 68. The failure of the holder to transfer stock on the books of a corporation in accordance with Comp. L. 1897, § 7052, is not a defense to an action of trespass for being evicted from stockholder's meeting as an intruder where the failure to transfer is due to the defendant's fault.—Noller v. Wright, 138 Mich. 416.

¶ 69. A mistress is not justified in using force to eject a servant whom she has discharged until she has given her reasonable time to collect her belongings and prepare for removal.—Gungrich v. Anderson, 189 Mich. 144.

¶ 69a. The clandestine entry of a claimant upon premises of which another has been given possession by legal process makes him a tortious intruder whom the lawful possessor may expel by force, if need be, and if the intruder is accidentally injured in the process of expulsion, his own contributory negligence should be considered in fixing the responsibility therefor since the force attributable to his own acts is not excessive.—Taylor v. Adams, 58 Mich. 187.

¶ 70. The intent of a person present at an assault as to complicity therein is not determined by his failing to express disapproval or opposition.—Miller v. Sweitzer, 22 Mich. 391; Kuney v. Dutcher, 56 Mich. 308.

¶ 71. An assault committed by an officer under color of process is not chargeable to the person causing it to be issued and served, if the abuse or misbehavior of the officer was not authorized or participated in by the other.—Sutherland v. Ingalls, 63 Mich. 620.

¶ 72. All of defendants in concert in the making of an assault by policemen are liable, as well as those who did the beating.—Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 52.

¶ 73. In a suit in trespass vi et armis there was evidence that defendant stood by and shouted to members of his sect to "kill" the plaintiff and others. The court instructed that if the defendant, while the assault was going on, did employ such language for the purpose of instigating, abetting, and counseling the assault, he was liable. Held, the instruction was proper.—Brink v. Purnell, 162 Mich. 147.

¶ 74. In an action for an assault and battery an averment in one count of an attempt to ravish does not change the nature of the action.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

¶ 75. The simplest kind of a declaration in trespass vi et armis sufficiently pleads an assault by defendant's conductor on a passenger without allegations of the facts that plaintiff had been ejected for nonpayment of fare and his attempt to re-enter in the course of which it was done.—Lindsay v. Wabash Ry. Co., 141 Mich. 204.

¶ 76. Negligence of defendant's conductor in failing to discover that a passenger, struck by the conductor in an altercation over the passenger's attempt to re-enter after being ejected for nonpayment of fare, was mentally disordered must be specially pleaded and cannot be proved under general allegations of trespass vi et armis.—Lindsay v. Wabash Ry. Co., 141 Mich. 204.

¶ 77. A declaration charging three persons with an assault sufficiently charges a joint act.—McDonald v. Hall, 193 Mich. 50.

¶ 78. In trespass for a personal injury all the circumstances of the transaction may be shown under the general issue, to have such effect as they deserve in determining the verdict by mitigation or otherwise.—Sutherland v. Ingalls, 63 Mich. 620.

¶ 79. A plea of the general issue, in an action for damages for assault and battery, puts in issue the fact of an assault and battery having been committed.—Newman v. Bowman, How. N. P. 46.

¶ 80. Evidence that the defendant's horse became frightened at a bunch of hay lying beside the road, and shied towards the plaintiff, is admissible as an affirmative defense under the general issue in an action predicated on the malicious driving of the horse against the plaintiff.—Luckhurst v. Schroeder, 183 Mich. 487.

¶ 81. One who intends to justify his conduct in committing an assault and battery upon another by showing that he was first assailed and that he was subject to great bodily injury and that he, in order to protect himself, had used only force sufficient to repel the aggressor, must, in order to make out that justification, give plaintiff notice of his defense by a notice attached to his plea of general issue.—Newman v Bowman, How. N. P. 46.

¶ 82. In an action sounding for trespass to the person of plaintiff in repelling her attempted entry into premises claimed by her, it is an immaterial variance that she alleged her right to be that of a purchaser under a contract whereas her proof was of a tenancy under lease.—Smith v. Detroit Loan & Building Ass'n, 115 Mich. 340.

§ 22. Presumptions and burden of proof.

¶ 83. Where two persons attack each other the one who makes the first assault, if not justified in the law in making it, has the burden of proving, in his action for the counter assault in resistance to him, that the force employed by the defendant in resisting and defending his person was excessive.—Ayres v. Birtch, 35 Mich. 501.

¶ 84. A plaintiff who sues for an assault and battery, accompanied with ravishment resulting in the birth of a child, need not show that the assault was committed with such force and violence as to constitute the crime of rape.—Schenk v. Dunkelow, 70 Mich. 89.

¶ 85. A section foreman on a railroad undertook to repair a disused track that lay in part upon land of a private owner, who ordered him off, pointed out his own boundary, and gave the intruder a push, and afterwards a blow. There was some question as to whether the blow was not in self-defense, or was not, perhaps, given in the attempt to ward off a counter attack. There was nothing tending to show that the intrusion to relay the track was authorized by the railroad company, or by any officer of the company who could represent it in such a matter. Held, that, as such authority could not be presumed, the trespass was apparently without justification.—Drew v. Comstock, 57 Mich. 176.

Impeachment and credibility of witnesses, see Witnesses, VI.
Matter admissible where indecent or carnal assault is alleged, see post § 25.
As to evidence of intent, malice, justification, threats, or quarrelsomeness, see post §§ 24, 26-28.

¶ 86. All testimony leading up to the assault which tends to explain the relation or the rights of the parties is admissible.—Gillespie v. Beecher, 85 Mich. 347; Pokriefka v. Mackurat, 91 Mich. 399.

¶ 87. Evidence that the defendant, in a case of assault and battery, had voluntarily paid the physician who had attended on the injured party, and had sought an interview with said party himself, was held unimportant, as being matter ex post facto, which could not change the quality of the act.—Johnson v. McKee, 27 Mich. 471.

¶ 88. Defendant in case for assault offered to show how he was dressed, but the testimony was ruled out. Held, that the question was proper enough, but the ruling was not error so long as the record did not show that it was important.—Kuney v. Dutcher, 56 Mich. 308.

¶ 89. In an action for assault and battery, plaintiff cannot show that at the time of the assault the bystanders asked a policeman to arrest defendant, nor are the opinions and comments of the bystanders admissible.—Kuhn v. Freund, 87 Mich. 545.

¶ 90. Where a landlord's agent is sued for an assault committed in maintaining possession of the leased premises, evidence of plaintiff's struggles and poverty, and of his attempts to induce defendant to relieve him from the conditions of his lease and of a mortgage held by him to secure rent in arrears, is irrelevant.—Marsh v. Bristol, 65 Mich. 378.

¶ 91. In an action for assault and battery, it is error to admit on behalf of defendant, the testimony of a doctor that defendant had been in ill-health for a year, due to the death of a son.—Ulmer v. Seelman, 159 Mich. 253.

¶ 92. In action for assault and battery, evidence of violence or of the consequences of violence committed by one who is not a party to the suit is admissible when circumstances tend to show that the person committing it was co-operating with defendant. Whether there was co-operation is a question of fact for the jury, and if they find that there was, it may properly be considered in making up the verdict.—Miller v. Sweitzer, 22 Mich. 391.

¶ 93. Evidence of defendant's good character is not admissible in action for trespass vi et armis.—Pokriefka v. Mackurat, 91 Mich. 399.

¶ 94. On the trial of an action for assault and battery committed by a police officer in removing plaintiff from a place on her own land, because she was there preventing the doing of an act claimed to be authorized by the city, testimony by defendant that he has never been arrested is irrelevant.—Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 52.

§ 24. ——Intent, purpose or malice.

Hearsay as to character of weapons, see Evidence, VII, A.

¶ 95. Where one has committed a personal assault aggravated by a bad purpose, evidence that he left his own house with a proper purpose is not pertinent.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

¶ 96. The question whether defendant, after the assault, did not call plaintiff "a damned police court shyster," is not competent on his cross-examination for the purpose of showing malice at the time of the assault, and, therefore, as having a tendency to prove that he used more force than was necessary in ejecting plaintiff from his office.—Breitenbach v. Trowbridge, 64 Mich. 393.

¶ 97. In an action for assault and battery it is error to exclude evidence offered by the plaintiff to show that the defendant entertained malice and ill-will towards the plaintiff and his brother.—Ulmer v. Seelman, 159 Mich. 253.

§ 25. ——Indecent or carnal assaults.

¶ 98. In an action by a woman for an indecent assault, it is error to exclude plaintiff's testimony that before the act defendant had addressed her in unchaste language and had solicited sexual indulgence, to explain the surrounding circumstances and show the defendant's antecedent manner and state of mind towards the plaintiff.—Mawich v. Elsey, 47 Mich. 10.

¶ 99. Where a woman in disordered health sues defendant for indecently assaulting her it is entirely proper to show that persons so afflicted are subject to hallucinations, even though there has been no showing that she herself is; a good deal of latitude is allowable in drawing out the facts upon the trial of such cases. It is also proper to ask her if she has not made similar charges against others, and if, shortly after the assault alleged, she had not told a friend of a previous one, without mentioning this; and to show the facts if she denies them.—Derwin v. Parsons, 52 Mich. 425.

¶ 100. In a civil action for assault and ravishment of plaintiff it is proper to show the acts, conduct and appearance of plaintiff after the assault and before the birth of a child.—Schenk v. Dunkelow, 70 Mich. 89.

¶ 101. In a civil action for assault and ravishment the jury may take into consideration her fear of defendant and her sense of shame for the purpose of rebutting any unfavorable inferences from her not making outcry at the time and her subsequent silence.—Schenk v. Dunkelow, 70 Mich. 89.

¶ 102. The plaintiff in an action for an assault with intent to ravish showed that the outrage was attempted in an upper room of a certain hotel, and that defendant had told her that he was in the habit of going there with women; that the keeper of the house expected him, and that it would be of no use to make any noise. Held, that the testimony of another witness that defendant had tried to get her to go with him to the same house, and had then told her that he was in the habit of taking girls there, and that all was arranged there, was relevant and admissible as corroborating plaintiff's story, and showing that her danger was real and not feigned.—Fay v. Swan, 44 Mich. 544.

¶ 103. In an action for damages caused by an assault with intent to ravish, the physician was properly allowed to testify that after the assault he found her in a condition for which he could not account until he heard of the attempted outrage, and that he was satisfied that if the fact was true it would account for her state.—Fay v. Swan, 44 Mich. 544.

¶ 104. In action for damages for assault and battery and carnal knowledge, evidence of prompt complaints made by the plaintiff to her husband as to the alleged acts is admissible as tending to show the genuineness of the charge.—Totten v. Totten, 172 Mich. 565.

¶ 105. In civil actions for damages for assault and battery and carnal knowledge failure of the female to complain and continued friendly relations between the parties are admissible to show the falsity of the charge.—Totten v. Totten, 172 Mich. 565.

§ 26. ——Justification or excuse.

Evidence as to malice or purpose, see also ante § 24.
On prosecution for crime, see ante § 9.

¶ 106. A defendant in a civil suit for assault and battery who claims to have acted in self-defense must satisfy the jury that he acted honestly in using force to repel plaintiff's attack, and in determining that question they are to consider the reasonableness of the means made use of.—Kent v. Cole, 84 Mich. 579.

¶ 107. A railway station-keeper assaulted a passenger for not leaving the waiting-room when ordered, the passenger having enraged him by spitting on the floor. Held, that in defending an action for the assault and battery a question as to the plaintiff's smoking was irrelevant, where his smoking had not been objected to.—People v. McKay, 46 Mich. 439.

¶ 108. Evidence in action for trespass vi et armis that plaintiff had been ejected from defendant's cars and persistently tried to re-enter, though he had been put off for nonpayment of fare, that he clung to the hand rails after the train was in motion and was struck by the conductor in an altercation, is competent and may tend to show justification.—Lindsay v. Wabash Ry. Co., 141 Mich. 204.

¶ 109. Assuming that in action of trespass vi et armis for an assault by a conductor on plaintiff it is proper to show his previous condition and appearance as bearing on the reasonableness of the conduct and force applied by the conductor; yet it was error to give evidence of his condition two days later, or, plaintiff having been mentally deranged, to permit a physician to state that a blow on the head would be likely to aggravate his derangement.—Lindsay v. Wabash Ry. Co., 141 Mich. 204.

¶ 110. In an action for assault, evidence of the plaintiff's acts and purposes in a matter which the defendant has pleaded as provocation, and in mitigation of it, is relevant to explain the circumstances.—Welch v. Ware, 32 Mich. 77.

¶ 111. In a suit for assault and battery, plaintiff testified on cross-examination that he had not stated that defendant was cheating a certain person. Defendant then sought to show by witnesses that plaintiff had gone about making such statements. Held, such testimony was inadmissible, as being immaterial and irrelevant.—Mills v. Warner, 167 Mich. 619.

§ 27. ——Quarrelsome character or threats.

See also ante ¶ 47.
As to good character, see Evidence, VII. B, and see also this topic ante ¶¶ 93, 94.

¶ 112. Testimony that a person is quarrelsome is inadmissible for the purpose of showing that he probably began a fight in which he was hurt; it may be given, perhaps, for the purpose of showing that one who knew it feared an assault from him.—Kuney v. Dutcher, 56 Mich. 308.

¶ 113. One sued for assault and battery may show, in order to prove that he believed he was acting in self-defense, the situation at the time of the assault, the quarrelsome disposition of plaintiff as known to himself, and previous attacks upon himself by plaintiff.—Galbraith v. Fleming, 60 Mich. 403.

¶ 114. Plaintiff's quarrelsome character cannot be shown unless brought to defendant's knowledge before the assault; where it is pleaded in justification by way of self-defense, in an action for assault and battery.—Culley v. Walkeen, 80 Mich. 443.

¶ 115. In a suit for assault and battery where the defendant sets up self-defense, it is improper to permit defendant to prove either directly or by cross-examination that on another occasion plaintiff had some words with the defendant over another matter.—Mills v. Warner, 167 Mich. 619.

¶ 116. In an action for assault and battery, it is error to permit defendant under a plea of self-defense to prove by witnesses that plaintiff subsequent to the acts complained of threatened to arrest defendant and put him in the cooler.—Mills v. Warner, 167 Mich. 619.

¶ 117. The court, in a case of assault and battery, having properly excluded evidence of previous threats by the plaintiff, permitted the plaintiff to prove the negative—that at the time in question the plaintiff made no threats. Held to be error, and well calculated to prejudice the defense with the jury.—Heiser v. Loomis, 47 Mich. 16.

¶ 118. Evidence of threats made against plaintiff by defendant three or four years before the assault may be introduced to show defendant's malice in making such assault.—Peterson v. Toner, 80 Mich. 350.

¶ 119. Where the defendant, in an action for assault and battery testified that he knew plaintiff to be a powerful and dangerous man, that he was afraid of him, and that he had previously seen a fight between him and a policeman in which plaintiff was the aggressor, such policeman's testimony as to what occurred was admissible, for the purpose of showing the disposition and strength of plaintiff.—Culley v. Walkeen, 80 Mich. 443.

¶ 120. Where, on the trial of a civil suit for assault and battery, plaintiff testifies that defendant stated when he first assailed him that he would fix him for the money he pulled out of his pocket, it is not error to admit in evidence, as explanatory of the statement, the record of a judgment recovered by plaintiff against defendant, prior to the assault, for alienating his wife's affections.—Scheel v. Reimer, 98 Mich. 126.

§ 28. ——Claim of title or belief in right.

Former adjudication as settling right, see Former Adjudication, VI.

¶ 121. A. was on land, claiming it under contract of purchase. The vendor and his wife attempted forcibly to eject A., who forcibly resisted. In a suit for assault and battery, brought by the vendor's wife, held that it was error to ignore the fact that A claimed title.—Franck v. Wiegert, 56 Mich 472.

¶ 122. In a tenant's action of assault and battery for a forcible eviction, evidence of his struggles and poverty, and of his attempts to get defendant, the landlord's agent, to relieve him from the conditions of his lease and mortgage, are irrelevant.—Marsh v. Bristol, 65 Mich. 378.

¶ 123. A receipt for a permit to make a sewer connection in a part of an alley on plaintiff's land is immaterial in an action for assault and battery on plaintiff by policemen in removing plaintiff from a trench made without her consent or the statutory consent of the city council for such work.—Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 52.

¶ 124. Where policemen are sued for assault and battery in preventing plaintiff from opposing one who was about to make a sewer connection on plaintiff's land for which they had not obtained the necessary consent from the city council, testimony as to the practice of the board of public works in making connections, and as to the payment of assessments, and as to the refunding roll, is immaterial.—Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 52.

¶ 125. In an action for an assault which grew out of plaintiff's attempt to remove from defendant's premises a chattel claimed by both parties, plaintiff may show that the chattel is his.—Stuyvesant v. Wilcox, 92 Mich. 233.

¶ 126. In an action of trespass vi et armis by an alleged stockholder for being ejected from a stockholder's meeting, proof of previous attempts by the corporation to cancel the stock is immaterial, where the evidence shows that subsequently the stock was issued to the plaintiff's assignor by order of a court of chancery.—Noller v. Wright, 138 Mich. 416.

¶ 127. A notice of a stockholder's meeting to the plaintiff's assignor is admissible in trespass for assault on the question of the plaintiff's right to attend the meeting where the secretary testified that in issuing the notice he was governed by the corporation records.—Noller v. Wright, 138 Mich. 416.

¶ 128. In an action of trespass by an alleged stockholder for being ejected from a stockholder's meeting, testimony as to a conversation between the plaintiff and defendant's representative before the plaintiff bought the stock, is inadmissible to show that the stock was worthless; as the value of the stock does not determine the right to vote it or to show the stock invalid, where its validity has been established by a decree in a previous equity proceeding obedient to which decree it was issued.—Noller v. Wright, 138 Mich. 416.

¶ 129. In an action for injuries received from an assault and battery committed while the defendants were attempting to retake cattle impounded by the plaintiff's husband, the defendants could not show facts from which it could be inferred that the cattle were let into the husband's inclosure and were therefore not trespassing when impounded, unless such facts were connected with the husband.—Cox v. Klein, 149 Mich. 162.

¶ 130. Plaintiff assigned a contract for purchase of land to defendants, and defendants raised a crop of potatoes on the land. Plaintiff, after tendering back the money paid him by defendants, attempted to dig the potatoes, and defendants resisted. Held, in an action for assault and battery, that testimony was material and admissible to show whether the assignment was an absolute sale or was given as a security for money advanced by defendants.—Robinson v. Stimer, 154 Mich. 244.

¶ 131. Plaintiff assigned a contract for purchase of land to defendants, and defendants raised a crop of potatoes on the land. Plaintiff, after tendering back the money paid him by defendants, attempted to dig the potatoes, and defendants resisted. Held, in an action for assault and battery, that, assuming the transaction to be a loan, testimony was admissible to show that the use of the land was given as a consideration for the loan.—Robinson v. Stimer, 154 Mich. 244.

¶ 132. Plaintiff assigned a contract for purchase of land to the defendants, a father and son. The defendants raised a crop of potatoes on the land, and plaintiff after tendering back the money paid him by defendants attempted to dig the potatoes when defendants resisted. Held in an action for assault and battery that testimony was admissible to show a tender by the plaintiff to the father of the money advanced to plaintiff by the son, a minor, as bearing upon what the parties knew and understood at the time.—Robinson v. Stimer, 154 Mich. 244.

As to self defense, see also ante ¶ 106.
Proof as to intent to ravish, see also ante ¶ 84.

¶ 133. In an action for damages for assault and battery plaintiff must produce a preponderance of the evidence in support of his claim before he can recover.—Newman v. Bowman, How. N. P. 46.

¶ 134. In a civil action for assault with intent to ravish a preponderance of evidence suffices.—Schenk v. Dunkelow, 70 Mich. 89.

¶ 135. In an action for an assault and battery accompanied by an attempt to ravish, such attempt need not be made out beyond a reasonable doubt, and failure to prove it does not preclude a verdict for such damages as are made out.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

¶ 136. Verdict and judgment for defendant, upon competent evidence tending to show that plaintiff began the affray or was at least a willing participant therein, were not disturbed by the Supreme Court.—White v. Whittal, 113 Mich. 493.

¶ 137. It is incumbent on the one starting an affray to show, in an action by him against his opponent for assault and battery, by a preponderance of evidence that defendant in repelling such assault employed more force than was necessary.—Anders v. Clover, 198 Mich. 763.

¶ 138. In an action of trespass vi et armis for damages caused by truckmen in removing a piano which the wife claims as her own as against the husband, who had given the order for removal, the fact that the husband made the contract of purchase in his own name with the defendant does not irrevocably fix ownership in the husband.—Canton v. Grinnell, 138 Mich. 590.
